INDISCREET.

ASQUITH ANGERED.

Woman Spoiled All His Plans.

Mrs. Keppel Held Responsible for Revealing State Secret.

King's Favorite Made Indiscreet Remark at a Dinner Party.

Forced Reorganization of Cabinet in Full Glare of Publicity.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] How Mrs. George Keppel, the King's favorite, and known as the "most fascinating woman in England," precipitated a British ministerial crisis is all the talk in political circles.

When Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman sent his resignation to King Edward at Biarritz, Friday, April 3, by special messenger, the intention was that it should not be made public until Monday, April 13. This was by arrangement with Herbert Asquith to give him time to quietly complete a plan of Cabinet reconstruction before proceeding to Biarritz to see the King, and also to enable the government to proceed with the business of Parliament in a couple of days before the date already arranged for adjournment over the Easter recess.

This, in view of the immense mass of legislative work before the House of Commons, was of importance to the government.

The King received Bannerman's resignation last Sunday morning and at luncheon that day a remark, let fall it is said by Mrs. Keppel, was seized upon by one of the company, a French diplomat, who immediately telegraphed the French Premier that Bannerman had sent in his resignation. Premier Clemenceau at once communicated the news to the official paper, the T[illegible] which published it Sunday [illegible]

[illegible] that Mrs. Keppel did not say dir[illegible] that Bannerman had resig[illegible]d, [illegible] made some remark about a possible [illegible] ation in the King's holiday arra[illegible]ents, which the keen Frenchm[illegible] scortantly interpreted as indicating [illegible] man's actual or imminent retir[illegible]

W[illegible] the [illegible]ement was published in the [illegible] [illegible]re was nothing for it but [illegible] make a clean breast of the secret, and so the King gave an authorized announcement to a news agency.

Asquith was dumbfounded, and desperately angered when inquiry at his house Sunday evening showed that all his plans had been shattered, and that the Cabinet reconstruction, which was to have been completed secretly and disclosed only when finished, would have to be carried on in the full blaze of publicity, hampered by press and political influences, and that ten days of the Parliamentary session would be lost when every hour is valuable.

It will be impossible, of course, to carry on the House of Commons during the reconstruction, because, if the ministerial party were concentrated at Westminster, the Commons lobbies would be a maelstrom of intrigue and sectional feuds, threatening the stability of Asquith's administration from the very outset of its career.

As it is, the premature disclosure has made his task enormously more difficult and intensified his known dislike of press interference with his schemes, and it accounts for his display of even more than ordinarily brusque rudeness.

LOBBYING BY POKER BARRED.

Oklahoma Legislature Protects Itself from Gambling Schemes of Corporation Representatives.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

GUTHRIE (Okla.) April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] In order to stop a practice which is said to have prevailed during former sessions of the Legislature, by which a lobbyist, in order to get protection, would engage in a poker game with a member of the Legislature, whose influence was desired, and lose to him, the Senate today added an amendment to the Ellis-Durham Lobby Bill from the House making it a felony for any lobbyist to engage in a game of chance with any members of the Legislature during a session.

The bill was passed finally by the Senate. It makes lobbying in secret a misdemeanor and attempting to bribe a member of the Legislature a felony.

GOVERNOR STARTS SOUTH.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 11.—Gov. Gillett's staff left San Francisco at 4 p.m. today to visit San Diego and participate in the reception to the fleet in that city and Los Angeles. The party occupied two special cars with those in excess of what these coaches would accommodate going into other cars of the train. They expect to remain in San Diego until April 18, when they will go to Los Angeles for the reception to the fleet in the latter city.

The present intention is to remain in Los Angeles until April 25, on which date the Governor and his staff will return to San Francisco.

Gov. Gillett is much improved in health. He will leave at 4 p.m. tomorrow for the south.

WOMAN'S SLIP OF TONGUE HAS GRAVE RESULTS.

EARLY MORNING FIRE TAKES COSTLY WARES.

Flames Break Out in the Parmalee-Dohrman Warehouse at Second Street and Central Avenue and Cause Much Loss.

FIRE which broke out at five minutes after 2 o'clock this morning in the warehouse of the Parmalee-Dohrmann Company at Second street and Central avenue did probbaly $50,000 worth of dmage. It may amount to a good deal more.

It started on the west side of the building near two brick double doors. It burned up toward the roof and soon spread to a lot of valuable vases and other such ware packed in excelsior. This fed the flames and made it a very hot fire to fight.

The warehouse is divided into three sections. About everything in the second section was apparently greatly damaged if not destroyed.

The alarm was turned in by Night Watchman MacKenzie, who broke into the building before the department arrived.

C. A. Parmalee, a member of the firm, stated that the goods damaged or destroyed were oriental ware and very valuable. He said they were heavily insured.

At 2:50 o'clock the fire, which had apparently been under control, broke out worse than before and seemed likely to spread, notwithstands the department was making a hard fight against it.

VENEZUELA.

CASTRO USES MORE INSOLENT LANGUAGE.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

CARACAS (Venezuela) April 8, via Willemstadt, April 11.—President Castro returned yesterday from La Victoria, after an absence from the capital of two months.

His arrival is followed today by an editorial in Constitucional, the organ of the President, in which the report on the Venezuelan situation made in 1905 by W. J. Calhoun, special commissioner of the United States to Venezuela, is characterized as unjudicial and petty, and in which the American note submitted by Minister Russell, with regard to the American claims against Venezuela, is called intemperate and aggressive.

WASHINGTON GETS WORD.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, April 11.—President Castro's caustic reply to the complaint filed at Caracas regarding the opening of mail sacks containing mail for the gunboat Tacoma, at the La Guaira postoffice, has reached the State Department.

The La Guaira postoffice received eighty-three sacks of mail, three of which were for the Tacoma. The sacks were all opened. No mail was lost, and it is believed not to have been disturbed in any way. No indication is given at the State Department as to what will be the next step.

THE ADMIRAL.

EVANS GAINS STRENGTH; SPECIALISTS REPORT.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PASO ROBLES, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Drs. Lasher, Edwards and Bryant came here today from Los Angeles and made examination of Admiral Evans, after which they issued the following statement, signed by them:

"After a consultation with Admiral Evans's physicians and examination of the patient, we are of the opinion that Admiral Evans should remain at Paso Robles till such time as his physician thinks he is strong enough to leave. We believe that the treatment which he is now receiving is a proper one and should be continued."

Henry T. Scott came down from San Francisco today and called on the admiral. Mr. Scott is an old friend and the visit did the admiral a lot of good. Gen. and Mrs. Wankowski of Los Angeles also called.

The admiral continues to show steady improvement and to gain strength. He suffered somewhat last night from pain in the left knee, but this is subsiding and the physicians say it was due to the treatment he is undergoing.

NEGROES MAKE THREATS.

Talk of Assassinating Governor of Oklahoma and Burning the State Capital.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DALLAS (Tex.) April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A threatening letter was received today by newspapers in which the writer asserted that Gov. Haskell of Oklahoma and Bud Ledbetter, the Chief of Police of Muskogee, are to be assassinated and the city of Guthrie, capital of the State of Oklahoma, burned by negroes.

The letter is an outgrowth of the Jim Crow law passed by the Legislature and recently put into effect. It has been rigidly enforced by Gov. Haskell and in addition Chief Ledbetter has ordered all negroes not employed to leave Muskogee.

Every gambling-house and saloon in the city has been closed. Detectives are shadowing the negroes and guarding Gov. Haskell.

LEACH ACCEPTS JOB.

MANILA, April 12.—John S. Leach, Public Printer of the Philippines, who, on April 4, was nominated by President Roosevelt as Public Printer to succeed Charles A. Stillings, resigned, has wired his acceptance of the position. He will start for Washington May 1, going probably by way of Siberia and Europe.

FRENCH AEROPLANE MAKES RECORD-BREAKING FLIGHT.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Leon De La Grange captured the aeroplane record this evening on the Issy drill grounds in the presence of representatives of the aero clubs.

The course was a triangular one, with the sides of 350, 270 and 200 meters.

Beginning at a height of two meters he touched ground in the first round and then slightly again in the second. He then increased the height of the aeroplane to four meters and made four complete rounds. He began the fifth round, but suddenly cut off the power, saying:

"I can do no more; I am exhausted. The maneuvering of the equilibrator and helm have been so fatiguing that my arms have given out. I was in the air for 555 seconds, the last 390 seconds without being within touching distance for at least two and a half miles."

THE FLEET.

BATTLESHIPS ARE HEADED NORTHWARD.

Fleet Weighed Anchor at Magdalena Bay at Four O'clock Yesterday Afternoon—Is Scheduled to Arrive at San Diego Tuesday One P. M.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SAN DIEGO, April 11.—The Atlantic fleet of sixteen first-class battleships began today the last leg of its originally-planned cruise from Hampton Roads to the Golden Gate. The four divisions of the fleet weighed anchor at 4 p.m., and three-quarters of an hour later were threading their way out of Magdalena Bay in the wake of the flagship Connecticut.

The commanding figure on the after bridge of the flagship was that of Rear-Admiral Charles M. Thomas, who began the journey to the Pacific as head of the second squadron, but who was promoted to command during the enforced absence of Rear-Admiral Robley D. Evans, the commander-in-chief.

Sailing in single-column formation, according to a dispatch received here, the ships passed Sail Rock, and, rounding Entrada Point, one of the headlands marking the gateway to the harbor, turned in a long circle to the north. The six black-hulled destroyers of the torpedo [illegible] gave a parting salute to the big white vessels, and the historic stay of the American battleships in the Mexican bay was at an end.

An easy journey of 620 miles lies before the fleet, which is scheduled to arrive here and anchor off Coronado beach at 1 p.m. on Tuesday. Admiral Thomas has allowed sixty-nine hours for the run up the coast, requiring an average of only nine knots an hour. The ships started away at the usual cruising speed of ten knots, however, and will slow down during the latter part of the journey. The early hour of departure was fixed to guard against the possibility of delay in a fog.

When the ships reach San Diego they will have logged 13,569 knots since their departure from Hampton Roads on December 16 last. The Connecticut hass 1240 knots additional to her credit on account of the trip to this port last week to bring Admiral Evans ashore, and her subsequent return to Magdalena Bay.

Every coast city from San Diego to San Francisco is to see the fleet during the next four weeks, it having been arranged that at all points where no stop is scheduled, the ships will pass as close to shore as possible, always being well within the range of vision of persons gathered along the bluffs and beaches.

ANNIVERSARY.

GET BACK TO BREAD LINE.

CHICAGO CALIFORNIANS TO HOLD UNIQUE CELEBRATION.

Great Earthquake and Fire Will Be Commemorated on Anniversary of the Disaster and Thirteen Forty-niners in Flannel Shirts Will Be Guests of Honor.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Californians will form a "bread line" in Chicago next Saturday night at a "jinks and banquet," to be given in commemoration of the second anniversary of the San Francisco earthquake and fire.

The bread line, which was a sight never to be forgotten during the days following the great disaster, when the rich and the less fortunate met on common footing glad to receive the provision allowance doled out to them by the authorities, will be reproduced. Conditions that prevailed after the earthquake days will be presented as accurately as possible.

There will be thirteen of the original '49ers—men who braved incredible hardships in their search for gold in the old days. They will be guests of honor. Some of them will wear flannel shirts in memory of that eventful period in the history of the Golden State. Nothing formal will be permitted at the dinner.

It is expected that over 200 former residents of California will meet at the banquet, which will be given under the auspices of the University of California Club.

The invitations, which are unique, are addressed:

"To all Californians who have lived there, wintered there, summered there, or dream of getting back there to live before they die.

"An invitation is extended to join in a commemorative day jinks and banquet to be given under the auspices of the University of California Club of Chicago, Saturday evening, April 18. It is, of course, unnecessary to remind any one that this is the anniversary of the great earthquake and fire of two years ago. Some of us were there and some were not, but we all have occasion to remember it and probably will all be glad to join in a sort of an entertainment calculated to help us forget it."

TRANSFERS CUT OFF.

NEW YORK, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Transfers from car lines controlled by the Third Avenue Railway Company to those operated by the Metropolitan Street Railway Company and vice versa ceased last night. This curtailment of the transfer privilege is a part of Thomas F. Ryan's scheme of Metropolitan car system disintergration. Over 38,000,000 passengers have annually enjoyed their transfer privileges. Their loss is the gain of the traction stock speculators.

THE FAR EAST.

TO CRUISE IN ASIATIC WATERS.

PHILIPPINE FLEET GOING ON ANNUAL VOYAGE.

Third Squadron of Pacific to Leave Manila Soon for an Absence of Three or Four Months—Rockhill Returns from Trip to Chinese Interior.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, April 11.—The Philippine fleet, technically known as the third squadron of the Pacific, under command of Rear-Admiral Hemphill, will leave Manila soon for its annual summer cruise in Asiatic waters.

Admiral Hemphill is entirely independent of direction from the Navy Department respecting his movements on this cruise, but it is the impression here that he will, as usual, make his base at Chefoo in the Yellow Sea. From there it is usual to make practice cruises to various Chinese and Japanese ports, and to carry out a regular system of maneuvers. The cruise generally extends over a period of from three to four months.

While it is asserted with positiveness that no directions or suggestions have gone to Admiral Hemphill respecting the Chinese boycott of Japanese goods developing as the result of the Tatsu Maru seizure and release, it is evident that officials here will feel a satisfaction in having the American flag afloat in Chinese waters.

There is an inclination here to minimize the boycott movement. Reports which have reached here are meager, no mail advices having been received.

Mr. Rockhill, it is reported, has just completed his annual trip up the Yangtse-Kiang River, where he made official calls on the viceroys of New Chwang and Han Kow provinces. Return calls were received by Mr. Rockhill aboard the American cruiser which conveyed him on the 1500-mile river trip.

Cardinal Gibbons Cables Pope Pius That All Difficulties in Miss Elkins's Case Are Overcome.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ROME, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Pope has received a cablegram from Cardinal Gibbons, announcing that all difficulties in regard to the conversion of Miss Katherine Elkins have been overcome. It is learned in official circles that her marriage to the Duke of the Abruzzi is certain.

DINNER AT WHITE HOUSE.

WASHINGTON, April 11.—President and Mrs. Roosevelt entertained a distinguished company at dinner at the White House tonight. The guests included Baron Rosen, the Russian Ambassador; Secretary of the Navy Metcalf, Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Bacon, Representative and Mrs. Longworth Mrs. Whitelaw Reid and Mr. and Mrs. Humphrey Ward.

Secret Police of Paris Keep Sharp Watch on All Anarchists.

Pontiff's Letter to Queen of Portugal Incurs Hatred of Assassins.

Head of Catholic Church Advises Severity Toward Murderers.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The secret police of this city are keeping a sharp watch on all anarchists, because evidence has been found that the reds are planning to assassinate Pope Pius X.

The reason why the head of the Catholic Church, who has hitherto been exempt from anarchist violence, has incurred their hatred is that the contents of a personal letter sent by Pope Pius to Queen Amelie of Portugal immediately after the murder of her husband and oldest son, have become known.

In the letter the Pope told the Queen that it was her duty as Queen and mother to stand at the young King Manuel's side and continually admonish him to use the greatest severity in dealing with anarchists, as leniency would be taken as a sign of weakness, and would surely result in the murder of the King.

Pope Pius is even quoted as having said that only by garroting and beheading all anarchist leaders could the anarchistic evil be stamped out of existence.

The Paris police are in constant communication with the Italian, Spanish and Portuguese police.

LAWLESSNESS.

"RED EMMA" IS COMING WEST.

BREAKS LOOSE AGAIN IN TIRADE AGAINST PRESIDENT.

Denounces Him as "an Ignorant Autocrat" and Predicts "Revolution With Blood" to Be Brought About by Anarchists Through "General Strike of Working Class."

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SALT LAKE (Utah) April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Emma Goldman, "queen of anarchists," lost no time on arrival here to berate everybody connected with law and order, and was particularly virulent toward President Roosevelt.

She discussed with avidity the recent message of the President to Congress relating to anarchy, and scored the author of the message as "an ignorant autocrat." She declared:

"The strength of the anarchists is growing very fast in America. We are especially strong in San Francisco, New York and Chicago. Our ideals must and will be realized. It will take a revolution with blood, but this great question of the rights of the masses cannot be settled with pink teas and kid gloves."

The anarchist leader is here for a series of three lectures. She will go from here to the Coast, lecturing in Los Angeles, San Francisco and other cities.

"We want to educate the masses up to the point where they will know what it means to be their own individual governors," she continued. "The change will come in time. The oppression by the government must and will cease. The change will come through general strike of the working class, and when that time comes the present form of government will be at an end.

PRINCIPLES DEFINED.

"I only hope that blood will not flow so freely as it did during the French Revolution."

She was asked to define the principles of anarchy, and she replied:

"Anarchism is a state of society based on valuable coöperation of the individuals, with individual liberty and with the absence of all statute laws and government.

"The government, not the people, causes acts of violence. Take the history of the world and you will find that in every case the people have arisen against a more or less corrupt government."

The Goldman woman was bitter in her denunciation of President Roosevelt, and her lips curled in an expression of indignation and scorn as she referred to his message to Congress, a few days ago.

"KNOWS NOTHING."

"President Roosevelt knows absolutely nothing that he is talking about when he discusses anarchy," she said, as her eyes flashed defiance and her face showed heated animation. "It would be a good thing if Congress would pass a law compelling the President of the United States to read and study up on a number of subjects before he sends messages to Congress. He should at least read up and study the subject of anarchism before he

POLITICAL.

HUGHES IS INDORSED.

New York Republicans Support Governor.

Delegates Instructed to Urge His Nomination.

Opposition Quickly Squelched by the Leaders.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, April 11.—Gov. Charles E. Hughes was indorsed as New York's Republican candidate for President by that party's State convention held today, and the four delegates-at-large with their alternates, elected to the Chicago National Republican Convention were instructed to use all honorable means to bring about his nomination.

The four delegates-at-large are Gen. Stewart L. Woodford, ex-Mayor Seth Low of this city; Frederick R. Hazzard of Syracuse, and E. H. Butler of Buffalo.

The convention—the thirteenth held to elect delegates-at-large to the national convention—was a repetition in its distinctive features of the Oneida convention of 1880, when Roscoe Conkling sought vainly to have not only the delegates-at-large, but the Congressional delegates also, instructed for Ulysses S. Grant.

Ex-State Senator Edgar Brackett of Saratoga, president of the Hughes State League, started a sharp debate by presenting a minority report from the Committee on Resolutions to amend the resolution indorsing Gov. Hughes, and to instruct the delegates-at-large to work for him and the other delegates to "persistently labor for his nomination until a nomination is made."

Mr. Brackett's action caused the thousand-odd delegates and the hundreds of spectators who filled the galleries, much excitement. When the debate had reached a point of spirited tension, Speaker Wadsworth moved that the question of adopting the majority report of the Committee on Resolutions, containing the indorsement of Gov. Hughes along the lines of the convention indorsement of Levi P. Morton, in 1896, and that of President Roosevelt in 1900, be put to the convention, and this majority report was adopted by a viva voce vote with only a few scattering "noes" heard above the shouts of the bulk of the delegates.

FORESTALL OPPOSITION.

Premonition of a turbulent session was felt before the opening of the convention when the Westchester county delegation at a caucus decided to protest against the indorsement of Hughes by voting against the Hughes resolution, and declaring for an uninstructed delegation. This plan was nullified by the unexpected action of Senator Brackett in submitting his minority report. In meeting this situation, the majority of the convention adopted a platform by a viva voce vote and the Westchester delegation lost all chance of voting as a delegation against Hughes's indorsement.

The new Republican State Committee elected today held a brief session immediately after adjournment of the convention and reëlected former Lieut.-Gov. Timothy L. Woodruff as chairman.

Believing that the platform foreshadowed in several particulars the platform that will be adopted by the Chicago National Convention, more than usual interest attaches to its recommendations, which were confined practically to national issues.

Congressman J. Sloat Fassett, of Elmira, although not a member of the committee on resolutions, said in an interview that he had taken the resolutions to Washington a few days ago and carefully considered them there and that he felt assured that they would be most satisfactory to all the delegates.

The platform indorses in strong terms the administrations of President Roosevelt and Gov. Hughes and commends the policies of the Federal administration.

A revision of the tariff is favored and the action of Congress, in declining to revise the tariff by piecemeal, is indorsed.

Changes are advocated in the currency laws to provide a more elastic and satisfactory monetary system.

PLATT IS ABSENT.

It was not until State Chairman Woodruff announced ex-Gov. B. B. Odell and Herbert Parsons, chairman of the Republican County Committee, as a committee to escort former Lieut.-Gov. M. Linn Bruce to the platform as temporary chairman, that the first real demonstration occurred.

For the first time in a score or more of years Senator Thomas C. Platt, one time leader of the party in State councils, was not in his accustomed seat with the Tioga county delegation. It was said that Senator Platt was ill.u

There was lively applause when Chairman Bruce referred in his speech to President Roosevelt and Gov. Hughes.

The platform as adopted, after indorsing President Roosevelt's administration, says:

"His policies are the Republican policies and to them we pledge our continued loyalty and support.

"We believe in the impartial enforcement of the law and the rights of the individual in commercial, industrial and political affairs. We believe that corporations which take their right to exist from authority of government, should be under the regulation and supervision of the government. But we are unequivocally opposed to government ownership of such corporations.

"We believe in protection to American industries. That principle must be maintained, but we approve of such revision of the tariff schedules as will prevent injustice and inequalities by retaining customs duties which shall at least equal the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad.

"We indorse and approve the policy of Congress in failing to revise the tariff by piecemeal. We recommend a revision that will maintain the policy of the Republican party as opposed to that of the Democratic party, that the tariff should not be for revenue only, but first of all for the protection of American wage earners, manufacturer, producer and farmer in the struggle against foreign capital and labor for commercial and industrial supremacy.

ON THE CURRENCY.

"We favor such changes in the currency and banking laws as will meet the increased demands of business, satisfy the needs of the entire country and present at all times a stable and absolutely secure medium of exchange, and we urge upon Congress prompt action to this end."

The platform favors the upbuilding of the American navy; the speedy completion of the Panama Canal; the development of the American merchant marine; the improvement of the inland waterways; the reënactment of popular government in the Philippine Islands, and commends the movement for the settlement of international differences and also of all disputes between labor and capital by arbitration.

The platform concludes:

"We indorse the administration of Gov. Charles E. Hughes. As chief executive he has set an example of official courage and fidelity.

"Under his administration the business of the State has been so transacted as to merit and receive general commendation. It has been carried on economically and prudently. The public service has been upon a high plane.

"In the settlement of those economic questions in which the State, the individual and the corporations share in their rights and responsibilities, Gov. Hughes has striven to insure to each an exact measure of justice. His policies and his acts have been laid before the people like an open book.

"Relying upon his devotion to the interests of American citizens and trusting in his wisdom, his courage and his statesmanship, we direct the delegates this day chosen to present his name to the Republican National Convention to be held at Chicago, as New York's candidate, and to use all honorable means to bring about his nomination for President of the United States."

INSTRUCTIONS ARE FOR TAFT.

PHOENIX DELEGATES TO VOTE FOR OHIO MAN.

Republicans of Territory's Capital Hold Enthusiastic Convention in Which They Unanimously Indorse Administrations of Roosevelt and Kibbey.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PHOENIX (Ariz.) April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Phoenix today instructed for Taft in the selection of thirty-one delegates to the Territorial Republican convention, which meets at Tucson next Saturday.

Gov. J. H. Kibbey heads the delegation, and will lead the fight in Tucson for instructions. The local convention was the best for years. It was made up of delegates elected under the regular committee call, and was unanimous and enthusiastic in support of Roosevelt, Taft and Gov. Kibbey.

Last Saturday a faction of anti-instructionists, headed by K. C. Adams, used force in an unsuccessful attempt to capture the polling-place in the first Phoenix precinct. In only one other precinct did they even have a ticket, and in that they were defeated, five to one. Yet today they held a rump convention in Phoenix with only about a score of attendants, and chose delegates to the Territorial convention.

Gov. Kibbey flayed this element in a red-hot speech from the regular platform, showing that the work of the so-called anti-instructionists was simply to the end that Roosevelt be discredited and Taft defeated. He termed the actions of the opposition dishonest, disgraceful, venal and indecent, and largely stimulated by the support of mining and railroad corporations to whom of late had been done tardy justice in the way of heavier tax levies.

One of the leaders of the anti-administration forces is C. S. Ainsworth, who headed the joint Statehood party at the last election. An offer of arbitration of the first precinct dispute was refused by the Adams faction.

The report of the board of arbitration sealed the administration First Ward delegation in today's convention, and declared the general charges of fraud to have been utterly without foundation.

ANGRY.

BRYAN MEN ARE AFTER JOHNSON.

SAVAGELY ATTACK MINNESOTA'S GOVERNOR IN CAMPAIGN.

Nebraskan's Publicity Bureau Voices Anger of Managers at Assaults and Issues Letter Calling Rival Candidate "Negative" and Possible Nomination "Unfortunate."

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Angered by the covert and open attacks made on Bryan by the Johnson managers, the Bryan men have retorted with savage attacks upon the Minnesota Governor.

The Bryan publicity bureau in Washington today gave out a letter from a Minnesota man, D. L. Savage of Minneapolis, which says of Gov. Johnson, among other things:

"John A. Johnson is a negative man, and any Democrat could have been elected Governor of Minnesota four years ago because of the bitter fight in the Republican party.

"The Republican party is thoroughly united this year, and will carry the State by 40,000 majority next fall. Johnson cannot carry the State, either for Governor or for President.

"If so unfortunate a thing should happen as the nomination of Johnson at Denver next July, he would not have enough electoral votes to pay for counting. The few men who are trying to boom Johnson are the ones who defeated Bryan eight years ago, and are not even a respectable minority in the Democratic party.

"We are not willing the bolters should rule. Johnson, in aiding and abetting the renegades, is doing himself and the party a great wrong. While Johnson is a nice man, he has not one element of greatness.

"It is the hope of the Republican party to be able to get enough Johnson votes to prevent Bryan's nomination, and the party is expending large sums of money to accomplish this end. It is well for the Democratic party to be vigilant."

WILLING TO BE BEHEADED.

TEHERAN, April 11 — [Exclusive Dispatch.] Anjoumens since yesterday have been gathered in the national assembly to protest against the illegal proceedings of the police in arresting recently the supposed actual authors of the bomb outrage which endangered the life of the Shah.

It seems the police entered the apartments of a female to arrest one of the culprits, thus violating both the fundamental and religious laws.

At the preliminary examinations both of the prisoners refused to answer the questions put to them. They both said they were ready to be beheaded and cut to pieces, but would never give the names of their accomplices, who, whatever happens, will avenge them.

ETHEREAL SPACE WILL BE PROBED.

AEROPLANES TO PENETRATE REGION ABOVE CLOUDS.

Chief of Weather Bureau Says They Will Be Sent from Five to Eight Miles Above Pike's Peak, and Study Conditions Existing Above Storm Belt.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The upper atmosphere, that indefinite ethereal area above the clouds which long has bothered poets and scientists alike, is soon to be penetrated and robbed of the secrets it has hidden for unnumbered centuries.

Prof. Willis Moore, chief of the United States Weather Bureau, said at the Congress Hotel today that the money which would become available shortly for the reopening of the station at Pike's Peak would be used in making that point the scene of new aeroplane weather observations at a height of from five to eight miles above the surface of the earth.

Scientists long have found the subject of the atmosphere above the storm belt a field for debate. Many of them hold that it is a region of calm, where there were frequent changes of temperature and few noticeable atmospheric movements. Prof. Moore believes that the Pike's Peak observations when the aeroplane station is open will show that much goes on up there.

"Not only do I believe that many interesting conditions will be discovered of which we have little knowledge now," said Prof. Moore, "but I think the investigations will lead to much greater accuracy in the weather forecasts throughout the West and Middle West.

"The House already has passed the bill making the appropriation, and I believe the Senate will follow shortly. The recognition of the value of upper-air observations is shown by the appropriation of the House of three times more money than ever before for the station at Mount Weather.

"The Pike's Peak station, however, will enable us to send the planes so much higher than we have at Mount Weather that there will be no comparison as the scientific value of the observations which we will be able to make. In fact, nothing that we have done, I believe, offers greater possibilities than this study of conditions above the storm belt."

WORLD BETTER THAN EVER.

Y.M.C.A. Secretary Sees Evidence of Growing Goodness Among Peoples of the Earth.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Fred B. Smith, international secretary of the Y.M.C.A., and principal speaker in the Jubilee celebration, said today.

"The world is better now than it ever was before. The outward and visible signs used to be an index of righteousness and Christianity. There is now a deeper evidence that men are joining in the labor of promoting the world's good.

"It is possible that men do not go to church as often as they used to. Their secret deeds of benevolence toward the uplift of mankind are better evidence that Christianity and religion have not lost their power among the peoples of the earth."

TENNESSEE BARS STANDARD.

Supreme Court Rules Oil Trust Cannot Do Business There Because of Law Violation.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NASHVILLE (Tenn.) April 11.—By the judgment of the Supreme Court of Tennessee in an opinion delivered today by Justice Neill, the Standard Oil Company is ousted from Tennessee for the acts of this company at Gallatin in restraining trade.

The Standard Oil Company can only engage in interstate commerce, as far as Tennessee is concerned, and the court holds, in affirming the decision of Chancellor J. W. Stout at Gallatin, that in the trial of the case at Gallatin the Standard Oil Company did violate the provisions of section 1 of the acts of 1903, chapter 140, and the punishment imposed in section 2 of that act should be imposed, viz.: That the Standard be denied the right to do business in this State.

The counsel of the company have taken an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

URGES "TEMPERANCE BEER."

CHICAGO, April 11.—"Temperance beer," for the prohibition districts, was suggested last night by Dr. J. E. Siebel, dean of the Chicago Zymotechnic Institute. The suggestion was made in the course of an address before the twenty-five members of the graduating class of the institution. According to Dr. Siebel, a beer has been produced that contains no alcohol.

COUNTESS AND PRINCE DEPART.

Take Different Ships for Different Ports.

Both Declare They Have not Been Married.

But De Sagan Avers "an Understanding" Exists.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] On separate ships—one bound for Naples, the other for Paris—Mme. Anna Gould and Prince Helie de Sagan, her suitor, sailed away today.

Before sailing, each declared they had not been married, but the latter let it be understood that there is an "understanding." The former Countess insisted no engagement existed.

The Prince had an ordinary stateroom aboard the American liner St. Paul, while the former Countess had the captain's suite of six rooms on the Frederick der Grosse of the North German Lloyd, with the captain's bridge for the three little Castellane children to use as a playground, and a junior officer, two quartermasters and a detail of stewards to serve as special guard.

That Mme. Anna Gould was driven out of the United States by anonymous letters that threatened her with death and by the bitter attitude of her family, was the statement made this evening by Edward A. Jones, personal counsel of the heiress. He denied that she had gone to Europe for a hasty marriage with Prince Helie de Sagan.

"Mme. Gould came to the United States," Mr. Jones said, "looking for the sympathy of her relatives. She was in trouble, and she wanted advice and aid. But she was met with a chilly reception that helped to break her down. She was left without a friend among her relatives, and she goes back to a foreign land to find friends that she is denied in the land of her birth.

"Mme. Gould had received so many threatening and obnoxious letters that she could not remain longer in the United States. This, added to the opposition of her family, broke her down, so that she was practically driven out of the country.

"The whole trouble seems to have come about by the attempt to transplant a Parisian courtship to a New York setting. It was impossible. The people did not understand it, nor did the family of Mme. Gould. I can say this, that there is no engagement at this time. They may marry later, in a few months, but now everything is upset."

The Prince was his own spokesman when found promenading the deck of the St. Paul.

"Mme. Gould and I have an understanding," he said, when asked as to whether an engagement existed, "but we are not married." He said this unwillingly, and only when impressed with the fact that to allow a rumor to go uncontradicted that he and Mme. Gould had been secretly married would detract from their dignity.

THIS REPORT SAYS THEY ARE ALREADY MARRIED.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The following wireless message received at 10 o'clock tonight from the correspondent of a local paper aboard the St. Paul indicates that Mme. Gould and the Prince Helie de Sagan were secretly married in Jersey City. Your correspondent, however, is unable to confirm it:

"Via South Wellfleet, Mass., steamship St. Paul, via Siasconset, Mass., April 11.—De Sagan is traveling as E. D. Hodges. It is reported that he was married in Jersey City eight hours before Mme. Anna Gould left on the Friedrich Der Grosse.

"The Prince wired to Tyler Morse regarding Mme. Gould's departure. He has suite No. 22. His conversation at dinner was with a few passengers who had dressed in his honor. He, however, dined in a gray business suit.

"The Prince looked pleased and happy. He says he dislikes the New York papers. He talked freely with passengers."

WILL MEET AT ROSWELL.

Democrats of New Mexico to Hold Convention in That City June 10.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SANTA FE (N. M.) April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Democratic Territorial Central Committee met here today for the purpose of fixing the date and place of holding the Territorial convention to select delegates to the national convention at Denver. Roswell landed the convention, which will be held June 10. Six delegates to the Denver convention will be chosen at that time, and the candidate for delegate to Congress nominated.

This means the Democrats will have five months in which to carry on the Territorial campaign, which will be the longest on record for that party in New Mexico.

The committee indorsed Bryan for President, which practically means an instructed delegation for him from the Territory to the Denver convention.

MANY RUMORS ABOUT ERIE.

But Harriman Is Well Satisfied and Has no Fear That Receivership Is Inevitable.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] There are several conflicting reports afloat concerning the present status of the Erie matter. For instance, there is a statement, which claims more or less authority, to the effect that E. H. Harriman simply headed a syndicate when he made his offer to redeem the old notes in cash. There is the very highest authority for saying that the expense of Mr. Harriman's offer is in every respect borne by him personally.

There is another idea in Wall street that the present financing merely postponed for a few months an inevitable receivership for the Erie. Mr. Harriman has stated to his friends within twenty-four hours that the Erie is all right, and that it is in excellent physical condition. He has no fear that a receivership is inevitable.

TELLS OF TRIP OF ADVENTURE.

[illegible] of Torpedo Destroyers Delighted.

[illegible] With Voyage of His Record Flotilla.

[illegible] Promoted Since He Left Atlantic.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

MAGDALENA BAY, April 8, via San Diego, April 11.—The torpedo flotilla of six destroyers, commanded by Lieutenant-Commander Hutch I. Cone, [illegible] in Magdalena Bay from Acapulco Sunday evening at 8 o'clock. The flotilla, following the example of the fleet, was one day ahead of its [illegible]. It required three days [illegible] the run from Acapulco, at [illegible] speed of fifteen knots.

[illegible] appeared in the entrance to the bay shortly after 7 [illegible] a dense cloud of black [illegible]. In the gathering darkness, [illegible] black hulls were not visible where the fleet lay at anchor, [illegible] as they came on into the [illegible] directly for the fleet at [illegible] speed, their identity was soon [illegible].

[illegible] two bright signal lights [illegible] of each battleship heralded the approach of men-of-[illegible].

[illegible] o'clock they were at anchor, [illegible] here and there under the lee of [illegible] battleships.

[illegible] Cone went aboard the [illegible] Minnesota at once to make [illegible] to Admiral Thomas. Tall [illegible], and bronzed with the heat [illegible] tropical suns, he looked fully [illegible] of the daring destroyer fighter. Admiral Thomas greeted him in [illegible].

CONGRATULATIONS.

"[illegible] man, why are you not in uniform?" was one of the questions the admiral propounded, as he [illegible] good-naturedly the tall officer. The latter stood, cap in hand. [illegible] dressed in the service uniform of a lieutenant. He had been promoted to the rank of lieutenant-commander since leaving Hampton Roads, "[illegible] had a chance to put on [illegible] stripes, admiral," he said, in [illegible].

"I congratulate you upon your promotion," concluded the admiral, as he [illegible] the officer's hand, and shook [illegible].

[illegible] Cone then began the recital of some of the features of [illegible]. The destroyers had had [illegible] of the battleships since [illegible] leaving Punta Arenas, [illegible] separated, the destroyers [illegible] course through the [illegible] channels, the battleships [illegible] out to sea. The trip of [illegible] through the Patagonian [illegible] was filled with adventure.

"[illegible] for days through the [illegible], a thousand miles," [illegible] Commander Cone, "the [illegible] barely wide enough to [illegible]. The waters were cold [illegible] floating glaciers and filled [illegible] cakes of ice. The boats [illegible] the ice we needed for days [illegible] the side.

ESCAPE MISHAPS.

"[illegible] precipitous cliffs of the snow-[illegible] mountains rose beside us to [illegible] of thousands of feet, seeming [illegible] to almost close over us. [illegible] found our way through these [illegible] other destroyers following [illegible] of the Whipple as we came [illegible] single column.

"[illegible] as a pilot a lieutenant-commander of the Chilean navy. He [illegible] through the narrow defiles [illegible] perilous places without the [illegible] mishap. Frequently, at [illegible] would come to anchorage on [illegible] shelf of rock, where there [illegible] barely room enough for all [illegible] to crowd together on it. This [illegible] be but a slender ledge, [illegible] of which the bottom dropped [illegible] of fathoms, beyond all [illegible] anchorage.

"[illegible] went ashore in various places [illegible] mingled with the natives. Although the weather seemed cool to us, [illegible] of the natives was scant. Sometimes they wore nothing [illegible]. Now and then we had good [illegible] on shore, where hundreds of [illegible] collected. We finally shot [illegible] of our ammunition, but until [illegible] happened, we had all of the fresh [illegible] we required."

[illegible] untoward incident marred [illegible] trip of the destroyers from [illegible] Roads. Their supply ship, [illegible], or "Mother of the Destroyers," as she is called, was not [illegible] keep the fast pace set by the [illegible] craft, and time and again [illegible] back.

IN NEED OF COAL.

[illegible] destroyers are built to make a [illegible] of 28 knots, and easily go from [illegible]. They carry only about 160 [illegible] coal each, and require frequent [illegible] from the colliers.

"[illegible] some coal," was one of the [illegible] Commander Cone said to [illegible] Thomas. "We just did get in [illegible] we took from the Arethusa [illegible]. Three of 'em, including [illegible], have less than four tons [illegible] bunkers tonight."

[illegible] the following morning [illegible] they had even a smaller supply [illegible] that. Less than two tons [illegible] what three of them reported. [illegible] arrangements were completed by the flagship for providing [illegible] following day.

[illegible] two colliers were working, [illegible] destroyer moored on either [illegible], pouring coal into the [illegible] of the little craft.

"[illegible] been scraping the bottom of [illegible] all the way around, I believe," [illegible] Commander Cone after he had finished the disagreeable task of taking [illegible] tons of coal out of the deep [illegible] of the big ships. "The battleships [illegible] all the coal that was easy [illegible] and we have been scraping out [illegible]."

[illegible] colliers have departed from [illegible] ship having her bunkers [illegible] fullest capacity. The Ajax [illegible] Thursday night and will [illegible] the destroyers to supply [illegible] as needed. In addition to supplying ammunition, the battleships contributed from their bakeries a supply of bread each day for the crews of the destroyers. The destroyers carry crews of about 80 men each. The boats have no facilities for storing fresh food and on the cruise have relied upon sea stores, excepting when others have been obtained from the battleships.

The destroyers had some torpedo practice at Callao, where Commander Cone remarked, "we got three bulls-eyes." This meant that the torpedoes which had been fired, had three times pierced the center of the targets at which they were aimed.

The crews of the little boats are looking forward to the practice at Magdalena with keen anticipation.

SAILORS WELCOME ORANGES.

Every Man of Fleet, from Admiral to Ordinary Seaman, Gets Share of Los Angeles Gift.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

MAGDALENA BAY, April 8, via San Diego, April 11.—The carload of oranges of 275 cases shipped by the California Fruit Growers' Exchange, through the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, complimentary to the officers and men of the Pacific fleet, arrived at Magdalena on the converted cruiser Buffalo from San Diego at 8 o'clock this morning.

Admiral Thomas addressed a letter to the Chamber of Commerce transmitting the thanks of the fleet for the present.

The fruit arrived in excellent condition and was greatly welcomed. By orders of Admiral Thomas, twenty-two cases were given to each battleship and two cases each to the auxiliaries, torpedo boats and tugs.

On board the ships the oranges were distributed to every mess, so that every man aboard from Admiral to ordinary sailor, received a share.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

BELLINGHAM, April 11.—A telegram signed by Mayor De Mattos and President Donovan of the Chamber of Commerce was dispatched today to the Washington delegation in Congress and the Secretary of the Navy asking that the whole battleship fleet be dispatched to Bellingham instead of eight vessels as at present planned.

The telegram points out that the people of British Columbia can see the fleet here and the attention of the Secretary is directed to the fact that there is no other harbor on the North Pacific Coast that can give proper anchorage to the entire fleet.

PLANS BIG WHEAT CROP.

Six Million Acres to Be Seeded in the Three Western Provinces of Canada.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

OTTAWA, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Reports from various points in the three provinces of Western Canada tell the story of great activity in preparations for seeding. The wheat crop outlook in these prairie provinces is excellent, although spring is late. There is a general determination to break all records during the coming harvest time.

The chief interest in the question of crops is directed toward the production of wheat, because that cereal is an export commodity. Practically all last year's crop of wheat has been marketed, the amount now being held by farmers being estimated at less than 5,000,000 bushels. At this time last year nearly 15,000,000 bushels remained in farmers' hands.

It is expected the total area for wheat in the three provinces this year will be close to 6,000,000 acres. The wheat area in Ontario and other provinces of the Dominion will be considerably enlarged.

JURY BREAKS WILL.

HEIRS TO DIVIDE ESTATE.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, April 11.—The contest of the will of Patrick Riordan, the ex-Santa Clara cattleman, was finished yesterday in Judge Coffey's court, the jury returning a verdict breaking the will and denying its admission to probate.

Riordan, who died in July, 1907, leaving an estate worth about $23,000, cut off each of his nine children with $1 each. The remainder of his property he divided between Dr. James D. Fitzgerald, his nephew, with whom he had lived in San Francisco for many years, and James R. Fitzgerald, the 13-year-old son of Dr. Fitzgerald.

The will was contested by the nine children, on the ground that their father was insane and undue influence had been exercised by Dr. Fitzgerald.

DIVORCE GRANTED.

After Four Months of Courtship and Two Years of Repentance Wife Receives Decree.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

TACOMA, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] After two years of doubt as to whether she was really Mrs. J. L. Steiner or not, Judge L. Clifford has officially announced that she is no longer the wife of Steiner. Steiner made no effort to defend himself in divorce proceedings.

The marriage two years ago was the culmination of a four months' courtship, and the prelude to a very unhappy married life.

"He often treated me very cruelly," said Mrs. Steiner in court, "and would sometimes leave me for a week at a time, saying that he never wanted to see me again. He carried a revolver, and threatened my life several times."

Then the pretty young wife went on to tell of the other woman in the case. It was Kitty Ruhe of Los Angeles, she said. She said that her husband had sent several telegrams to this woman, and had received several from her. She testified that two telegrams had been sent by her husband to "Mrs. Catherine Steiner" at Los Angeles. Steiner finally deserted his wife last fall, according to Mrs. Steiner. She said she had heard of his being in Portland with another woman several times, but had been unable to learn whether he was married to her or not.

INDICATES BUSINESS REVIVAL.

Orders for Railway Equipment, Including Big Work for St. Paul, Show Improved Feeling.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.[Orders for new railway equipment seem to be increasing in number and are taken as evidence of business revival.

The St. Paul road has issued orders for the construction of 2500 freight cars in its own shops in Milwaukee.

Some of these cars doubtless will be used on the road's extensions to the Pacific Coast and further orders are probable as the road must increase its equipment considerably in order to take care of additional traffic from its new lines. It has placed orders for 10,000 tons of car axles and iron to be used in the construction of its cars.

A number of other orders have been placed recently and an improved feeling has been created thereby.

FEMALE VICES.

WEAK SISTERS ARE TIPPLERS.

Church Society Finds That Many Imbibe.

Habit Growing in Highest and Lowest Classes.

Middle Classes Addicted to Drug-Taking.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Is the habit of drinking and drug taking increasing among women? This is one of the subjects for discussion at the Pan-Anglican Congress to be held in London in June, when bishops and representatives from all churches of the Anglican communion throughout the world are to assemble. Evidence as to the alleged increase of female inebriety has been collected by the Women's Union of the Church of England Temperance Society, who sought for the valuable testimony and experience of the medical profession upon this important question. A summary of the evidence of a large number of medical men is to the effect that:

Fifteen write that among the middle class, nurses, school teachers, wives of professional men and many others there is a decrease.

Eighty-eight doctors in fashionable practice speak of the increase among the leisure and wealthy classes.

Ninety-three doctors, working among the poor, speak of the marked increase among working women.

The opinion is expressed that among educated women nurses, school teachers and wives of professional men—a much larger proportion are abstainers than formerly. Many others are almost total abstainers. But among these the habit of self-medication—of constant resort to widely advertised remedies, many of which contain alcohol—has, in some cases, insidiously led to a taste for alcohol.

The growing custom of taking tabloids, pilules, etc., often containing powerful poisons, is apt to develop the drug habit. The frequent taking of remedies and especially of those made up according to prescriptions not recently given, is severely condemned as a source of great danger to health.

Among the causes of the danger are placed the facilities of purchase, the habit of lunching at restaurants and confectioners, and the licenses granted to grocers and chemists. These licenses are severely condemned.

PROLIFIC.

SEVENTH PIECE ALMOST DONE.

ANOTHER OPERA OF WAGNER'S NEARING COMPLETION.

New Drama Treats of Theodoric the Great Under the Name of Dietrich of Berne—Rumor Says It Will Be Produced Under Emperor William's Auspices.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERLIN, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Musically, Siegfried Wagner may be compared to a lofty cascade which, swollen by spring rains, roars unceasingly.

The comparison will not please the most prolific of modern opera composers any more than it would to call him a sweet, sounding brook that babbles on forever. The fact remains that Wagner has almost finished his seventh "music drama."

To his mother, Frau Cosima Wagner, Siegfried is not only the heir to a great name but is himself great. She believes in him. Her most earnest wish now is to live to see him famous. And her desire may be gratified, for rumor grows that Emperor William has become interested in Siegfried, and that his newest work will be produced under the Emperor's eye and with his patronage at the Royal Operahouse here.

In the opera, the composer leaves the realms of fairy tale, where he has drawn his inspiration, and joins his father in the domains of mythology. The new opera's hero is Dietrich of Berne, who is none other than Theodoric the Great, teutonized.

Wagner has interwoven in a symmetrical web some of the legends that perpetuate the name of the masterful Gothic King. If the opera is produced here it will be on the grandest scale.

CRUISER LAUNCHED AT KIEL.

Latest Addition to German Navy Carries Powerful Guns With Newly-Invented Attachments.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

KIEL, April 11.—The armored cruiser Bluecher was launched today at the imperial navy yard in the presence of Prince Henry of Prussia and many high officials of the admiralty.

Countess Bluecher christened the vessel.

This latest addition to the armored cruisers of the German navy is built entirely of steel, with a displacement of 15,000 tons.

The estimated cost of the construction totals $6,195,000. Her complement will total 790 officers and men, and her speed is 25 knots an hour.

She is to carry ten 11-inch guns, forty-six feet in length, throwing a 750-pound missile, besides several transformed 3½-inch quick-firers, discharging a 26-pound shell for defense against torpedo attacks. These smaller weapons are to be fitted with an automatic loading and ejecting attachment, just invented at the Krupp works, by means of which the rate of firing, hitherto about ten shots per minute, is increased to nearly forty shots per minute. In case the attachment gets out of order the gun itself is not affected and it can still be fired at the former rate of ten shots per minute.

ASSETS ARE ONE DOLLAR.

Husband of "John Strange Winter" Noted Authoress, Says That Is Total of His Wealth.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Arthur Stannard, husband of the well-known authoress, "John Strange Winter," consented at the bankruptcy court before E. S. Grey, official receiver, to an order of adjudication.

He returned his liabilities at $855, and his assets at $1.

He attributed his failure to the illness of himself and his wife.

HER HOBBY IS SKATING.

To Gratify Her Love for the Sport, English Gentlewoman Runs Rink.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Duchess of Bedford has an extraordinary hobby. She is proprietress of the Princes skating rink at Knightsbridge.

Some years ago she bought out the other owners, and has since run the place (at a loss, it is said,) for her own amusement. She is an ardent skater and hardly a day passes in the winter season that she is not seen on the artificial ice at Prince's.

COLOSSAL.

CONCLAVE PALACE NEARLY DONE.

HOME FOR CARDINALS WHILE IN ROME ALMOST FINISHED.

Is Immense Edifice of Five Floors, Each Being Lighted and Ventilated by Twenty-five Front Windows. Great Ceremony Being Planned for Opening.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ROME, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The new palace of the conclave is nearly finished. It has been built close to the Vatican palace in the rear, and is a huge building of five floors, each floor obtaining light and air through twenty-five front windows. There are 200 rooms in the palace, besides seventy little apartments which are intended for the use for the cardinals when the conclave for the election of a new Pope is held.

Pius X is much concerned about his succession, which he is of opinion will happen before long. He has made his will, leaving all the property of the church in his hands to his successor. Not a cent will go to his relations excepting a small allowance for his sisters.

The will of the Pope is now in the hands of Cardinal Oreglia, the camerlengod and dean of the sacred college, who had in trust a similar document from Leo XIII.

Pius X is to hold a great ceremony when the palace is opened. He will bless each of the apartments, and it is more than probable that most of the cardinals will be present.

A marble tablet, mentioning that the palace was erected under Pius X's reign and the date of its dedication will be placed above the front entrance.

W. K. VANDERBILT'S COLT APT TO CAPTURE DERBY.

Good Judges Aver That Seasick II, Which He Bought of Gaston Dreyfus, the French Horseman, Stands Splendid Chance in Coming Classic Event.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] W. K. Vanderbilt is conceded to have an excellent chance of emulating Richard Croker, W. C. Whitney and Pierre Lorillard, and adding his name to the list of Americans who have won the English Derby.

Mr. Vanderbilt's colt, Seasick II, is now second favorite in the betting lists, and good judges say he has a splendid chance to win the classic race.

Mr. Vanderbilt did not know until a few months ago that his colt was a Derby candidate. Candidates for the race are sometimes nominated before being foaled. Mr. Vanderbilt bought Seasick II as a yearling from Gaston Dreyfus, the French horseman. The price was $3000. Little attention was paid to the yearling at first, and, in fact, no inquiry was made about his future engagements. He ran in four events in France last year, winning twice.

It was not until the end of last season that his improvement was so marked that Mr. Vanderbilt's attention was attracted to him. Then it was discovered that the colt was eligible for the Derby.

International Conference Planned to Correct Errors in Grammar and Orthography of Yiddish.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Yiddish, the jargon spoken by thousands of Jews all the world over, has one disadvantage—it has no grammar.

But a conference of international character planned for the summer has in view the remedying of this defect, and the placing of Yiddish language on a more elevated plane.

It will devote much of its labors to the working out of definite grammatical rules, and to the improvement of the orthography of the language.

Furthermore, she carries only twenty-five passengers as compared to 730 passengers on board the British steamer Empress of India, which cleared from this port for Vancouver.

WOMEN ARE RESPONSIBLE.

Present Russian Troubles Due to Them.

So Says Male Refugee Now in London.

Sacrifices of Noble Female Patriot for Freedom.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "The women of Russia are responsible for the reign of terror which is now in progress. Through the efforts of Russian women, many of them of the nobility, the hordes of the East have learned the value of the bomb and rifle."

This is the statement of M. Jaakoff Prelooker, a Russian who has been driven from his country. His accounts of the tortures and the heroism of the Russian women are stirring Europe.

As the greatest of the revolutionary leaders, he points to Mme. Katheryn Brischkovsky, who is fondly called the "Grandmother of the Revolution." As a daughter of the nobility, she taught peasants to read. Then she taught them what a vote would mean, and gained the hatred of the government. She was branded as a dangerous agitator, and warned to desist. Her husband refused to share her sufferings for the cause. She was beautiful then, and only 26, but she sacrificed all. She sold her jewels, left her husband, and donned the peasant garb.

In order to elude the police, she used acid to mar her beauty. She scarred her face and hands with it, and became so ugly that her former acquaintances could not recognize her. She went back to the villages, and preached revolution secretly for three years. Then the police caught her. She was subjected to all the cruelties of despotism, including the tortures of the Black Hole, and finally sentenced to Siberia.

There are scores more, he says, who are in prison and out of it, all heroines, and willing to die for a free Russion—for liberty and justice.

LONDON SOCIETY HAS NEW FAD.

IS NOW HAVING ITS PROFILES MODELED.

Lady Colebrook, Who Is Doing the Work, Says She Intends to Make Fortunes for Her Two Daughters by It—Charges Only $2000 Per Head.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The newest fad of the most fashionable women is to have their profiles modeled by Lady Colebrooke, one of the Paget family.

Lord Colebrooke is among King Edward's close friends. His wife's entertainments for royalty were the sensation of the season here two years ago.

Now Lady Colebrooke has abandoned London and taken a studio in Paris, where, she says determinedly, she intends to earn enough money to provide fortunes for her two daughters—Mary Sidney Colebrooke, 18 years old, and Bridget Colebrooke, 16 years old. The title and family name are identical.

Among those who have sat to Lady Colebrooke are Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., who was Miss Virginia Fair, and Mme. Anna Gould.

Lady Colebrooke charges $2000 for modeling a head.

Beautiful Spanish Dancer Shocks Madrid Society and Brings Down Wrath Upon Her Head.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

MADRID, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Merry little Pepita Sevilla, the beautiful Spanish dancer and singer—mischievous little Pepita, with her raven hair and sparkling Andalusian eyes—has been turned out of the church.

She was born in Seville some twenty summers ago. In her native city she is adored, and her path in life was strewn with roses. But weary of Seville, Pepita sighed for other worlds to conquer, and came to Madrid. Here she came into conflict with the authorities over the scantiness of her stage attire.

Pepita, on whom the archbishop's excommunication sits very lightly, and whose dancing of the national and other dances is a dream of grace and a delight, is going to Paris.

Miss Eva Winans Excites Favorable Comment from Critics in London on Her Painting.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Walter Winan's daughter, Eva, is exceedingly gifted, and has developed a wonderful talent for painting.

She is only 17, but her exhibit of violets and terracotta jar at the Speaker's house at the exhibition of the Royal Amateur Society this week has excited a good deal of comment.

Alfred East paid a high compliment to the work when judging the exhibits, regretting that the flower group was not in for competition. Miss Winans has a serious turn of mind, and cares nothing for the pleasures of society.

Commander-in-Chief of Irish Forces Prohibits Their Use by His Men During Certain Hours.

LONDON, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Lieut.-Gen. GRAND DUCHESS CYRIL TO BE DIVORCED AGAIN.

Grand Duke and Duchess Cyril.

She was the Princess Victoria Melita, eldest daughter of the Duke of Edinburgh. She is a niece of King Edward.

LONDON, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] That Grand Duke Cyril of Russia and his wife are to be divorced is being whispered again by fashionables in the King's set. Grand Duchess Cyril is King Edward's niece. She was Princess Victoria Melita, eldest daughter of the Duke of Edinburgh, who became Duke of Saxe-Coburg. So the renewed report that she will be divorced deeply interests the English court.

Matrimonially, she seems doomed to unhappiness. Her first husband was the present Grand Duke of Hesse, her first cousin, and brother of the Czarina. He divorced her, nominally because of their incompatibility, really because she had fallen in love with Grand Duke Cyril, elder son of Grand Duke Vladimir of Russia. Grand Duchess Cyril is a headstrong, domineering woman, who tries to rule Cyril with a rod of iron, and becomes furiously jealous of him on the slightest provocation.

French Public Turns Against Labor Because of Rabid Leadership of Demagogues.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] M. Clemenceau, who has had remarkably good fortune in settling French labor disputes, finds himself confronted with a more formidable problem than any other of the kind which has faced him in official life.

There are few indications that the conflict in the building industry can be brought to an end without having entered a more serious phase. It is unfortunate for the workmen that the Socialists have been able to get so much prominence in the meetings of the various labor unions since the building syndicate declared the lockout, as the fire-eating Socialist demagogues are driving the average French citizen into the camp of the foes of labor.

Pennsylvania Railroad's Report Shows Vast Sum Spent for Employes.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Eighteen million dollars has been distributed among employés of the Pennsylvania Railroad out of the coffers of the relief fund in the past twenty-two years.

This information was given today to the 95,000 members of the association, which has just celebrated its twenty-second birthday anniversary.

During the period of its existence there have been distributed benefits amounting to $10,316,096.50 in 715,759 cases of disablement. Death benefits amounting to $7,117,962.91 have been paid to the families of 12,365 deceased members.

Officers of the association report that the amounts paid for disablement and for death due to accident were less than one-half those due to sickness.

PENNSYLVANIA PRIMARIES.

KNOX CARRIES HIS OWN STATE.

NO CONTEST OFFERED PENNSYLVANIA'S FAVORITE SON.

Doubtful Whether Democratic Delegates Will Be Instructed for Bryan—National Committeeman Guffey Says They Will Not Be. Fight on Penrose.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

PHILADELPHIA, April 11.—The primary elections of all political parties in Pennsylvania were held throughout the State today.

Each party elected delegates to its national and State conventions, and nominated candidates for Congress and the Legislature. In addition, all of the sixty-seven counties and nearly all the municipalities in the commonwealth named candidates for minor offices.

The last Republican convention having indorsed Philander C. Knox for the Presidential nomination, there were no contests in that convention over the Presidential preference, but there were numerous sharp skirmishes over the individuals who will make up Pennsylvania's delegation to Chicago.

There was a fight in many sections of the State in the Democratic party over whether the delegation to the Denver convention shall be instructed for Bryan or shall go uninstructed. The returns tonight are late and scattered, and give no indication of what the State convention may do.

The hottest fight of the day was over the candidates for both houses of the Legislature.

The next Legislature will elect a United States Senator, and Senator Penrose, whose term expires next March, is a candidate for reëlection. Some of the independent Republican leaders had announced they would oppose his candidacy, and in consequence the Senator's return to Washington was an issue in some sections of the State.

The primaries in Philadelphia passed off quietly. The hardest fight was in several wards where the Republicans were split into several factions. With few exceptions, however, the Republican slate candidates for Congress and national and State delegates were elected, and the slated candidates for legislative nominations were successful. The Democratic slate candidates for Congress were also nominated, but there were many fights over national and State delegates. Among those who were elected Republican national delegates from Philadelphia are Senator Penrose, ex-Insurance Commissioner Israel W. Durham and State Senator James P. McNichol.

NO DEMOCRATIC INSTRUCTIONS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

PITTSBURGH, April 11.—Col J. M. Guffey, national committeeman and leader of the Democratic party in Pennsylvania, when seen tonight, said:

"From information I have received from over the State, the delegates elected at today's primaries to the State convention to be held in May, absolutely insures an uninstructed delegation from Pennsylvania to the Denver convention, and rightly so. Pennsylvania can deliver no votes in the electoral college, and should be left free to join in the choice of a candidate deemed available by the States that elect Democratic Presidents."

DE SAGAN AND BONI AFTER GOULD CASH.

PARIS, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Helie de Sagan is no longer a member of any of the aristocratic French clubs. The only one to which he belongs is a notorious gambling club in the Boulevard des Capuchines.

It is said that De Sagan and Boni de Castellane have made the most extraordinary bargain ever struck between two members of the French aristocracy. Th assertion is made that Helie agreed to share with Boni the money which he will receive through his marriage to Anna Gould.

On Boni's part the consideration is said to be that he will offer no further resistance to the marriage, and will inflict no more bodily punishment on his cousin.

Retains Youthful Beauty, but Hair Is White.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Of the American women who graced the Irish industries sale at Londonderry House, Lady Hesketh was the most admired. She was Florence Emily Sharon, daughter of United States Senator William Sharon of Nevada.

As she entered the long gallery where the bazaar was held, her charming complexion, her slim, petite figure and her vivacious manner attracted all eyes. It was difficult to realize that she was married in San Francisco twenty-eight years ago, for, although her hair is snow white, it only lends an added beauty to her youthful face.

Lady Hesketh was dressed superbly. She wore what she called a "Botticelli gown" of tawny satin, a mass of embroidery from shoulders to hem. No exhibit on the stalls could boast such needlework. As if to prove her loyalty to her native land, Lady Hesketh has never lost her American accent.

BRINGS SUIT FOR DAMAGES.

ECHO OF SENSATIONAL CASE LAST NOVEMBER.

Miss Lena Packard Institutes Proceedings Against Edgar C. Arnold for Having Deserted Her on Eve of Their Marriage—Defendant Maintains Silence.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

TOPEKA, (Kan.) April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Through her attorneys here, today, Miss Lena Packard of Los Angeles, Cal., filed suit for $25,000 damages for alleged breach of promise against Edgar C. Arnold, a wealthy young wholesale druggist of this city. The suit was filed in the United States Circuit Court. Miss Packard asks $20,000 actual and $5000 punitive damages.

This suit is an echo of the sensation of November 5, 1907, at which time Mr. Arnold and Miss Packard were engaged to wed in Los Angeles, but did not, through the sudden and unexplained departure of Mr. Arnold for his home here, the evening before the ceremony.

The petition reveals that Miss Packard met Arnold in Topeka, November 23, 1906, while she was visiting here. She alleged that after the first meeting he continued to pay marked attention to her. At length, she says, he manifested affection for her, and invited similar sentiment, which in time was returned by her. They became acknowledged lovers and corresponded regularly until the day before the date of the wedding. The petition says that he addressed her in the most endearing terms at all times.

Acting upon the assumption that he was sincere, she says she proceeded to arrange for the marriage, preparing her trousseau and sending out many invitations to the ceremony The wedding was to take place at her home in Los Angeles, November 6, 1907. She avers that up to the evening of November 5, 1907, Arnold continued to show his affection for her. She says that on the afternoon of November 5 he took her for an extended automobile ride, and during the trip continued to express his love and affection for her. She says that he never intimated his intention of breaking his alleged promise to wed to her, that there had been no disagreement or quarrel between them, and that when he returned to his hotel that evening she had every reason to believe that he would become her husband next day. But, she says, that night he suddenly left the city, and after his departure notified her by a letter of his going.

Miss Packard says that she shunned the attentions of other men during the courtship between herself and Arnold. She says she always has maintained high social standing in Topeka and Los Angeles, and that the alleged breach of promise has caused her great injury in many ways. She said her health had been wrecked as the result of the worry brought upon her by the incident. Arnold refuses to discuss the case in any way. He is 34 years old, while her petition says she is 23. Arnold is rated to be worth $100,000.

LOTTERY MEN FINED.

CHIEF GETS HEAVIEST.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

CHICAGO, April 11.—Fines aggregating $10,150 were today imposed by Judge Bethea in the United States District Court against twenty-eight men who were arrested in various parts of the country on the charge of being connected with a lottery.

The heaviest fine was $6000 and it was placed upon David K. Jones of Chicago, said to have been the owner of the Old Reliable Guaranty Loan and Trust Company and the head of the lottery concern.

John Miner, the chief agent of Jones, was fined $1000 and the other defendants were fined from $100 to $125 each.

One man, David Sharp of Fort Madison, Iowa, failed to appear and his bond was forfeited. Five others asked time in which to consult their attorneys and their cases were continued.

The Federal authorities declare that with the breaking up of the Jones concern, they have finally wiped out all lotteries in existence in the United States.

OFFICIALS ACCUSED.

Reno District Attorney Says Rawhide Under-Sheriffs Grafted from Women of Tenderloin.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

RENO (Nev.) April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Dist.-Atty. Stoddard today admitted he had evidence which will probably send several under sheriffs in Rawhide to the State penitentiary for collecting "blood money" from the women of the tenderloin.

The State police, upon their entrance to Rawhide a few weeks ago, uncovered wholesale graft among the county officers and silently went to work collecting evidence.

They found the women have been forced to pay a weekly sum to the officers for the privilege of staying in the camp, and that certain illegal gambling games have been allowed to run under cover without paying licenses.

Tex Rickard, mine operator, prize-fight promoter and owner of the Northern Saloon at Ely, Goldfield and Rawhide, has openly defied the Nevada State police, and refuses to pay them licenses for his gambling games conducted at Rawhide.

Rickard says he will only recognise the Sheriff's office, and that he is backed by the opinion of Dist.-Atty. Swallow. Capt. Cox of the State police here, stated tonight that his men had discovered that Rickard was running games without license, and that they were empowered to arrest whenever they found the State law violated, and that unless Rickard backed down, his place would be raided and closed.

ALLIES DISPUTE TAFT'S CLAIMS.

WIDE DIVERGENCE IN FIGURES ON PRESIDENTIAL RACE.

Joint Opponents of Secretary of War Concede Him Only 181 Delegates Out of 420 Chosen to Date, but His Managers Declare They Have 190 Uncontested.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Claims of the rival Presidential camps made today based on the delegates' returns for the past week, show a wider divergence than at any other time since the Republican Presidential race began.

To date 420 delegates have been chosen to the Chicago convention, being seventy less than half the convention. The Taft managers today laid claim to 234, without taking into consideration the support they expect their candidate to receive from among the uninstructed delegates. Of these 234, 190 are uncontested.

The allied forces concede Mr. Taft only 181 delegates, and give to the remainder of the field 239 votes, including the instructed, uninstructed and contested delegates. These figures are as follows:

Taft, 181; Cannon, 50; Fairbanks, 30; Hughes, 44; La Follette, 25; uninstructed, 46; contested, 44.

During the past week 120 delegates were chosen. Of these the Taft men claim eight in South Dakota, eight in Virginia, two in West Virginia, four in Massachusetts, three in New York, two in Minnesota, and one in Wisconsin, all contested by the opposition. The allies concede this vote except that they give Mr. Taft two more votes in Massachusetts than his own managers claim, and take one away in New York.

The allies claim twelve for Cannon in Illinois, twenty-five for La Follette in Wisconsin, forty for Hughes in New York, six uninstructed in Deleware, two in Massachusetts and six in New York, while two from Alabama are contested.

SIXTIETH CONGRESS.

JAP WAR IS DISCUSSED.

Hobson Pleads for Four More Battleships.

Declares Contest on Pacific Inevitable.

Other Congressmen Dispute Contention.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, April 11.—Debate on the Naval Appropriation Bill in the House today resolved itself in the main into a discussion of the possibilities of a war between the United States and Japan.

In line with his well-known views on the subject, Mr. Hobson of Alabama pleaded for four battleships instead of two for the next fiscal year, and pointed out that from now on the United States should have a fixed policy with regard to naval construction.

A war between the yellow and the white races he regarded as inevitable, and he asserted that Japan's present military activity was with a view to the supremacy of the Pacific, and ultimately would clash at arms with the United States.

On the other hand, Messrs. Burton of Ohio and W. M. Kitchin of North Carolina disputed that contention, each of them avowing that a clash not only would not come, but that the United States should remain in the forefront of modern civilization as the exponent of peace.

MANY TOPICS.

Others who spoke were Messrs. Lilley of Connecticut, who criticised the Navy Department for maintaining several useless navy yards; Gill of Maryland, who denounced the President for his treatment of Rear-Admiral Brownson; Dawson of Iowa, who advocated the consolidation of the several bureaus of the Navy Department; Loud of Michigan, who favored a naval programme of two battleships a year for ten years; Smith of Texas, who made a general assault on the Republican party; O'Connell of Massachusetts, who declared himself in favor of four battleships, and Ferris of Oklahoma, who condemned the dealing in futures in the bucketshops and elsewhere in farm products.

Mr. Hobson went so far as to say that $50,000,000 in battleships would have enabled the United States to force Russia to evacuate Manchuria at the time she agreed to do so, and in that case the war between Russia and Japan would have been averted.

"The war clouds are gathering," Mr. Hobson said in conclusion, "but America could, by carrying out a legitimate naval policy, prevent it. It is not a vision, it is not a dream. You and I can do it. Let's begin by authorizing four ships this year at the least."

DISCOUNTS PREDICTIONS.

Mr. Burton followed and was rather inclined to discount Mr. Hobson's predictions of war. The United States, he declared, was in the forefront of modern civilization and instead of engaging in warfare had made peace between nations. He referred to President Roosevelt's part in effecting peace between Russia and Japan and said that "not one nor twenty battleships had anything to do with that peace. It was accomplished rather through a reliance in his fairness and the justice and disinterestedness of the American people, which would have been swept away if he had those ambitions which belong to a country having a great navy and seeking to dominate the nations of the earth."

He concluded by saying that the United States should take advantage of its magnificent isolation and lead the world in the paths of peace.

President Roosevelt's treatment Rear-Admiral Brownson because of attitude with regard to the placing a naval surgeon in charge of the hos tal ship Relief, was condemned by Gill of Maryland, who charged that President had repeatedly shown a d regard for the law and performed a wholly illegal. A great injustice, said, had been done Admiral Browns

"We should demand justice and f play," he exclaimed, "not only in p cept, but also in practice," and he s that "he who is loudest in preachi the 'square deal' should be foremost practicing it."

Mr. Gill briefly touched upon politi and said, notwithstanding the Preside had twice asserted his determinati not to be a candidate for a third ter it was currently reported that his l message was a bid for a renominati He quoted from a topical song, the frain running:

"It's Taft or I, and that's the cry Washington," and said that Preside Roosevelt's renomination would be misfortune to the Republicans and election for a third term a calam to the country.

LILLEY FINDS A NEW FIEL

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

WASHINGTON, April 11.—Inves gation of the navy yards at Charl ton, Port Royal, Mare Island, Por mouth, N. H., New Orleans and K West by a commission appointed the President with a view to th abandonment, was urged by Repr sentative Lilley of Connecticut befo the House today.

Mr. Lilley offered a joint resoluti providing for the appointment of t commission, and for improvements other yards so as to eliminate t "waste of public moneys in the mai tenance of the same."

Mr. Lilley quoted from reports ma by boards of officers and former se rotaries of the navy as far back 1885 to show that the condition of t navy yards then was open to seve

Barden's Men's Shoe Store Selling Out Sale

E. E. Barden wishes to announce that he will retire from the shoe business in Los Angeles, after being in business here for the past twenty years, and located at the corner of Third and Spring streets, under the Stimson block, for the past ten years. Barden's Exclusive Men's Shoe Store needs no introduction to the men of Los Angeles. He carried only the highest grades of shoes, ranging in price from $5.00 to $8.00. The entire stock is offered to the public at about half the former price. All the regular Barden customers are requested to be quick in taking advantage of the closing out prices, while the assortment is yet complete.

criticism, and in fact that the reorganization of the Navy Department itself was desirable, if not absolutely necessary.

The navy yards mentioned in his resolution were taken up separately and discussed by Mr. Lilley. The Mare Island yard, he said, has cost $1,175,000.

"But the Secretary of the Navy states that this dry dock will not permit the docking of a battleship.

"And not only is this true, but a battleship cannot get to the yard. Although Rear-Admiral Endicott, Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks ten years ago, practically recommended the abandonment of this yard, since that time $728,866 has been spent in dredging alone, and $5,124,712 has been appropriated and spent on the yard.

"Key West is a place," said Mr. Lilley, "that has cost us $1,328,028. It is six miles from the straits and the low water depth in its channel is twenty-six feet, and $101,000 has been spent there for dredging. At this yard in the fiscal year ended in 1907, $94,318 was expended for labor and the value of their total product was but $7126.

"Portsmouth, N. H., or Kittery, Me., is a plant that has cost us over $10,000,000."

Continuing, Mr. Lilley said that last summer when he visited the Portsmouth navy yard with the other members of the House Committee on Naval Affairs, abroad the Dolphin, the captain of the vessel told him it was not safe to take even so small a craft as the Dolphin up to the yard, because of the dangerous swift current and narrow channel. The expensive dock has never docked a first-class battleship, he added, and yet $244,900 more was appropriated for this place the last session of Congress.

Concerning the navy yard at New Orleans, Mr. Lilley said that in 1907, $78,274 was spent by the department for labor and the total product was $1046. "But the point that a business man would fail to comprehend," he continued, "is that $10,000 was appropriated at both sessions of the last Congress for new construction at New Orleans, for what advantage to the United States navy, God only knows."

Charleston, he said, has but twenty-five feet of water in its channel, yet Congress has appropriated $1,198,984 to build there a magnificent dry dock.

TWO TREATIES SIGNED.

QUESTIONS TO BE SETTLED.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

WASHINGTON, April 11.—Secretary Root and Ambassador Bryce today signed two treaties negotiated recently between the United States and Great Britain.

One provides for a commission to determine the boundary between the United States and Canada, and the other regulates fishing in the Great Lakes and contiguous streams.

The boundary commission will be charged with the work of resurveying certain sections of the boundary line, and determining disputed questions in that connection. It is understood that the fishery affair is also placed in the hands of a commission by the terms of the treaty.

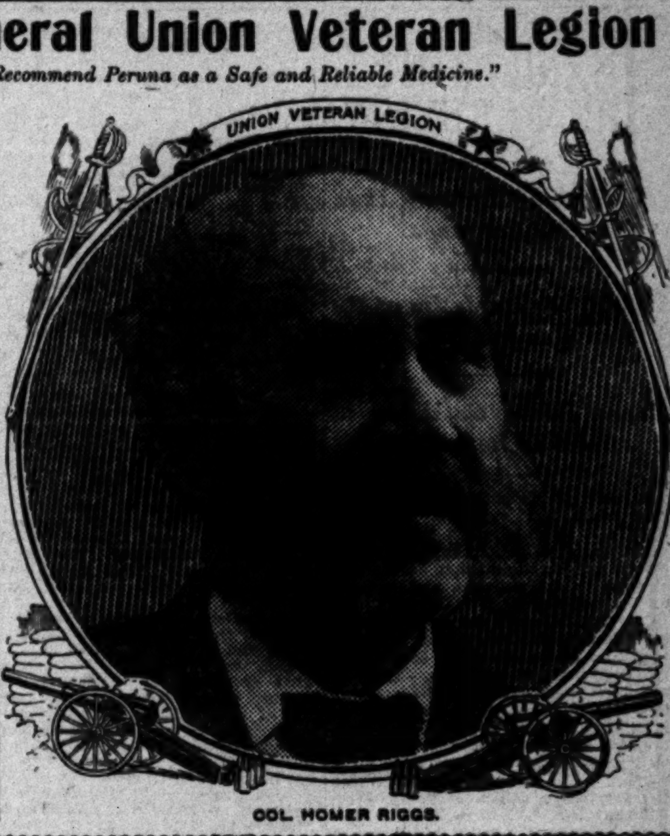
No Medicine in the World Can Produce a More Impressive Array of Testimonials.

Every Testimonial Given in the Exact Words of the Testifier.



COL. HOMER RIGGS.

Col. Homer Riggs, Inspector-general on the staff of the National Commander of the Union Veteran Legion, writes from the Pension Bureau, Washington, D. C., as follows:

"I thank you very much for calling my attention to Peruna. It is a pleasant and effective tonic, cures and prevents colds and catarrhal affections, and also acts upon the liver. I can recommend it as a safe and reliable medicine."

Terrible Case of Indigestion.

Mr. Donald Robb, Jr., 16 Wrights ave., Nova Scotia, Canada, Deputy Supreme Chief Ranger, Independent Order of Forresters, writes:

"While on a visit to Boston I must have eaten something that did not agree with my stomach, as a terrible case of indigestion followed. Peruna was recommended to me, and after using three bottles I was entirely cured. I therefore recommend Peruna to any one suffering with stomach trouble."

Every Trace of Catarrh Gone.

Mr. James P. Bracken, 610 Tenth ave., New York City, N. Y., has occupied the office of Water Inspector of New York City for the past fifteen years. He carries on an extensive plumbing business at 610 Tenth ave. He is Post Deputy of Grand Knights of Reigna Celia Council Knights of Columbus, N. Y. He writes as follows:

"For nearly a dozen years catarrh has bothered me in one form or another. I was troubled with nasal catarrh that had affected my stomach, which troubled me most in the morning. My appetite was poor, and I did not seem to relish my food. Indigestion bothered me at times also.

"I was advised to take Peruna, and I took it as prescribed for a month, when my cure was almost complete. Today there is not a trace of catarrh in my system, and I can say without hesitation that Peruna cured me."

Agrreeable and Effective Tonic.

Corporal John Finn, Washington, D. C., veteran soldier of the Civil War, a prominent Grand Army man and commander of the oldest post in the United States, John A. Rawlins Post No. 1, Department of the Potomac, Grand Army of the Republic, writes:

"Peruna was recommended to me by many of my associates, and I have given it a fair trial. Have found it a most agreeable and effective tonic, pleasant, soothing, and leaves one free from the deleterious effects produced by the many nostrums now on the market. I have suffered from catarrhal afflictions the past winter, and have found Peruna most beneficial and commend it for what it has done for me."

Relieves Mind and Body.

Mr. G. W. Woodbury, Rogers, Ohio formerly captain and center of the Hiram College basketball team writes:

"When body and mind alike were weary and refused to work, a few doses of Peruna restored lost strength and invigorated quicker and more permanently than anything I know."

Unhesitatingly Recommends Pe-ru-na.

J. Edwin Browne, national commander Army and Navy Union of U. S.A., 410 11th St., N.E. Washington, D. C., writes:

"I have no hesitation in endorsing your Peruna as a most efficient cure for catarrh. My own experience and that of many friends who have been benefited by its use recommend it to all persons suffering from that complaint."

Pe-ru-na Tablets.

For two years Dr. Hartman and his assistants have incessantly labored to create Peruna in tablet form, and their strenuous labors have just been crowned with success. People who object to liquid medicines can now secure Peruna tablets. These tablets represent the medicinal ingredients of Peruna, and each tablet is equivalent to one average dose.

THE FAMILY RELIES ON PERUNA.

A. Howitt Nickerson, Captain U. S. Army, Adjutant General on General McCook's staff, writes from the Census Building, Washington, D.C., as follows:

"It affords me great pleasure to commend Peruna as a most excellent tonic with many medicinal qualities that assist nature in overcoming the various ills with which the human family is often afflicted, and is always in danger.

"As a general thing, I have been opposed to what are known as patent medicines, but Peruna has long since overcome this feeling. It is now, as it has been for a long time, a well-established family medicine with us, upon which we rely to give tired nature substantial restoration."

TORTURE!

SAN QUENTIN'S GRIM CRUELTY.

Col. Griffith Condemns It in Plain Language.

Tells of the Hardships of the Men in Cells.

Urges Public Gathering to Aid in Reforms.

A fair audience gathered at Simpson Auditorium last night to hear Col. Griffith J. Griffith in his stinging arraignment of conditions in San Quentin Prison and his appeal that people may awaken to the situation and demand needed reforms.

Col. Griffith, since the day of his release from State's prison, has been unremitting in his efforts to secure better treatment of prisoners. That he has been successful in some measure is indicated not only by the increased sentiment in that direction, but from the fact that during the year covered by his agitation there have been sixty paroles from San Quentin prison, where the previous yearly average has been but thirteen.

He mentioned names freely, when speaking of inhuman conditions and practices at the prison, and to show that they exist just the same today, read a telegram from R. Lawrence of San Francisco, whose acquaintance he formed among the prisoners, but who now also has been released. The telegram, received yesterday, reads as follows:

"Strait-jacket cruelties still exist at San Quentin. A man named Rozales was recently subjected to torture for ninety-nine hours, occasioning great suffering."

WORK IS INDORSED.

A telegram also was read from William Rader and Charles Montgomery of the California Prison Commission, in which they heartily indorsed the work of Col. Griffith and wished him godspeed in his campaign for prison reform.

The speaker made a strong point when he declared that it is practically impossible to secure evidence against the officials inside the penitentiaries because when a man gets out he cannot expose the wrongdoing without advertising himself as an ex-convict, a fact that he is all too anxious to conceal. Col. Griffith therefore feels the greater importance of throwing his own life and fortune into the work of righting the frightful wrongs he witnessed. He was received with applause when he came to the platform and again when he arose to speak.

The meeting was presided over by Mrs. Hester T. Griffith, and the invocation was made by Rev. Baker P. Lee of Christ Episcopal Church. Mrs. Fred Dorn and Charles Hendricks sang a number of times, to the evident delight of the audience.

LOOKS INTO MANY.

"Last summer I traveled over 10,000 miles in the United States and Mexico and visited many prisons, from Oregon to New York, the most notable of which, in the City of Mexico, contained 5000 men and [illegible] women prisoners," said Col. Griffith. "For comparison allow me to state that both San Quentin and Folsom prisons have but twenty-seven female prisoners, thanks to God.

"From personal experience, observation and knowledge, I am forced to the conclusion that the discipline of the average prison hardens and degrades, and is a perpetual exhibition of cruel, arbitrary power. I wish I could make it so convincingly clear, that the civilized world could fully realize that a prisoner can never be reformed by being wronged. Did vengeance ever make any man or woman better? Man is not a commodity; he is not a compound of mathematical quantities or chemical gases; he has a heart and a brain, and between these spring a thousand needs and emotions. He is conquered by justice, and any scheme for the measuring of man which leaves out justice will and must be a failure.

"In many of the penitentiaries there are instruments of torture, and now and then a convict is crippled for life or murdered. Inspections and investigations go for naught because the testimony of a convict is unbelieved. He is generally prevented by fear from telling his wrongs; he is regarded as less than a human being, and so the imprisoned suffer and remain without remedy. Every noble or manly feeling, every effort toward real reformation is trampled under foot, so that when the convict's time is out there is little left on which to build. He has been cruelly humiliated to the last degree, and his spirit has so long been bent and crippled by authority and fear, that even the desire to stand erect has faded from his mind. The keepers know that they are safe, because no matter what they do the released convict will not tell the story of his wrongs, for if he desires to conceal his own shame he must also hide the keeper's guilt. Thus it is plain that no matter what happens in the average prison there is no redress for the convict.

SAN QUENTIN'S SAD SCENES.

"Warden J. W. Tompkins constantly reminded his flock that they were 'sent here to be punished,' and when he ruled over the 1600 helpless prisoners confined behind the gloomy walls of San Quentin, many sad scenes were enacted. To properly lay the foundation for one, I will affirm that a prisoner is not totally depraved if he has love in his heart, and the great majority of the San Quentin prisoners showed their love by decorating their little homes with photographs or pictures of some loved one (allowed them under former management,) and some would have several members of their family hung up in neat little frames. Many prisoners are serving long sentences, nearly 200 being life termers, and many of them keep their little cell-homes as neat and inviting as possible; many had little boxes with locks attached, in which to keep little things that to them were cherished treasures.

"One morning, when the prisoners were all at work, Warden Tompkins called his men together and ordered them to 'go through' every cell and take every picture, frame and all, and every box and all books (except library books) and everything else that would be near and dear to the hearts of the unfortunate prisoners and place them in the fire.

"A great bonfire was kept burning for several days until he supposed everything was consumed. The bonfire was in full view of the laundry, in the middle yard, and one day as I passed by an old prisoner, who was forced to feed the flames, called me, and after making sure that no one saw him, handed me a book, saying: 'For God's sake, Colonel, save this Bible.' I did so, and had the book rebound in Los Angeles; it bears the name of a prominent divine who presented it to a life-term prisoner.

"In order not to tire you I will relate but one more sad story of cruelty. A very intelligent prisoner, who was one of the best musicians in the band, was working in the machine shop when Warden Tompkins sent for him and said: 'There is dope (morphine) in the prison, and unless you tell us all about it I will put you in the jacket and have you squeezed until you do.'

"The prisoner answered politely by assuring the warden and those present that he not only had no knowledge of any in the prison, but would not know it if he saw it. In spite of this frank and truthful denial the warden ordered the captain of the yard to 'lace him in the jacket tight and keep him there until he tells.' The poor, helpless man was tortured there for 140 hours, or nearly six days and nights, and then released only because he was about to die. The unfortunate man is living in Los Angeles now, crippled for life, and in one of his letters to me he uses this language: 'Fortunately, I was a powerful man, of wonderful endurance, but this treatment has left me a physical wreck, unable to do a full day's work at my trade, and turned loose on the world physically handicapped, with nothing before me but a life of sickness.'

"Every intelligent man in San Quentin knew that this man was being tortured, and yet no one dared even say a kind word for him. You may ask what prevented the prisoners from making some demonstration of sympathy? They dared not for fear of being shot. It was said that Warden Tompkins had 125 men under him, a walking arsenal, with five rapid-fire Gatling guns, 108 breech-loading Winchester rifles, sixty double-barreled shotguns, seventy-two rapid-fire revolvers and 12,000 rounds of ammunition at his command.

"Over the entrance gate at San Quentin are these words: 'He who enters here leaves all hope behind.' If the next Legislature turns the prison into a reformatory, such sentiments may change with modern conditions. Instead, we may even read: 'Love is the fulfilling of the law.'

IN THE DARK CELLS.

"Within San Quentin's gloomy dungeon, situated about twenty feet below the upper yard, are probably a dozen dark cells, and made secure to the walls are several short, heavy chains about two feet long. Some of the prisoners are still living who sadly tell their experience while fastened to these chains for fifty-nine days and nights. You and I can well imagine the physical, mental and moral improvement such treatment would suggest. Rather, do we not shudder at the utter wreck of body, mind and spirit such an infamous torture would produce?

"The doctors there lacked experience and were heartless and cruel—each had a hobby. Many tuberculosis patients are among the prisoners, but no attempt has been made to segregate them from those who are free of the dread white plague.

"Out of the 1600 prisoners, not one who has been confined in San Quentin for any length of time but can tell sad stories of humiliation and cruelty. The old men vividly picture the brutalities of former years, practiced there when it was a common thing to see prisoners stripped naked, fastened to a large post and beaten until the victim's blood would form a pool around his feet and when untied he would fall helpless to the ground, while others portray death scenes of a revolting nature. All these and many more indescribable cruelties were or are in constant use by the representatives of organized society.

"In San Quentin tobacco is the coin of the realm, and anything that one prisoner buys of another is paid for with so many little sacks or plugs of tobacco. It is a common thing to hear of tobacco bets made on games of handball, baseball or prize fights, and as many as 200 sacks of tobacco would be placed in somebody's possession awaiting the decision. The officers in charge would frequently get a clew through one of their many stool pigeons, and suddenly discover a rule forbidding any prisoner to have in his possession more than one ration of tobacco at one time, and confiscate all the surplus by taking it away from the prisoner. Later, the same tobacco would again be sold to the prisoners and the guards and officers would thus get a small part of their 'perquisite,' or prison graft.

MAJORITY NOT BAD MEN.

"Within the State prison walls of Folsom and San Quentin are some hardened, naturally bad and desperate men, but the great majority are not bad men. It was on behalf of deserving prisoners that I spent two whole months at Sacramento last winter, advocating the passage of three important bills. One was the indeterminate sentence bill, another was a better parole measure and the third, segregation and grading of prisoners. Thanks to the intelligent Legislature, all three passed both houses unanimously. The Governor, however, who claims he had 400 bills to consider within ten days after adjournment of that body, failed to sign them.

"From personal knowledge and observation at San Quentin prison during the two years of 1905 and 1906, I am forced to the conclusion that our system is largely to blame. Instead of being beneficially instructive, San Quentin, as conducted in the past, is positively a school for crime, where the youth of from 14 to 21 daily and constantly come in contact with hardened and degenerate criminals. Worse still is the system in practice by the Board of Directors for the past fourteen years, which dumps about nine-tenths of San Quentin's liberated prisoners at the expiration of their terms of sentence, instead of by parole, into the city of San Francisco.

"I am deeply in earnest about these reforms, and my knowledge comes from experience, and is ample and profound. I am not discussing these matters for either wealth or notoriety—I have both. I slept in room 'A' with forty-eight others for fourteen months, right over the dungeon, where most of the torturing was done. Hundreds of times I heard pitiful cries for mercy, followed by human moans and groans. My heart was sick many times, yet I was helpless. SEE what I have seen and HEAR what I have heard, and YOU, TOO, would be moved to action.

"A thousand prison visits would fail to give you the knowledge that I possess. My heart reaches out in deep sympathy to helpless, deserving fellow-man and especially to those legally dead, yet buried alive behind the gloomy walls of San Quentin. Under the fatherhood of God are we not all brethren? And oh, how sad to think of the good men whose time must be spent in slavery and misery for the State, when in them lies so much of the stuff which marks the true man.

"I have talked with murderers, train and stage robbers, burglars, pickpockets, hobos, yeggmen, and others guilty of nearly every crime known, yet I never found a prisoner but could easily be convinced that a criminal career does not pay. A sane young man so convinced can be reformed."

BOOM FOR PIERCE.

Sixth Ward Republicans Give Enthusiastic Support to Candidate for the Assembly.

Republicans of the Sixth Ward held a rousing meeting last evening at the rooms of the Sixth Ward Republican Club, Adams street and Central avenue, in support of Assemblyman Fred E. Pierce, who is a candidate for reelection from the Seventy-second Assembly District. Pierce's record at the last regular and special sessions of the Legislature was reviewed, and the sentiment in favor of his renomination was strong. P. C. Mulqueeny was chairman of the meeting, and among the speakers were D. C. Casselman, Justice E. E. Selph, Capt. C. M. Jenkins and Edward L. Hines.

The following committee, representing Sixth Ward precincts in the Seventy-second Assembly District, was appointed to meet at the call of the chair to perfect organization with other precincts in the district: W. J. Wallis, Joseph Sresovich, Jr., Capt. C. M. Jenkins, J. B. Smith, M. I. McNeeley, Frank Gillespie, Joseph H. Blum and Charles Troll.

HELLO, CENTRAL.

NEW WIRELESS 'PHONE COMING.

BATTLESHIP FLEET IS EQUIPPED WITH TALK SYSTEM.

Representative of Radio Telephone Company on the Way to Meet the Ships at San Diego—German and Italian Navies Fall in Line—What it Means to Ships.

When on board his flagship, the Connecticut, Admiral Evans can sit in his cabin and talk with the commanders of any one of his great fleet of sixteen battleships now on their way to San Diego and the Los Angeles ports. This is accomplished by means of the delicate instruments of the Radio Telephone Company of New York.

Before Admiral Evans left Hampton Roads with his fleet for the wonderful voyage through the Straits of Magellan, he asserted that positively he must have every battleship and tender equipped with this wireless telephone service and the Navy Department installed altogether twenty-eight machines.

Thus the United States leads all the navies of the world in adopting this innovation, but now, and since the sailing of the fleet for the Pacific, Baron des Planches, Italian Ambassador at Washington, for his government, and Baron Von Sternberg, German Ambassador, for his government, have signed contracts with the company to equip all the battleships of the Italian and German navies with the wireless telephone.

And soon it is expected that the steamers on the Pacific Coast will be equipped with the wireless telephone as thoroughly as are at present the steamers of the Great Lakes, where it is claimed that the insurance rates have been reduced at least 20 per cent. through this agency of communication, which makes for safety.

Yesterday Paul Hirsch, representative of the Radio Telephone Company, came to Los Angeles and is at the Alexandria. Last evening he was a guest at the home of Justice M. T. Allen, of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court. Mr. Hirsch will leave for San Diego tomorrow morning to welcome the fleet upon its arrival and get a report of the practical working of the company's wireless telephone system at sea. Four instruments have just been installed at Mare Island Navy Yard and Yerba Buena Island.

Mr. Hirsch is an enthusiast in behalf of the wireless telephone and predicts great things for it, but he is modest and refuses to make assertions for publication regarding this latest wonder in the scientific and electrical world except as regards those things which have been practically demonstrated.

He thinks that eventually the instruments will be so perfected that one may be able to talk by this system even at a greater distance than is now possible by land, but calls attention to the fact that the furthest distance as yet recorded is 110 miles over the water, at Brest, France, recently, while on the Great Lakes the steamers now speak with each other in actual personal tones at varying distances up to sixty miles or a little more. What this means to a vessel lost in a fog is obvious.

As yet no attempt has been made to install this wireless telephone on the Pacific Coast, but mariners state that there is certainly a call for just such a practical system. So far it has only been adapted to marine use, from ship to ship, or from ship to shore. Meanwhile Dr. Lee de Forest is experimenting to further perfect his system of wireless telephony.

MORALS IN SCHOOLS.

Bishop Conaty the Principal Speaker at Night Meeting of the Schoolmasters' Club.

In spite of the assertions of certain members of the Schoolmasters' Club of the city of Los Angeles at a meeting in Polytechnic High School last evening that, while they had their own ideas regarding the enforced vacation and other things, they had nothing to say publicly, a resolution was put through the meeting before it adjourned appreciating the "unquestioned efficiency and integrity of the Board of Education and its executive officers" and pledging the club's "unqualified confidence and hearty support."

The meeting was for the purpose of listening to a literary programme, devoted for the most part to "morals in public schools." Bishop Conaty made the principal address of the evening, and was as forceful as ever in what he had to say. He took the side that religion should be taught to children, and pointed to the parochial schools as an answer to the problem.

He stated that the reverence for God has not increased, and spoke in illustration of the "frightful and ghastly wrecks of divorce." The elimination of religion in education, he stated, sacrificed everything that stands for positive Christianity.

"It makes the child believe that reading and writing are of more importance than religion."

Bishop Conaty asserted that, as understood by the Catholic church, it takes the ground that Christianity is of more importance to children than education or social position. The church demands positive instruction in religion and knowledge of God and His laws.

"This explains the principle of the parochial system," he said.

In conclusion, Bishop Conaty stated that "the republic depends, not on intelligence alone, but on intelligence and virtue."

COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS SMOKE

The Commercial Travelers' Association of Southern California held an open-house smoker last night at their club quarters in the Workman building. The usual good stories from the much-traveled drummer and the general feeling of good fellowship pervaded the smoky atmosphere of the rooms. Informal songs and selections on the piano filled out the programme. On May 2, the club will hold one of its regular formal entertainments, in the nature of a dance at the Woman's Clubhouse on Figueroa street.

When a woman gives you "a piece of her mind" she usually unrolls the whole bolt. Ma and I had a little argument the other evening about the ministers requesting Admiral Evans not to parade the warships along the Coast Easter Sunday. Ma took the stand that the ministers were right, that Easter Sunday was the most sacred Sunday of the fifty-two, and the Fleet would be here for nearly a week and everyone could get an opportunity to see the boats. I made the claim that as the vessels were only to be here one Sunday, it would deprive thousands of working men and women from seeing them if they could not see them Sunday. Work has been hard to obtain and wages small. A man can't afford to lose that $1.50. If the ministers and the business men and the Fleet Committee and everybody would raise a fund to take every poor child in town, whose parents can't afford to take them to the beaches, get them aboard the vessels, give them a lunch and return them safely to their homes, they would do an act of charity and patriotism seldom equaled in this country. Hundreds of good women would volunteer to go along and care for those poor kids. People would donate baskets of food for the picnics. Gee! but they'd have a good time. I'm willing to give up a week's salary as my donation and I know the old man would dig up in good shape. I think every man would. Your Pa would, wouldn't he? All the rest of you kids boost and we'll make it go.

THAT BIG ROSE WAR.

Great Excitement Attends Membership Contest at Young Women's Christian Association.

The "War of the Roses" is now at its height in the Young Women's Christian Association, and last night the figures had reached considerable proportions, showing heavy gains of the White Roses over the previous report. The Red Roses still retain the lead, with 152 new members to their credit, the White Roses being a good second, with 149 new members, and both sides come up to Sunday full of excitement. Much quiet work will be done today, and another exciting time may be expected when the results are summed up on Monday evening.

A timely incident yesterday was the sending of 2000 red carnations to the association building by The Times. The fragrant blossoms had been received from the Rising-Dunscomb Florists, and instead of sending them to the hospitals, as last month, it was determined to divide them between the Young Women's Christian Association and the Young Men's Christian Association. When the flowers arrived at the association building last night, the Red Roses uttered a war-whoop, seizing them as their rightful plunder, and soon they had the interior radiant with red carnations. The men will get their carnations today.

RAILWAY MAIL CLERKS.

The clerks of the Los Angeles district of the Railway Mail Service gave a smoker at the Café Bristol last night. The guest of honor was A. H. Stephens of San Francisco, division superintendent. B. H. Marquis presided as toastmaster. Responses were made by F. I. R. Moore, chief clerk of the Los Angeles district; J. O. McMullin, Charles Harding, W. S. Rounds and others. Mr. Stephens being in the city for a short time on business, the clerks seized an opportunity seldom given them to promote closer and more friendly relations.

MISS DOWLING DEAD.

The sad news has been received here of the death at Denver yesterday of Miss Lillian R. Dowling, daughter of Rev. George Thomas Dowling, now of Brooklyn, N. Y., formerly rector of Christ Episcopal Church of Los Angeles. Miss Dowling was well known in Los Angeles and Pasadena, her former home. Sisters who survive are Mrs. Arthur Drummond of Colorado Springs, Mrs. Harry Whitcomb of Wooster, Mass., and Mrs. Clarence Mann of New York City, where also is a brother, Justin Dowling.

in National Convention will stand: La Follette, 25; Taft, 1.

At La Follette headquarters in Milwaukee today it is admitted that returns from the Tenth district will give Walter Alexander, a Taft candidate for election as delegate, a plurality of about 1000 votes.

Doubleday Down and Out of the Mining Company.

Gross Mismanagement of the Property Charged.

Settlement Hastened by His Late Dizzy Flight.

Internal troubles, which have caused ndless commotion and comment mong the stockholders of the Johnnie onsolidated Mining Company for the ast few weeks, were brought to a efinite head yesterday afternoon, at special meeting of the directors, held the office of H. C. Dillon.

D. G. Doubleday, former manager, to hom all the company's woes are laid, ave up the note for $25,000 which he ok from the company for alleged inbtedness about a week ago, gave a rbal option on his remaining stock ldings, and stepped down and out—t gracefully, perhaps, but finally.

The company's affairs have been the use of many rumors of late, and me very serious charges have been andied about from one to another, eaving all that cannot be substanated out of the question, there is doubt that the mine has been misnaged, and that its affairs have en conducted with the purpose of ging the stock market in Doubley's interest.

The settlement made yesterday came the direct result of Mr. Dillon's vice to the new directors that the mpany was in no way liable for inbtedness incurred in erecting the w mill in excess of the $87,000 worth treasury stock which Doubleday ok up under his contract with the mpany about a year ago.

DOUBLEDAY GIVES UP.

Fortified with this opinion, the dictors sent for Doubleday, and after sparring for wind, time and cash, late manager was ready, willing, pleased to give up the company's , with the proviso that the comy would relieve him of all possible igation, and assume about $8000 rth of unpaid bills, part of which uld have been settled by him under original contract. To offset this, company will receive a gold brick, is estimated at $5000, as the reof the last mill run.

settlement was precipitated in measure by Doubleday's dizzy ght into the realms of frenzied . Last week, when the stock stood in the vicinity of 8 Arthur E. Hull, a former Chibusiness man, who has recently to this city, and maintains in the I. W. Hellman building, induced to purchase 200,000 shares Doubleday's stock, upon the reprethat everything at the mine and that the golden goose . As he was getting the full cent below the market, Doubleday agreed not to sell his stock, Hull saw a good sight, fell for the bait, and cash.

Hull's return to the city a call was sent out for a meeting powers that be, with the result Hull agreed to hold his stock and in the resurrection and reorganizaof the much-managed company. that idea in view, Perry, the superintendent, and Burgh, a keeper in Doubleday's office, refrom the directorate. this pressure and the continpressure from Doubleday, who over 100,000 shares outside of option given at yesterday's meetit was a subject for surprise that quotation showed an advance yes. The explanation is contained the fact that E. K. They therefore started out their contracts and closed the with purchases in excess of 250,. While no definite inforcan be obtained, it is believed they have thus cleaned up a profit.

as the mine itself is concerned, seems to be little change. The president and superintendent, W. Beau de Zart, believes that months will see the property in position. The former superinhas made no effort to bring product up to a fair grade and the now filled with mixed ore and rock that cannot be expected more than $4 or $5 per ton. material will be run through the order to avoid the expense of it elsewhere and the plant be started upon the better of ore, which, according to Beau is plentiful in all the openat each level.

FLEET TO GREET FLEET.

Many Craft Will Go Down Coast to Meet Battleships—Plans for Handling Visitors.

The associated boatmen of the ports of Los Angeles are making great preparations for handling the vast crowd of excursionists that will wish to view the battleship fleet, and are arranging to cater to the public in a systematic, businesslike manner, different from the hit-and-miss methods followed in the past.

At San Pedro some of the big power boats, such as the Meteor and Orient, and the steamers Hermosa and Warrior of the Wilmington Transportation Company, will be used in the excursion service. The boats will be able to handle 3000 persons every three-quarters of an hour. A string of lighters will be anchored out in the bay opposite the main wharf, with gangways to shore, which will permit the loading of eight or ten boats simultaneously, and avoid the long, tiresome delays that have been so unpleasant a feature of previous traffic.

The battleships will lie inside the breakwater in the calm water, and the entire trip will, therefore, be like riding on a lake. The landing on the men-of-war will be made at the gangway ladders without risk of falling overboard.

A number of boats will leave San Pedro Saturday morning to meet the fleet, coming up with it to its anchorage.

EXCURSION BY TROLLEY.

Special Trains to Carry Chamber of Commerce Party to the Seaside on Thursday.

Special electric trains will be engaged for the Chamber of Commerce gladhand excursion to Balboa Bay, Huntington Beach and Long Beach, Thursday, the round-trip fare being fixed at $1.25, which covers all expenses. "We must know early how many are going on this outing trip," said Secretary Wiggins yesterday. "We must notify the Pacific Electric Company and the Balboa Bay Chamber of Commerce in advance as to the size of the crowd, so that cars and lunch may be provided for everybody.

"Refreshments will be served on the cars all the way and luncheon at Balboa Bay, where there will be furnished reception, free boat rides and bathing. Huntington Beach residents send word that htey will furnish surprise entertainments, and at Long Beach there will be music by the Italian Band and a fine display of decorations for the coming of the fleet."

The trains will leave the Pacific Electric station at 9 a.m. Thursday, arriving at Balboa at 10:30 a.m.; arrive at Huntington Beach at 1:45 p.m.; at Long Beach at 2:45 p.m., and, returning, reach the city at 5:45 p.m.

All members of the chamber and their friends are invited. Tickets can be obtained only at the office of Secretary Wiggins.

Little Negro Who Stole Pipe Tongs Says He's a Plumber and Needs 'Em.

Officers of the Detention Home are wondering at the nerve of little 13-year-old Andrew Thompson, colored, who was arrested yesterday on a charge of stealing a pair of pipe-tongs. He was sent to the Detention Home and will be arraigned in the Juvenile Court next Friday before Judge Wilbur on a charge of incorrigibility, this being his second arrest.

Questioned as to his reasons for stealing this peculiar kind of tool, Andy replied that he was a plumber. As he wears a calico shirt, a worn pair of knee pants with one "gallus," an apology for a bicycle cap and no shoes or stockings, his appearance was anything but that of the orthodox fixer of pipes and maker of bills.

"But I'm also an electrician," asserted Andy. This was the finishing touch, and he was placed at the head of the class of juvenile jack-of-all-trades in the home. If he hasn't the entire respect he at least has the admiration of other inmates who admire nerve.

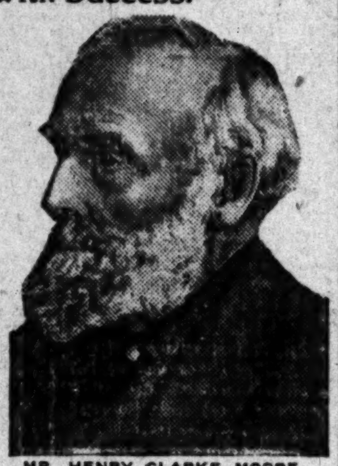
FLYING MACHINE INVENTOR

Kept Strong and Vigorous to the Age of 90 and Enabled to Live to See His Life's Work Crowned with Success.

Mr. Henry Clarke Moore, of Tama, Iowa, who is 90 years of age, has just completed his first flying machine, which will revolutionize the world. His brain has been kept clear and alert and the perfection of his invention made possible by his daily use of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey as his only invigorator and tonic-stimulant.

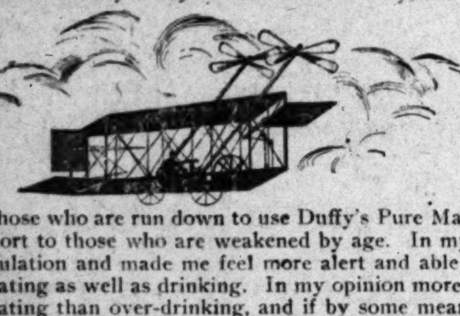


MR. HENRY CLARKE MOORE.

Inventor Moore firmly believed many years ago that a perfect flying machine could be constructed, and he has spent his entire life to perfect his invention. In an interview with our correspondent he said:

"I know my machine is practical, and I hope with the help of God and the aid of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey to live long enough to see it in use commercially and in the army and navy." Speaking further Mr. Moore said:

"For several years I had been greatly troubled with dormant and sluggish action of the lower bowels, which caused me intense suffering. No treatment seemed to benefit me until finally I was induced to try Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey, which I took according to directions—a teaspoonful two or three times a day—and it gave me immediate relief. I steadily gained my health and strength, until now I am as vigorous and active as a man of 60 years of age. My mind is as clear as it ever was, and I have done some of the best work on my invention the last few years, which proves my mental and physical condition. Please bear in mind that I am a temperance man and do not advise any one to use alcoholic beverages except as a medicine, but I do firmly advise all old people and those who are run down to use Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey as I have, as I believe it is the greatest support to those who are weakened by age. In my case it stimulated and built me up; it quickened my circulation and made me feel more alert and able to do things. I believe in being temperate in all things, eating as well as drinking. In my opinion more sickness and breaking down of health comes from overeating than over-drinking, and if by some means the human being could be educated to strict temperance in all things, what a difference we should soon see in the human race. There is one thing certain—if every one would do as much to educate the people to temperance as the makers of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey do there would be no such thing as intemperance. I will be very glad if my interview will be the means of saving some of my poor sisters and brothers who before this have not heard of the great good they may receive from the use of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey."



Thousands of letters like this one from Mr. Moore are received from men and women who have been restored to normal health by the use of the world's greatest tonic-stimulant and invigorator.

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey is an absolutely pure distillation of malted grain; great care being used to have every kernel thoroughly malted, thus destroying the germ and producing a predigested liquid food in the form of a malt essence, which is the most effective tonic stimulant and invigorator known to science; softened by warmth and moisture, its palatability and freedom from injurious substances render it so that it can be retained by the most sensitive stomach.

If you wish to keep young, strong and vigorous, and have on your cheeks the glow of perfect health, take Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey regularly, according to directions. It tones and strengthens the heart action and purifies the entire system. It is recognized as the great family medicine everywhere. Duffy Malt Whiskey Co., Rochester, N. Y.

What Successful Men Do With Their Money

What They Get In Returns

Push aside the buildings and look at the ground in the heart of the business district, divided into various sized lots, owned by the most successful business men and by the banking and other financial institutions of Los Angeles.

Is this ground a good investment?

Turn to the Assessor's Records and you will be fully answered. Here is what you will find:

Assessed Valuations 1896-1908:

Trustee Property No. 1.	Broadway Central Building.	Union Trust Building.	Whole Business District.

Have not you any idea that this ground will continue to grow in value? Do you suppose you could persuade the owners of this ground to sell it and loan the money on mortgage or invest it in residential property or buy a "hole that wanted to be dug in the ground," or buy Government Bonds, or do anything else with the money?

If you want to be convinced that there will be future growth in ground values along Main, Spring and Broadway between First and Seventh, take a look at Business Property values on State Street, Chicago, where they are as high as $400 per square foot. If you fancy there is the extreme end of everything, glance at No. 1 Wall Street, New York, worth in 1906 more than $600 per square foot, while the highest values in Los Angeles do not exceed $60 per square foot.

PLEASE TELL US WHY!

You insist on "losing your money" by investing it where it earns less—where it does not grow—where you do not realize as much as these successful men realize on their money.

Bring the buildings back on to the ground. They are very necessary parts of the city of Los Angeles. The merchants require the store space for their use. The business of the community demands the office space.

For the use of these buildings, not only the tenants but all of the people who live in Los Angeles, all of the people in the San Gabriel Valley, all the people within 200 miles of Los Angeles pay rent. As the city grows these people pay more rent and the rental returns increase as the followings figures show:

Chicago:
Corner of State and Washington.
1890 rental $24,000
1900 rental 30,000
1907 rental 40,000 94 per cent. increase
Indianapolis:
A Washington-street store.
1897 rental $3,600
1907 rental 7,000 44 per cent. increase
Seattle:
Corner Second and Columbia.
1893 rental $2,700
1898 rental 3,275
1900 rental 3,600
1900 rental 3,850
1904 rental 4,400
1907 rental 6,600 144 per cent. increase
Los Angeles:
A Spring-street store.
1896 rental $ 4,800
1898 rental 6,120
1900 rental 8,775
1905 rental 12,050
1907 rental 15,750 229 per cent. increase
Spokane:
A Riverside-avenue store.
1890 rental $ 1,530
1893 rental 2,800
1896 rental 4,800
1900 rental 7,650
1905 rental 9,600
1907 rental 11,790 672 per cent. increase

Do you have any idea that these rentals will be reduced? They never have been in the history of Los Angeles.

Turn to the Eastern cities and see what is the history of rentals and how high they finally come to be, and you will then understand what is going to be the result in Los Angeles.

In Eastern cities actual rates are being paid as follows:

Chicago......$6.00..$27.00 per sq. ft.
Indianapolis..$3.75..$ 8.00 per sq. ft.
St. Louis....$6.00..$14.00 per sq. ft.
New York..$12.00..$37.00 per sq. ft.

Successful men know very well from experience that their income is steadily increased by the advance in rentals and that the ground they own steadily grows in value, doubling in value every ten to fifteen years.

We do not want to invest your money for you.

We do not want a commission for placing your money.

We will give you facts that will enable you to invest your own money and get the same results that these successful men get.

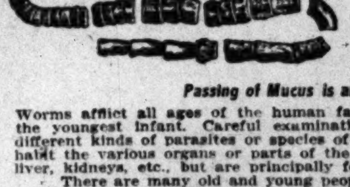
Stomach and Bowel Trouble?

ARE YOUR CHILDREN PUNY AND ANAEMIC?



Stomach, Intestinal, Liver Worms, Tape Worms, Thread Worms, and all other parasites which infest the human body, and are the cause of so many chronic troubles, can be removed without inconvenience or fasting. My treatment is absolutely harmless and can be taken by the youngest child or most feeble person.

Passing of Mucus is an Important Symptom

Worms afflict all ages of the human family from the oldest person down to the youngest infant. Careful examination has shown some fifteen or more different kinds of parasites or species of worms which have been found to inhabit the various organs or parts of the human system, such as the stomach, liver, kidneys, etc., but are principally found in the stomach and intestines.

There are many old and young people who have for years been doctoring for a multitude of different diseases which they never had and on the removal of the different species of worms were entirely cured, freed from sickness.

Children and grown people when troubled with worms have more or less of these symptoms, or at least forms have caused all of the symptoms given below in different individuals at certain periods of their life.

PASSING OF MUCUS IMPORTANT SYMPTOM

The usual symptoms of Worms are intestinal irritation, pains in the belly, irritation or itching at the lower end of the bowels, alternation of diarrhoea and costiveness, great thirst, and variable and often voracious appetite. The patient sometimes becomes hungry almost immediately after eating heartily and at other times the appetite is feeble and depraved. There is a foetid breath; the complexion is pale or shallow. There is pain of the bowels and at the pit of the stomach, with occasional purging and a good deal of gastric distress. The head is much affected, sometimes painfully. Worms may also be suspected where there is emaciation, and especially weakness of the bowels, accompanied by discharges of slime and mucus.

I diagnose and tell you whether you have any of these parasites or not.

SHRINE CIRCUS TENTS STRUCK.

Big Sum Is Realized for the Children's Hospital.

Great Crowd Entertained at Closing Performance.

Jim Jeffries Drawing Card at the Final Doings.

Seventy-five hundred dollars is the estimate of Potentate W. P. Jeffries on the net proceeds of the Shriners' circus, which came to a close last night. There are still several reports to be received before the actual total can be known, but Jeffries believes that later returns will show his estimate to be too small rather than too large. All this will go as an endowment to the Children's Hospital, for which it had been hoped to raise $10,000.

Last night was the banner night of the entire week. Not only was every seat in the reserved section sold, but it was necessary to call upon the 50-cent seats to hold the overflow. On the bleachers were many who had paid the reserved seat price, but were unable to find a place in the grand stand or boxes.

The nobles who had charge of the doors estimated that fully $2400 was taken in last night on entrance tickets alone. In addition, more than $500 was received from the sale of seats for the boxing match and concert.

"The success of our circus has certainly been most gratifying," said Mr. Jeffries. "Our expenses were enormous, but the receipts also were large, and we shall have a goodly sum to turn over to charity. It certainly looks as if the Shriner circus were firmly established as an annual affair."

The innovation of securing a real, genuine circus to help out the performance has met with the unqualified approval of the public, and it is not likely that an effort ever again will be made to hold a Shriner circus without securing the assistance of some professional talent.

BETTER THAN LAST YEAR.

It is estimated that the profits this year will exceed those of last season somewhat, though not to the extent which the increased patronage would lead one to suppose. Last year the reserved seat price was $1.50; this year it was but $1. Last year practically nothing was expended in paying for talent but this year that was the great item of expense.

The cost of hiring a great circus for an entire week was enormous and necessitated large receipts in order to pay expenses. Considering the obstacles which had to be overcome, the Nobles feel very much gratified at their success, though every one connected with the show is tired out and glad that the end has come.

One of the surprises which the directors of the affair met was the comparatively small demand for general admission tickets. It had been anticipated that two thousand would be sold every night, but such was not the case. All of the reserved seats, however, were occupied at every night performance.

No account has been kept of the actual number of people who visited the circus. It is known that many tickets were sold which were not used, as many of the nobles bought seats for every night in the week. There is a large number of tickets yet out for which no accounting has been made. Each noble of Al Malaikah Temple received a quota of tickets to sell and many of them have not reported.

JEFFRIES DRAWS.

The announcement that James J. Jeffries would box five rounds at the close of the regular performance proved a great drawing card last night. During the big show, nobles passed through the tent, selling tickets for the fistic encounter. The manner in which they did their trafficking aroused the admiration of the "spielers" of the circus and their nerve evoked sighs of admiration.

No one in the audience was permitted to escape the ticket sellers and when the regular performance was over, scarcely a man or woman left the tent. All the well-known Shriners and their friends were deluged with tickets, every agent demanding that some of his be taken.

Postmaster Flint disposed of a large number by the simple plan of thrusting a handful into a man's pocket and demanding sundry dollars from his victim in return. Rather than endure the supercilious glances of those who already had been "worked" and therefore looked down upon the "cheap man," they invariably paid up.

One man announced that he had twenty tickets to the concerts and twenty-five to the boxing contest. An alert Shriner heard him make the statement and hastily sold him twenty-five more of each before he realized what was happening. Excellent 5-cent cigars were sold at sums ranging from 10 cents to $1, according to the readiness with which the purchaser parted with his money.

SHORTAGE OF CHANGE.

When a $5 coin was tendered in return for a 5-cent purchase, it invariably went down into the pocket of the vender with the announcement that no change was available, and that no time could be spared to go after any.

If victims showed hesitancy about being separated from their money, they were gently chided and informed that but once a year can they find opportunity to contribute to charity through the medium of the Shriner circus.

The great feature last night was the boxing contest which followed the regular programme. It had been announced that James J. Jeffries would box five rounds with his brother, Jack. The appearance of the champion was the signal for a round of generous applause. But when Leo Youngworth, clad in regulation ring costume, made his appearance, the reception he received was vociferous.

"Jim" entered the ring clad in a complete suit of black tights, while "Jack" wore a récherché costume of Turkish toweling. Leo Youngworth presented the striking figure, however, in a resplendent suit of white tights, which showed off his athletic form to perfection.

The first round was between the champion and his brother. With the agility of a featherweight the big fellow hopped around the ring, evoking cheers from the audience every time he landed a blow.

LEO COMES UP SMILING.

When the gong rang for the second round, Leo Youngworth dashed into the arena as if whipping champions were his daily occupation. Smash! Bang! Crash! Three times he sent his fist with resounding cracks into the air. Then he saw an opening and with the rapidity of lightning he landed a lefter on the point of Jeffries' chin. The champion grinned and Leo looked aggrieved.

Youngworth tried again, and, with all his might, drove a right hander to the wind. Again Jim grinned, and Leo looked more aggrieved. Just as he was getting ready for a third and last assault the gong rang.

The third round was a repetition of the first, though Jim warmed up, and sent several punches home, which caused his brother to grunt, and the youngsters on the bleechers to shriek with approval.

The fourth round opened with Youngworth plainly determined to place Jeffries on the list of has-beens once and for all. He jumped about the ring like a frog, planting blows everywhere except on the body of his opponent.

To encourage him the big fellow obligingly stuck out his face, and pointed out the best spots to send in sleep-producers. Leo was too excited to take full advantage, however, and failed to score a knockout. He began to show the effects of his fast footwork, and, just as the champion braced himself for a swing which would have sent the popular Shriner into the realms of dreams, Youngworth made a wild jump for the bell and himself rang the knell on the round.

The fifth round saw Jack Jeffries strong and ready for the fray. He got off wrong, however, and, as he was plainly getting the worst of it, Youngworth thought he saw an opportunity to lend a helping hand, and also to finish the common enemy once and for all time.

COULDN'T DOWN HIM.

With the spring of a panther he flew through the air and landed on Jim's neck. Jeff gently brushed him aside and devoted his attention to Jack. Again Youngworth made an attack and again he was repulsed. Finally, disgusted with the treatment he was receiving, and determined to show he was still to be counted on, Youngworth grabbed up a big slap-stick and hit Jim a resounding crack. Before any retaliation was possible the gong announced the end of the round.

It was a good-humored crowd generally that witnessed the show. As the different Shriners who helped make the entertainment a success, were recognized by their friends, they were greeted with endearing phrases. Al Levy, clad as a modern Cleopatra, came in for a big share of attention. He was the recipient of countless packages of chewing gum and other dainties, and he received many invitations to imbibe in pink lemonade and soda pop.

Herbert Cornish's "Merry Widow" hat provoked the bitter envy of the matinée girls. It was undeniably the largest hat in the tent, and the name of the milliner who designed it was tearfully demanded.

The Shriners are all loud in their praises of the manner in which the managers and employés of the Sells-Floto Circus worked for the success of the entertainment, and they are grateful, too, for the generous support of the public.

ALL READY.

PUGS REPORTED IN CONDITION.

MEN ON TUESDAY'S TRY-OUT CARD SLACK UP WORK.

Winner of Rube Smith-Van Horn Go May Get a Match With Mike Twin Sullivan—Jeff's Opening Card Will Probably Not Be Played, Owing to More Hard Luck.

There was a great business at the training camps yesterday, for with the close of the day, some of the boys cut out their hard work and will take life easily from now until Tuesday night. The try-out boys, who are to furnish the programme, have been exercising like real champions and are certainly doing more hard work than real champs do, for each one seems to think his future depends on a victory this time.

Van Horn was one that put in a real stiff day's work. He took a long trip on the road in the morning and then in the afternoon finished the day with four fast rounds with big gloves. He is said to be in good shape and promises to put up the best battle in him, for if he beats Rube Smith again he has a chance to get a main event with Mike Sullivan. Smith has the same opportunity and it goes without saying that he has neglected nothing that will make him ready for Tuesday night.

The Turk is hoping that he will win his fight with Collins and has had a sufficient amount of hard work with Flynn and Rube Smith at the Eastside Club to put him in good shape. The weight of 162 pounds seems to favor the Turk. Collins says he will be at the weight on Tuesday and these two should give a cracking good bout.

One of the interesting things promised is the fight between Mike Kutchos and Young McGovern. The latter will weigh about 112 pounds and Kutchos will probably weigh 114 pounds. Mac is very anxious to redeem himself for the bad showing with Coulon and declares he will go at Kutchos from the first to the finish. This one doesn't talk much but promises to give McGovern something to think about.

The card for Tuesday was completed yesterday by the selection of Jack Anderson and Roy Drake for the first of the six round preliminaries. The card now consists of Smith and Van Horn, Collins and the Turk, McGovern and Kutchos, Rose and Lucca and Anderson and Drake.

WILSON ON TOP.

Finishes First in Qualifying Round for Members Cup of Los Angeles Country Club.

With an almost ideal day, links in excellent condition and the putting greens as smooth and as hard as a billiard table, forty-three members of the Los Angeles Country Club entered the golf tournament for members' cup in the qualifying round, eighteen holes, handicap medal play, yesterday afternoon. Play was slow and tedious, with very little brilliancy, save in the case of S. C. Lines, last year's champion of the State, who made the entire course in 77, one less than bogey. There were several very heavy handicaps and Lines was defeated by one in the net score. P. B. Wilson with a handicap of 8, made the round in 84, leaving him a net score of 76 points. R. H. Ingraham tied Lines's score on a handicap of 8 points. He finished in hard luck and missed the last put, a distance of only two feet, by less than that many inches.

J. H. Jevne, W. B. Walton and Lines were started evenly. The two former finished with a score of 95 points and had many mishaps along the middle of the course and on the "in" course. Jevne drove into the deep grass at hole 16, and lost his ball. Wilshire landed in the barranca at No. 11 and rolled his sphere against a bunker several times during the play. Both men are experts on the Country Club links, and yet failed to qualify. W. B. Walton, who had no handicap, finished well inside the limit, with 88 as a score.

A net score of 94 was the limit for those eligible to the match play. Five of those who started, dropped out on account of bad luck in playing the first few holes. The entire list with winners qualifiers and handicaps, is as follows:

Representative of Radio Telephone Company on the Way to Meet the Ships at San Diego—German and Italian Navies Fall in Line—What It Means to Ships.

When on board his flagship, the Connecticut, Admiral Evans can sit in h cabin and talk with the commande of any one of his great fleet of sixtee battleships now on their way to Sa Diego and the Los Angeles ports. Th is accomplished by means of the delicate instruments of the Radio Tel phone Company of New York.

Before Admiral Evans left Hampto Roads with his fleet for the wonderf voyage through the Straits of Magellan, he asserted that positively h must have every battleship and tende equipped with this wireless telepho service and the Navy Department i stalled altogether twenty-eight ma chines.

Thus the United States leads all t navies of the world in adopting th innovation, but now, and since t sailing of the fleet for the Pacif Baron des Planches, Italian Ambass dor at Washington, for his gover ment, and Baron Von Sternberg, Ge man Ambassador, for his governmen have signed contracts with the co pany to equip all the battleships the Italian and German navies wi the wireless telephone.

And soon it is expected that t steamers on the Pacific Coast will equipped with the wireless telepho as thoroughly as are at present t

ABOUT LUMPS IN WOMAN'S BREAST

"Lumps in the Breast Sure Death."

Dr. S. R. Chamley, the acknowledged authority in America on Cancer, says in his book on cancers and tumors cured without knife or pain, that any lump in woman's breast is cancer. The book teaches that any tumor, lump or sore on the lip, face or anywhere six months is cancer. The Doctor offers $1000 if he fails to cure any cancer he treats before it poisons deep glands, and charges nothing until cured. Strictly reliable; no X-Ray or other swindle. The book is full of ministers, doctors and millionaires' testimonials, many of them right here. The leading newspapers and medical journals the world over have given him great praise; no man is doing a grander work for humanity. He has been curing cancers over a third of a century. Investigate his absolute guarantee. The book is sent free to those who describe their cancer, 50 cents to others. The reader may save a life by sending this to some one with cancer. SAN PEDRO, April 11.—Owners of [illegible] launches and power boats [illegible] union, including the big [illegible] of the San Pedro Transportation Company and the Meteor Boat [illegible], have formed a combination [illegible] fixing the round-trip fare from [illegible] to the battleships of Admiral [illegible] fleet, due to arrive from San [illegible] on the afternoon of April 18, at [illegible] for adults and 25 cents for [illegible] included in the agreement [illegible] all the available launches. All boats will be fitted with life preservers and other life-saving apparatus.

The fifty-seven launches that have entered into the combination will issue only one official ticket to the fleet, good returning on any launch. This will remove the objectionable feature of passengers waiting for hours on board a battleship waiting for some particular launch to come off and bring them ashore, as has been the condition formerly.

UNION SEES LIGHT.

The members of the local Longshoremen's Union have seen a great light. During the week their feelings were considerably ruffled by the refusal of captains of steam schooners discharging at this port to serve them coffee and lunch at 10 a.m. and 3 p.m., under an order recently issued by officers of the Ship Owners' Association. So sorely wounded were they that during the week, a "coffee" strike resulted on the big carrier Nann Smith and on the National City, although these devotees of the totem greatly needed the work. Other workers were at once procured, and the discharging of the two steamers in question went right ahead without interruption. After ranting and threatening vengeance for several days, the Longshoremen's Union meekly passed a resolution last night temporarily "waiving" the right to be served with coffee and lunch at the hours stated.

HER ENGINES BALK.

All was merry this morning on board the steamer City of Long Beach, shortly before the hour arrived for her departure for Ensenada, via San Diego, under new management. Two hundred passengers and guests were congregated on the well-equipped craft, the ballroom floor had been smoothed, the band played gayly, champagne corks popped, and Capt. Kinney paced the bridge, illuminated with a well-pleased smile.

When the order came to throw off the lines and put to sea, suddenly mirth was transformed into grief. Up from the bowels of the steamer came the chief engineer, begrimed and sweaty, and announced that the gasoline engines refused to do their work and enter into the spirit of the festivities. After an hour's tinkering and swearing, the engines refused still to revolute, and the 200 passengers were taken aboard the steamship Queen for San Diego, and will arrive in time to welcome Admiral Evans's fleet. The City of Long Beach will get to sea tonight, if the refractory engines can be persuaded to work, and hopes to pick up its passengers at San Diego and continue the proposed excursion to Ensenada.

Slosus Claussen, 16-year-old son of Martin Slaussen, of No. 318 North Center street, was probably fatally wounded by an accidental rifle shot today. He was out in the hills with a 22-caliber rifle. The shot took effect in the left breast, and is supposed to have penetrated the liver.

After having lain probably for several hours unconscious, the boy was picked up on the road between San Pedro and Wilmington by T. C. Hawthorne of this city.

SAN PEDRO BRIEFS.

George Ray, colored, aged 60 years, who has been employed in a Front-street drug store, fell dead of heart failure while at work this morning.

United States Marine Surgeon W. A. Weldon today reported Capt. Charles Ranier, master of the steamer Francis H. Leggett, to the authorities at Washington, complaining that he repeatedly violates the quarantine regulations at this port. The regulations provide that steamers touching at San Francisco shall anchor outside and await inspection. Dr. Weldon says this is the third time that Capt. Ranier has violated the order.

RUM-MUDDLED, ENDS HIS LIFE.

SOUTH PASADENA YOUNG MAN SHOOTS HIMSELF.

Beats His Wife, Is Severely Punished by an Acquaintance and Then Turns Revolver on Himself. Hotel Guest Thrown from Overturning Electric Runabout.

Office of The Times, No. 28 S. Raymond Ave.

PASADENA, April 12.—Insane with rage and the fumes of wine, supposedly purchased from a "blind pig" in South Pasadena, Harold V. Mead, a young man 22 years old, beat his wife, was later thrashed by Roy Torrance, an acquaintance, and wound up the afternoon by shooting himself through the head.

The deed was done with an old-style 44-caliber Colt's revolver. The bullet entered near the left temple, and came out the roof of the skull. He died ten minutes later.

Ever since he was 15 years of age the young man is said to have acted peculiarly. He married on New Year's Day, 1907, and since that time he lived with his wife in apartments in the "old bank" building, at the corner of Diamond and Center streets in South Pasadena. From time to time he had been under the influence of liquor, and quarreled with his wife. He was a painter by trade, and had not been employed regularly for some time. Yesterday noon he went home and became involved in an argument with his wife over a magazine. He was slightly intoxicated at the time, and as he talked became more infuriated.

He is said to have grabbed his wife and with his bare knuckles lashed her face to shreds and blackened her eyes. Roomers in the building came to Mrs. Mead's rescue. One of them was Torrance, and Mead resented Torrance's interference. Later the two men met and Mead called Torrance many names and threatened to fight him. Torrance was provoked at Mead's treatment of his wife, and took it upon himself to give Mead the "licking of his life."

Mead hurried to his grandmother's, Mrs. Ruth A. Alexander, where his wife had taken refuge. He found that the woman was protected and his uncle, F. C. Chatterton, tried to bar the way. The man threatened to kill every one in the house, but later retreated and went to his apartments where he loaded his possessions into a vehicle and drove to Chatterton's place, at No. 1421 Linden street. He stepped out of the buggy with a big revolver in his hands and started for the house. Chatterton warned him to "clear out" and Mead answered in curses. He stepped behind an orange tree and as he rounded the other side, Chatterton saw him pull the trigger of his revolver, the end of the barrel being close to the head. He lingered for a few minutes after the shot, the spark of life rapidly fading out and by the time the doctor reached his side he was dead.

It was stated late last night at Eggleston & Son's funeral parlors in South Pasadena where the remains are resting, that funeral arrangements had not been made. It is probable that Coroner Hartwell will not call an inquest on the case, writing out a certificate on the unrefutable evidence of eye witnesses to the tragedy.

POSTPONE FINAL ACTION.

After several hours of discussion of ways and means of financing the improvement of Tournament Park, which will necessitate the expenditure of many thousands of dollars, the board of directors of the Tournament of Roses Association last night adjourned to meet next Friday evening. At that time it is hoped a definite scheme can be evolved so that the committees may go to work and the improvement of the park be accomplished speedily and without making any association or organization bear the brunt of the expenditure.

On account of the widening of Wilson avenue the grandstand and track will have to be moved and as this is the case the directors propose to build a new and more commodious stand as well as lengthen the track to a full half mile, an improvement that means money and lots of it to do the work.

REFUGE IN CACTUS BED.

What might have proved a tragedy resulted in comparatively little damage, when Baron Schnider and Miss Gladys Scudder, both guests at Hotel Raymond, were thrown out of an overturning electric runabout on the automobile drive at Hotel Raymond yesterday afternoon.

As the couple ascended the winding road, Baron Schnider in some way lost control of the machine and the automobile made straight over the bank for a bed of cactus. The Baron jumped after shouting a warning to Miss Scudder. He landed safely but Miss Scudder was not so fortunate and landed on the outer edge of the cactus bed, and her hands were much scratched by the thorns. The machine turned over and would have fallen on Miss Scudder had not the heavy cactus stopped its rolling. The machine was not much damaged. TENNIS AND GOLF ATTRACT.

Interest was divided among the society set yesterday in the championship tournament at Annandale and the tennis and putting tournaments at the Pasadena Country Club. Both drew large crowds.

In the morning the woman's tournament for the championship in doubles began and some interesting matches were played off. Probably the closest was between Mmes. Warden and Pierce and Mrs. C. C. Perkins and Miss Nevin, the score being 6-2, 6-8, 12-10. The gallery was well filled and the players were frequently applauded. Mrs. H. Page Warden and Mrs. Samuel Couples Pierce won the finals, defeating Miss Vilas and Mrs. Orbinson, 6-2, 6-0.

In a putting contest for three prizes offered by Mme. O'Gorman, Mrs. Samuel Couples Pierce won first place and Mrs. H. Page Warden, second place. Those taking part in the tournament were Mrs. H. Page Warden and Mrs. Samuel Couples Pierce, Mrs. Callery and Mrs. Harrison I. Drummond; Mrs. C. C. Perkins and Miss Nevin, Mrs. Nevin and Miss Sellers; Mrs. Vilas and Mrs. Orbinson.

BUYS IN NEWSPAPER.

J. H. Pryor has purchased half interest in the Pasadena Evening News of this city. He buys the interest of Mrs. Walter Melick and following a business trip in the northern part of the State, will return to this city and enter into a joint management of the paper with Editor Lon F. Chapin, who holds the other half interest. It is announced that there will be no change in the policy of the paper.

LOCAL VETERANS REJOICE.

Pasadena members of the G.A.R. were almost swept off their feet with delight today, when the news was received that the annual encampment in 1909 will be held in Pasadena. They are already beginning to make plans for the reception and it is expected that other municipal bodies will join in the movement at the proper time, so that the event will be handled in true Pasadena style.

"PULLS" PHARMACY.

Chief of Police H. H. Favour in person "pulled" the Pasadena Pharmacy at No. 21 East Colorado street of which George D. Johnson is the proprietor. This is the third time within the past two years that Mr. Johnson or his partner has been arrested.

About 9 o'clock last night Chief of Police H. H. Favour walked into the store and proceeded to the rear where he found two men drinking. They were working the system that is well known to those who are "good" in the drug store. The proprietor never sold the "booze" outright. The customer walked into the store as if he owned the place, went to the inclosed place to the rear, opened the refrigerator and took out a quart bottle of beer. This he opened and drank. He walked out again and dropped a quarter on the counter. This was for those who were "on."

Johnson was arrested early in the fall for selling liquor without a license or a prescription, and at that time paid a fine of $200. He escaped a jail sentence in addition, which would have been the limit. This time the police believe that he will get both.

Johnson furnished a $300 bail last night. He will appear in court on Monday morning.

It is said by one who was for a while employed in the drug store that the income from the "booze" trade amounted to nearly $1000 a week.

OCEAN PARK.

OCEAN PARK, April 11.—The municipal campaign came to a close this evening, with public meetings held by the two opposing parties. The Good Government enthusiasts with band and torches marched along the front to the northern end of the city, gathering force as it proceeded. On the way it encountered the musicians, and followers of the Progressive Independents, who were en route to Venice, and almost together the opposing forces marched to Windward avenue. There the forces divided. The Independents held their exercises in a tent on the highway, while the Good Government candidates and their friends occupied the auditorium.

At both meetings the candidates made brief talks, and presented their claims for the suffrages of the people.

PUSH LICENSE LAW TO FRONT.

DANCE HALL QUESTION ARGUED IN LONG BEACH.

Members of City Administration Believe That Beneath the Attack on the Hundred-Dollar License Fee There Is a Deeper Motive—Weed-Cleaning Day Before Fleet Arrives.

LONG BEACH, April 11.—Because the city saw fit to specify in its tax and license ordinance that public dance halls operated for profit must pay a license of $100 a month, the old abused band question again surges to the front, it being claimed that the provision was inserted to discriminate in favor of the auditorium dances, which pay no license, being allowed solely to augment the fund required to keep the band which gives ten free concerts every week. The manager of the Majestic dancing pavilion, J. Vogelbaum, refused to take out a license and was arrested, charged with violating the ordinance, the penalty for which is $500 or ninety days in jail, the maximum penalty allowed under the charter.

In court this morning, Attorney Daly demurred to the complaint, alleging that the ordinance on which it was based is unreasonable, unjust, discriminating and class legislation. He contended that in licensing dance halls the city recognized it as a legal business and, no moral question being involved, so-called police regulation is unnecessary. He attacked the clause prohibiting the operation of dance halls on Sunday and averred that in a country which conceded every man free rights, agnostics, skeptics and infidels are equal with Christians, and that a Sunday law is unconstitutional and void. The attorney also declared that the blanket penalty imposed is void and that every class of business under the ordinance should be penalized separately.

City Attorney Long in reply quoted authorities upholding the city's position in the matter and Judge Lawson took the demurrer under advisement until Thursday next when he will pass upon its sufficiency.

A well-defined feeling exists among the members of the city administration that beneath the attack on the $100 license fee there is a deeper motive, made apparent by Attorney Daly's argument and quotation of opinions on the clause prohibiting Sunday dances. They agree that this form of amusement would attract big crowds of worldly-minded visitors, but it would prove an objectionable feature to the city which claims to be the queen of chautauquas and, should this attack on the police regulation of Sunday closing be successful, would pave the way to a wide-open town on Sunday, which would prove a black eye to the city's reputation of a spotless town, so it is held.

LOOKING FOR LEWIS.

"Lewis the Light," the religious fanatic, whose claim that he is the Almighty and must be paid tithes to keep his devastating hand from blighting peaceful homes has terrorized many people, has broken out in a new spasm. Under the persuasive influence of Chief Williams, Lewis has been quiet for a month, but today he distributed green slips of paper about town in which he claims that Christ did not die, but was in a state of suspended animation for three days, then escaped from the tomb with the aid of a gardener, and with his father, Joseph, fled to a foreign country where he married, and Lewis is his direct descendant and personal representative on earth, and must be paid tithes. Chief Williams has his men looking for Lewis, and will take steps to effectually stop any more blasphemous publications.

SEASHORE NOTES.

The silver trophy cup offered by the Southern California Whist Association in session for three days at Hotel Virginia, was won last night by Messrs. Hendricks, Foote, Merrill and Loftus of the Los Angeles Whist Club. Second place was won by Mmes. Buckler, Waterman, De Camp and Dickson of the Women's Club, Los Angeles, who won the cup a year ago. Eight teams competed. Final scores were very close, the winners being only one-half a point ahead. At the close of the contest, President Musselman entertained the members at luncheon. The next meeting of the association will be October 21, 22 and 23, at Mira Mar, near Santa Barbara.

Reciting that the arrival of the great Atlantic fleet in the roadstead on April 18, will attract more visitors than ever before in the city, and that they will get first impressions not easily effaced the City Council today adopted a resolution urging and requesting that on Wednesday, April 15, each and every property owner in the city clean up his premises, and the parking in front of his lots by cutting and clearing off the rubbish and weeds and either burning them or placing in piles in the street to be gathered by the city teams, in order that all can rejoice in civic cleanliness and not be abashed when visitors view the city.

The yacht races on Friday of fleet week will be one of the big features of the occasion. Two races have been arranged. One for motor-boats will be run in heats, beginning at 10:30 a.m., over a course from Alamitos Bay to Hotel Virginia. The entries are: Daisy (A. C. Parsons, Naples;) Primrose (Shirley Ward, Alamitos Bay;) Water Wagon (Joe Pugh, San Pedro.) The yacht races will be over a triangle course of twenty-one miles, and will start at 1 o'clock. There are nine entries for this event: Minerva, P. P. Spaulding; Venus, R. R. Bradley; Myth, C. M. Richardson; Marie, P. H. Ducker; Muriel, V. B. Stewart; Merlin, J. A. Gibson; Shadow, W. F. It cost Marvon A. Simpson of Colorado Springs $350 to have his trousers pressed yesterday. He sent his wearables to a local pantorium, neglecting to remove from one of the pockets a $300 diamond ring. Later he though of it and hurried to his tailor's, but the ring was gone. Simpson thinks the messenger carried the trousers on his arm and that the ring dropped out somewhere on the street.

Eight hundred chairs and 7000 feet of rope arrived this morning for use in the Bentley Grand Operahouse, a modern structure of brick and concrete on the Pike, which will open next Wednesday. President Bichowsky of the Pomona Board of Trade has sent to the local Chamber of Commerce a photograph of the first train that ever entered Long Beach. The picture was taken in 1887. The locomotive looks like a thresher engine and the coach like an old-fashioned street car.

W. H. Balleu, a barber, was seriously injured last night in an auto accident. Councilman Callahan in an electric auto stopped suddenly to avoid a collision with a touring car, and Balleu, riding in the rear on a bicycle, crashed against the machine and was thrown. New Quartermaster Arrives at the Soldiers' Home and Assumes the Office.

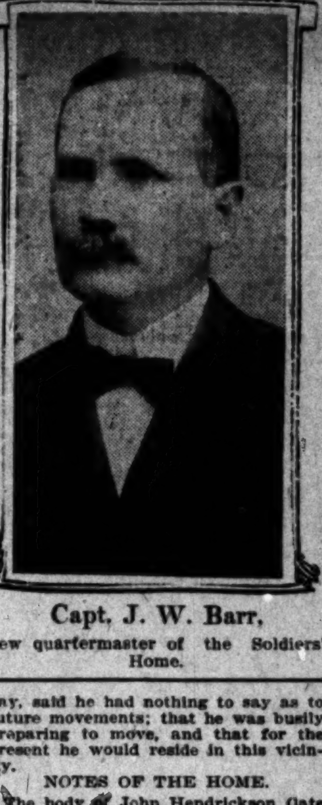
SOLDIERS' HOME, April 11.—Capt. J. W. Barr arrived at this place last evening, and today assumed the duties of quartermaster and commissary-of-subsistence of this branch, vice Capt. E. H. Parsons, resigned. Capt. Barr was born in Greenville, Ill., in 1861, "to late," he regretfully says, "to take part in the great struggle." He, however, got in line for military duty—should that prove necessary thereafter—by several years' service as captain of Co. F, Eighth Infantry, National Guard of Illinois, resigning from that when, in 1885, he came to California. He took up his residence in Los Angeles and was for several years in the general offices of the Santa Fé Railroad Company, resigning from that in 1895, to become private secretary to Col. J. G. Rowland, then Governor of this branch. When the latter was transferred to the Leavenworth branch, Capt. Barr accompanied him and on the death of Col. Rowland continued in the same capacity, under succeeding governors, until his appointment as quartermaster of this branch.

Capt. Barr is accompanied to his new home—or rather, as he observes, to his old home—by his 6-year-old boy, Rowland, and by his sister, Mrs. Hattie E. Toy, and her young son and their maid. The captain expresses himself as delighted to get back to California's southland, and is especially impressed with the extensive improvements which have taken place since he left here more than eleven years ago.

Capt. E. H. Parsons when seen today, said he had nothing to say as to future movements; that he was busily preparing to move, and that for the present he would reside in this vicinity.



Capt. J. W. Barr,
new quartermaster of the Soldiers' Home.

The Discovery That Unlocked The Imprisoned Hearing

If You Are Deaf, Read and Re-Read Every Word of This Wonderful Treatise and Discovery on the Cure of Deafness

I. HOW THE DISCOVERY WAS MADE.

In treating nose and throat diseases, Drs. Shores and Shores found that certain medicines, when combined and regularly applied, reduced inflammation and swelling in the nose and throat.

The doctors knew that if they could get this medication into the air tubes of the ears regularly and without violence they could cure deafness.

Day and night they worked on this problem.

For several years they tried every method known to medical science, but were baffled at the end of each separate attempt.

Then they threw away as useless all the maxims of the schools and all the methods of authority and struck out on the basis of their own experience.

Working along their own lines, they found the true method of carrying medication to the diseased parts of the ear passages.

Under the gentle application of the medicine they saw the imprisoned sense of sound slowly free itself.

They saw the falling of the shackles of deafness.

They saw the unfolding of the principle upon which all future treatment for diseases of the ear was to be founded.

II. THE ERRORS OF EAR DOCTORS

Years ago, when Drs. Shores & Shores first made a specialty of diseases of the ear, doctors relied entirely on operations and forcible dilations of the ear tubes.

Specialists in America and in Europe used knife, catheter and air bags.

They cut out bones in the middle ear.

They bored holes in ear drums.

They drove instruments through the nose into the ear tubes to force or pry them open.

They forced air through to the drums of the ears.

They blew medicines against the walls of the throat in the form of liquid "sprays."

No benefit was received from these harsh methods.

Persons only slightly deaf were thus made completely deaf.

Inflammation in the ears was set up, the ear drums were destroyed, abscesses were formed.

Lifelong injury and suffering were inflicted, deafness was intensified.

That was the course then, as it is now, of the authorized methods of the schools. That was why doctors did not cure deafness.

III. WHAT IS THE EAR?

The ear to many people is simply the outer appendage attached like a shell to each side of the head.

But this outer appendage is merely a device to arrest sound waves and protect the ear channel running into the head, into which sound is directed.

The actual ear is a mechanical arrangement inside the head.

Two tubes or air passages unite with this mechanism.

One is from the outer ear, into which you can insert the tip of your little finger.

The other is from the upper and back part of the throat and is called the tube of Eustachias, or Eustachian tube.

A curtain of living tissue stretched tightly, and called the ear drums, separates these two passageways.

The mechanism consists of the ear drum, the bones connected therewith, and the nerves that run from the drum to the brain.

If you stick your fingers into your ears or otherwise shut out the free passage of air in the outer ways to the ear drum, you cannot hear.

If you choke up the inner or Eustachian passages to the ears, you cannot hear.

Why?

Because there must be an equal air pressure on each side of the membraneous curtain or ear drum to make it vibrate and thus telegraph sound to the brain along the nerve wires.

The ear drum is like any other drum. If it has free air pressure on both sides a concussion upon its surface will cause a resonant sound.

IV. NOT MECHANICS, BUT MEDICATION.

There are two ways of freeing a gaspipe choked with frozen earth.

One is to run an iron rod through it. This makes a small channel and allows a diminished quantity of gas to flow through.

The other is to pass vapor of alcohol into the pipe.

The vapor strikes the frozen earth, softens and melts first one bit and then another, until the whole frozen mass crumbles by degrees into a fine powder, and the pipe is free again.

Where force is used to free a frozen pipe a damaged pipe is the result.

Where an alcoholic vapor is used to free a pipe, no damage is done.

It is the same with deafness.

Where force is used to open the closed ear channels, damage is done.

What follows?

Intense pain.

Inflammation.

Earache.

Abscesses.

Permanent injury.

Where medicated vapor is used no harm results.

By its use the obstruction is removed a little at a time until it is all absorbed or carried away.

The diseased surfaces are healed.

The disease is driven out.

Perfect hearing follows.

V. THE CAUSE OF DEAFNESS

Deafness, except in those rare cases wherein it is due to accident, is caused by disease affecting the throat.

Pharyngitis, Laryngitis, Rhinitis, Tonsilitis, Bronchitis, and all the many diseases affecting the membrane of the throat may result in deafness.

Scarlet Fever, Diphtheria, Typhoid Fever produce inflammation of the throat, which often extends to the ear tubes, and cause deafness.

Any disease affecting the throat may produce deafness. More than 90 per cent. of the cases of Deafness are the direct result of diseases affecting the throat.

Deafness is also caused by the introduction of irritating medicine, by experimental surgery, consisting of probing, cutting, and in some cases by the administration of wrong internal medicines in heavy doses, such as quinine and salicylic acid.

Curing disease in the throat will not relieve Deafness that has resulted from the disease.

It is necessary to use an entirely different treatment; one that will reach the seat of the inflammation in the ear tubes themselves.

Upon this is based the marvel of the restoration of hearing by the discovery.

VI. NOISES IN THE HEAD

If you have grasped the subject so far a word will explain head noises.

Noises in the head are the forerunners of deafness.

Before you noticed that you were getting hard of hearing you were annoyed by head noises.

When the Eustachian Tubes begin to block up, air is imprisoned between the closure of the air passage and the ear drum.

The movements of this air, either through the obstruction or between the obstruction and the drum causes these noises.

Why are they so loud?

Go into a cavern; block up the entrance behind you; shout loudly.

The shout deafens you with its force.

The entire cavern echoes and re-echoes. It comes back to you multiplied and confused in a mass of discordant sounds.

This is what occurs in the Eustachian tubes when disease forms an obstruction in them.

Head noises either indicate a condition of impaired hearing, or that the hearing is going to fail.

The disappearance indicates the passing away of the condition that caused the deafness.

Whenever the treatment has gained an influence over head noises, it is a certain sign that restoration of hearing will soon take place.

VII. FROM THE THROAT TO THE EAR.

Drs. Shores discovered the cure of deafness because of the vast number of throats that they treated.

How is it that a throat doctor discovered the cure for deafness?

What has the throat got to do with the ear?

When you've grasped this secret you will understand the whole subject of deafness and its cure.

It isn't the outer ear channel that figures in deafness.

It's the inner one, the channel from the throat to the ear drum—the Eustachian canal.

That's the secret of the trouble in 99 out of 100 cases of deafness.

Bear this in mind.

If you are suffering from head noises; if you are occasionally hard of hearing; if you are partially deaf; if you are stone-deaf, or if you are a deaf-mute, just grasp this subject with the force of your intelligence, and relief and the full recovery of your hearing are in your own hands.

Anything that interferes with the free passage of air from the throat to the ear-drum causes noises in the head, impairment of hearing and deafness.

It is from the throat that the citadel of the hearing is taken.

The mucous membrane lining of the throat lines also the passages to the ears—the Eustachian tubes.

When disease sets up in the throat, it is likely to extend into the Eustachian

Son of Former Chief of Osage Tribe Visits Riverside—For a New Park.

RIVERSIDE, April 11.—H. J. Eastman, only son of Chief Little Heart, the former head of the Osage Indian tribe, is in the city, with pockets bulging with greenbacks, and is occupying the presidential suite at the Glenwood. But for the fact that the State of Oklahoma was formed, Eastman would have become chief of the Osage nation of Indian Territory. About a year ago the members of the tribe received the last payment but one from the government for its lands taken years ago. Mr. Eastman's share was a generous one. Recently, the final distribution was made, and at that time he received an additional $40,000 or more.

Eastman graduated from the Carlisle law school in 1893, and was a famous football player while at the school

FOR ANOTHER PARK.

At a conference held between Tree Warden Reed and A. N. Whelock, City Superintendent of Schools, plans were made for adding another attractive little recreation place to Riverside's park system. The Palm-avenue school, located in the center of an elliptical tract of six acres, owned by the city, offers good opportunity for carrying out pretty gardening effects, and the work of converting this into a park will begin soon. A double row of trees will be planted around the circular drive, shaded paths through the grounds will be provided, and flowers will be set out.

REALTY DEALS.

Realty deals aggregating $14,100 were made yesterday, and a number of deals are pending which will be closed in a few days. J. C. Elbinger sold to Cornelius Anderson a five-acre orange grove and five-room house on Pennsylvania avenue, for $6000. Mr. Anderson recently arrived from Iowa and, after looking into the possibilities of orange growing, decided to make his home here, and engaged in citrus culture. The deal was made by W. T. Thompson. Through the same agency Mr. Elbinger sold to Mrs. Ella Hanthorn a two and one-half-acre orange grove on Pennsylvania avenue for $2600. Mrs. Hanthorn will build a modern residence on the property soon.

P. P. Heggstrom has sold seven and one-half acres on Monroe street to H. A. Wood for $2800. Mrs. Ella Murphy has sold a five-room cottage to William Elliott for $1700, and Ralph Files has sold a cottage on Kansas avenue to Ray Ogburn for $1200.

FOR SCHOOL CENSUS.

C. F. Pann and George W. Johnson have been appointed as school census marshals, to enumerate the children of school age in the Riverside school district. Mr. Pann will cover the territory of the old Riverside district, north of Jurupa avenue, and Mr. Johnson will take the census in the district below Jurupa avenue.

WILL SALUTE AT NEWPORT.

Mortar Will Speak Admiral's Salute When Fleet Passes Near Shore There.

SANTA ANA, April 11.—When the fleet passes along the coast at Newport Beach a salute will be fired on shore. A committee from the Chambers of Commerce of Santa Ana and Newport Beach has arranged to fire thirteen forty-pound bombs from a mortar at Newport Beach, thirteen being the admiral's salute. Special train service is being arranged between this city and the beach points, and on the day the fleet goes by, the 18th, almost everybody in Orange county will be somewhere closer to water.

CALL FOR REPUBLICANS.

The Republican County Central Committee of Orange county, this afternoon, fixed the date of the primaries for May 5 and the date for the county convention for May 7. At the convention thirteen delegates to the State convention, thirteen to the Senatorial convention, a candidate for Superior Judge, and a candidate for Assemblyman are to be chosen. An effort to have a separate convention name the Senatorial delegation, bringing the selection closer to the time of the Senatorial convention, which is in July, was defeated.

Merchants will give their men half a day's holiday to enable them to work on the streets, and pavements and their front yards. Some of the merchants also will donate their carts and other vehicles to carry off the refuse thrown into the streets by the workers. The whole city will receive a thorough cleaning in one day.

Announcement Affair Takes Place at Oxnard—Bride-to-Be a New Yorker.

OXNARD, April 11.—The announcement of the engagement of Miss Elizabeth Gordon of Caledonia, N. Y., and of J. R. Gabbert, editor of the Oxnard Courier, took place Thursday evening at the home of Maj. and Mrs. J. A. Driffill. The occasion was a gathering of the Entre Nous Card Club.

Miss Gordon has been a resident of Oxnard for the past year, holding a position in the city schools. Mr. Gabbert graduated from the University of California last year, where he took a number of honors, having been editor of the 1907 Blue and Gold, the Daily Californian and the first Senior Class Record. He was a member of the Winged Helmet, Golden Bear and Skull and Keys honor societies and the Chi Psi fraternities.

FIRE DESTROYS PROPERTY.

Fire destroyed the home of H. J. Russell of the Conejo yesterday afternoon, burned down a large barn, took the lives of six horses, and destroyed 200 tons of hay, making a total loss of $12,000 or more. The fire started at the barn, which is removed from the house a considerable distance. Sparks were carried to the house, and the loss was complete, with the exception of the saving of an old family organ. There was no insurance.

INDEPENDENTS' HOT WRANGLE.

TWO SIDES IN WHIRLWIND FINISH AT HUNTINGTON PARK.

One Is for "Ins" and Other for "Outs," and Both Are Confident of Victory at Polls Tomorrow. Little Suburb All Split Up Over the Impending Conflict.

No one called the rival candidates in Huntington Park a "horse thief" last evening at the last rally of the Independents in Webber Hall, but they said some other things in an independent way and a dignified manner that should have caused some ears to tingle in this southern suburb of Los Angeles.

At the same time that one independent party was holding a meeting in the hall another independent party was holding a rival meeting outside. Each side asserts it had the biggest meeting and each is confident of victory at the polls tomorrow. The gist of the speeches arraigned the present officers and alleged "machine" with doing a terrible lot of nothing. According to the speakers, what the City Trustees haven't accomplished for the municipality would fill a book, while what they have done doesn't amount to anything.

On the other hand, the outdoor independents were just as assertive that the inside independents are bluffers and a few other things and the speakers point with pride to Huntington Park as it is. That is just what the inside independents did, but without pride.

But really last night the preponderance was in favor of the inside independents. They had a band and the Ladies Glee Club of the U.S.C. to help out and the ten ladies in the Glee Club were a great attraction, as well as their music. Rev. J. G. Hill spoke on "The Preacher in Politics," and candidates for Trustees Douglas and Wright told what they would do and what their rivals have not done in most unmistakable terms. It was really quite warm.

Then D. B. Lyons began the "final summing up of evidence for the jury," and he summed up in a way to make the inside Independents, sitting as a jury, yell a verdict of "guilty." As for the old Board of Trustees he stated that "they have proven a large and expensive joke."

School Trustee William Lindsay and Messrs. Seamens and Force also spoke, hitting their rivals right out from the shoulder.

Both sides are nearly even up and the struggle at the polls tomorrow for the control of Huntington Park will be fought out to the last ballot. During the last week the citizens of this suburb have taken sides and the little city is practically split in two by politics.

The charge is made by one independent party that the other independent party, also known as the Citizens' party and Regulars, prepared the ballots in such a way that at the head of the two columns containing the lists of candidates appears the name, "Independent Party."

The inside independents advise all their friends to vote the second column straight. The outside independents, or Citizens, advise all the regulars to vote the first column.

STRAWBERRIES MOVING.

First Carload Shipments Are Made from Los Angeles and Will Be Contiued Through Season.

The second carload of Southern California strawberries ever sent out of Los Angeles will leave tonight for San Francisco, to be followed every other day during the season by a similar shipment. The first carload went forward Thursday night. The shipments are made by Wells Fargo Express, 1200 to 1600 crates in an iced car, and the fruit reaches the northern market in prime condition. One reason for the innovation is the fact that the Watsonville berries are extremely late this season; another is that the local production has increased enormously in the last year, the acreage now being double that of a year ago.

The shipments are made by Marston and Martin and the Southern California Produce Company, the berries coming at present from the Gardena and Moneta district, where the crops are excellent. Later the Tropico, Montebello, and Arcadia berries will be in the market.

While smaller shipments of strawberries are made continually to distant markets, the car that went forward Thursday night was the first of that magnitude to leave the city. The large shipments to outside points will be of great benefit to local producers, about 90 per cent. of whom are Japanese.

DIES OF HEART FAILURE.

Richard J. C. S. Murmister, who had been employed by the Farmers' and Merchants' National Bank for the past two years as a book-keeper, died at his home at No. 742 East Twenty-seventh street, at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon of heart failure. Mr. Burmister was sprinkling his lawn when stricken, and was carried to a couch in the house. He expired almost immediately. He was 25 years old, and leaves a widow and four-year-old boy. His body is at the Conn' Undertaking Company's place, at No. 1051 South Grand avenue.

THE HOUSE OF KUPPENHEIMER
CHICAGO NEW YORK BOSTON

FER-DON'S THIRTY DAY OFFER

Complete Treatment $10.00. No More. No Less. Medicine Included.

All persons who call at the offices of the European Medical Experts from now until May 11th will be treated for the nominal sum of ten dollars. This does not mean $10 per month, but $10 for a complete cure, medicine included. No extra charges to be made. Remember this means $10 for any curable disease, tumors, cancers and gall stones excepted.

Fer-Don, always offering the people something different from the rest, always originating new plans of advertising, and thinking of that which will benefit the people at large, has made another extraordinary offer to those who are sufferers from chronic diseases. $10.00 for a complete cure is an offer never before attempted by any one. It is an offer that will place before the people of Los Angeles as never before the power of the European Medical Experts to conquer chronic and nervous diseases.

When one enters the offices of the European Medical Experts at 745 S. Main street, he is at once impressed with the ability of these physicians to diagnose the most difficult cases. To those who have been unable to learn the exact cause of their disease and who are in doubt as to their real physical condition, a visit to the Experts proves conclusively that they understand perfectly each phase of disease and its cure. When one of the European Medical Experts looks into the face of the patient after an examination, and tells just exactly how the patient feels, all the symptoms of the disease, and tells in a convincing way how long it will take to perfect a cure, and then gives the names and addresses of many who have been treated and cured, doubt vanishes and the patient believes.

For there have been thousands of sufferers cured in the past six months by the European treatments and there will be thousands more who will take advantage of this $10 offer and who will be cured.

Rheumatism, in all its forms, deafness, female complaints, catarrh, blood, stomach, liver and kidney troubles, in fact all chronic and nervous troubles that are curable will be treated and the patient furnished all medicines necessary to complete a cure for the nominal sum of ten dollars for the next thirty days.

Tumors, cancers and gall stones, to be removed without knife, blood or pain, are the only exceptions to this offer, and in these cases the terms will be made so easy that no one can say he cannot afford to take treatment.

CURED BY BLOODLESS SURGERY.

Vivian Edwards, Fourth street and Towne avenue, Richard McCarren, 618 South Hope street, Mrs. L. Bremner, San Gabriel, and many others were cured of gall stones without the use of a knife and with three doses of a peculiar medicine in eighteen hours' time.

S. Brock, Calexico, Cal., Raymond Morrison, South Main street, and many others were cured of cancer in short time without the use of the knife.

Mrs. Lilly Rowell, 303 Central avenue, George Rhodes, 714 South Wall street, L. C. Clark, 611 Clover street, are a few of the many who have been cured of tumor by the European Experts' system of bloodless surgery.

Hundreds of tapeworms removed, thousands cured of deafness and all chronic diseases. Thousands of testimonials on file.

OFFICE HOURS EACH WEEK DAY, 10-12 A. M., 2-4 AND 7-8 P. M.

OUT OF TOWN PEOPLE desiring to take advantage of this liberal offer can do so by writing the European Medical Experts, 745 So. Main St., and stating clearly the symptoms of their disease. All letters answered.

AVALON.

AVALON, April 11.—H. U. Mudge of Chicago, vice-president of the Rock Island system, was successful in capturing the first white sea-bass of the season, today. Although several seiners have reported small catches, no boatman was able to locate this species of fish previous to this catch, with the regulation light tackle. The catch weighed 34½ pounds.

A recent announcement made by Frank Jerrue relative to his last encounter with Capt. Farnsworth, has caused much comment and criticism among the islanders here. "Capt. Farnsworth is not our prospective son-in-law, and will never be permitted to enter our home again," said Mr. Jerrue, when interviewed. "The affair was indirectly the outcome of his attachment to my eldest step-daughter, but was not the entire cause of the conflict. Yes, I have permission to carry a gun and whenever I find it necessary to use it for self protection I shall immediately do so."

LAST WORD.

CHURCHES END FIGHT TODAY.

FINE HOT FINISH IN CAMPAIGN IN SANTA MONICA.

Question of no Liquor to Be Voted on There Tomorrow—Silent, Padlocked Wharf Is Narrowly Missed in Night by Steamer Feeling Her Way Along Coast.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SANTA MONICA, April 11.—While the anti-saloon campaign practically closed with a great open-air demonstration at Pier avenue tonight, all of the churches of the beach will observe tomorrow as a day of prayer in the interest of the no-saloon ordinance and each church will devote one of the services of the day to the cause of temperance.

The mass meeting tonight came as the closing one of a spirited campaign that has been on since the call for the special election was issued. The fight has been waged by the No-Saloon League, which has each day filled several columns of the local press with arguments in favor of making Santa Monica a dry town.

In parallel columns the liquor interests have been represented by arguments favoring irrigation as at present practiced. The election ballot is a confusing one, since the question is on the adoption of an ordinance rather than whether the city shall be wet or dry. "Yes" means that the voter is against the issuance of saloon licenses, while "No" indicates that the preference of the elector is for saloons.

PADLOCKED WHARF.

A lone guard stands watch on the mammoth wharf at Port Los Angeles, while a high fence and padlocked gate bar the passage of pedestrians onto the longest pier in this country. This million-dollar structure, once the mecca of fishermen for miles around, no longer affords accommodations for the angler who seeks sport during a day or an afternoon. Steamers no longer stop there, trains have ceased to run onto the pier, and when the dense fogs settle over the water there is no fog horn to sound the danger signal. Last night a steamer, feeling her way along the coast, came dangerously near shore. Her whistle was kept going, but there was no response from the voiceles pier.

BOY FALLS OFF BLUFF.

Raymond Livengood, a nine-year-old lad, had a narrow escape from death today, when he fell off the bluff near Santa Monica Cañon. The boy approached too near the palisade, missed his footing and fell. Fortunately a series of projecting shelves of earth broke the force of his fall and held him midway between the land and the beach, after he had rolled and tumbled more than sixty feet. Luckily the boy's injuries were no more serious than bruises and lacerations.

SANTA MONICA BRIEFS.

G. M. Sanford, while up the Malibu coast yesterday, had the misfortune to make a mis-step on the mountain trail. In falling he struck so as to dislocate his elbow.

The Los Angeles High School baseball team came to the beach this afternoon and defeated the Santa Monica High School nine in an exciting game. The score was 2 to 1.

Bishop Conaty will come to Santa Monica and during the morning will assist in the dedication of the new St. Anne's Catholic Church. The dedicatory sermon will be delivered by the bishop, who will be assisted in the formal exercises by members of the Los Angeles and local clergy.

Mr. and Mrs. Cyril J. Smyth have returned to their beach home, after having been abroad during the past year. They will go to Victorville for a brief visit with Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Dobie, before settling in their Arizona-avenue home for the summer season.

Mrs. E. C. Miles of Riverside is a guest at the home of her daughter, Mrs. L. H. Case.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Barker have removed to Wilmington, where their future home will be made.

Mrs. Fred Hayden of Goldfield, Nev., has come to the beach for the spring and summer months.

BATTLES IMPENDING.

OLD CORNER SALOON INVOLVED TOMORROW.

Election Storm Signal Flying in Many Southern California Cities.

Hurricanes, Gales, Tornadoes and Flurries of Varying Violence the Forecast for Municipal Balloting Contests in Forty Places, With Liquor the Vital Issue in Most of Them—Other Questions.

POLITICAL weather indications are for a general storm tomorrow. On that day, nearly every big town (cities of the sixth class) in Southern California, will have a municipal election. There will be balloting in forty cities.

In the Eastern States, these elections would have a keen significance as showing the blow of the wind—before the great Presidential storm of next fall.

Locally, none of the towns is divided into Republican and Democratic parties. The political fights are none the less fierce, however. In a majority of cases, the little old corner saloon is the vital, burning issue.

For this reason, Los Angeles liquor men, as well as Los Angeles temperance workers, are taking an active hand in more than one fight.

Following is a brief summary of what the election means to each town in which a fight is brewing:

SAVAGE PREPARATION.

One of the briskest fights is due in San Jacinto—an old battle ground for the two conflicting interests.

For six fighting years, San Jacinto has been a "wet" town. This year the White Ribbon party has made savage preparations. Two nights in the past week mass meetings were held in the biggest hall in town, addressed by Rev. Gandier of the Anti-Saloon League. They had a brass band. Personal appeals have been mailed to every voter asking him to investigate the business advantages of prohibition.

The saloon people are accused of smuggling in Mexican and day laborers to be colonized and voted.

Because of previous disasters, the Prohibition party has thrown aside all sentiment, and is making the fight on business lines.

FISHERMEN'S DELIGHT.

Besides the saloon question, the seaport town, Newport, has a unique issue to be decided.

The temperance party and the saloon party are fighting over the one saloon in Newport. The fishermen, however, are trying to elect men who will favor an ordinance permitting them to fish within 1000 feet of the wharf.

Two lively political parties—Citizens and Progressive—are at swords points at Wilmington. In past years the issue has always been Banning and anti-Banning. This year merely a difference of opinion as to which set of candidates is best able to handle the question of harbor lines and the disposal of the bond issue.

Both parties have nominated efficient business men.

BLAME THE AGENTS.

Corporation and anti-corporation in Hermosa, where the conditions are peculiar. The Hermosa Beach Company owns 67 per cent. of the town. Political opposition has arisen to it, and has spread into opposition to other public service corporations. Anti-corporationists cry that the town is beridden. Corporations say that they will be forced to discontinue their plans for betterment of the city, and some threaten to withdraw altogether from the field if the corporation "baiters" win the election. Corporation asserts that the fight originated with small real estate agents, who had trouble with the beach land company.

The liquor question has been placed on the ballots in the Redlands election, so the voters can decide it flatly. The question is whether or not to allow hotels having 100 or more rooms to serve liquor with meals. The Casa Loma is the only hotel to which such a permit could apply. So the management of one hotel is the political issue. The ballots will also contain a question in regard to the public planting of trees.

At Lordsburg the "Outs" are trying to oust the "Ins." An attempt will be made to make a clean sweep of the present Board of Trustees. No special issues and no scandals.

WHERE ENDS DON'T MEET.

One end of the town of Glendale is fighting the other end. The first ticket nominated for city officers was found to be made up of men who live in the same section of the town—not the most thickly settled part. Mayor Parcher's name is on both tickets. The question of somewhat modifying the present stringent liquor ordinance may arise. In Glendale it is forbidden to even have liquor in one's possession or to give it away.

In Sierra Madre there is no real issue, although there is a little feeling over the candidacy of L. Dietz, president of the Civic League, who is running independent for City Trustee. Some of the members of the league are opposed to this policy on the ground that it puts them in the light of a district political club—so they say.

Although the next Board of Trustees will have the disbursement of $50,000 for highways at Upland, there is no contest and but one ticket in the field. The citizens got together and selected men in whom they had confidence for nomination.

Wrath over the location on city library building has caused a split in Alhambra. The Citizens' ticket representing the older, conservative element and indorsing the present administration and the Independent party, which is an outgrowth of the Civic League, which seeks to overthrow the administration, are the gladiators. It is claimed that disappointment over the library site, as well as the failure of the administration to consult the Civic League over the selection of a trustee when Gail Borden resigned, is the real cause of the bolt. Many of the opposing factions are political bed fellows in the State and national politics which has kept the fighting down to a mild warfare of printed circulars.

Gambling and liquor selling is the issue at Lompoc. As only two of the five Trustees are to be elected, this time, there is no chance of immediately overthrowing the demon rum and high license will obtain for the coming term. The Prohibition party, looking to the future, is making a strong fight to get two of its men into office.

THIRTEEN ALL ELIMINATED.

The dramatic withdrawal of the one candidate for the Citizens' party, who pulled out and asked his friends to vote for the other side, was the feature of a prohibition campaign at Azusa. The town formerly supported thirteen saloons, but for three years has been "dry." The saloon men planned to "single shot" one Trustee, as they needed but one man on the Board of Trustees in order to again control of the town. At the height of the campaign, G. W. Ellington, the lone candidate, withdrew, claiming that he had not understood why he was nominated.

Hotel Raymond is technically within the corporate limits of South Pasadena. It sells liquor by special permission. Hotel Capitola, a smaller hotel in South Pasadena, is refused permission. This, with a fight against poolrooms, is the issue at South Pasadena.

One of the biggest temperance fights is in Anaheim. Fight is over Sunday closing. Two years ago, Sunday closing was defeated by less than twenty votes. If the temperance party wins this fight, it hopes to make the town go "dry" in a few years. There are now eight saloons and one of the largest wineries in the State. Both sides claim to be better organized than ever before.

The Citizens' ticket of Fullerton professed to believe that the People's ticket has a secret leaning toward saloons. The "People" deny it; they say they only want a business administration by business men. Fullerton went "dry" two years ago, and is absolutely without blind pigs.

QUAKER CITY FIGHT.

Two tickets and some bitterness are in the field in Whittier.

Municipal tickets stands for $25 per month table license for pool and billiards. "Better city government;" for municipal ownership of gas and electricity, absolute prohibition pool and billiards, no tobacco sold on Sunday. Both sides have good candidates, and no fight is made on candidates as individuals.

Prohibition vs. high license at Corona.

At Elsinore: Liquor question and the bonding of the city for municipal ownership of an electric-light plant.

Monorovia: Purely personal lines, although one side professes to believe the other has "leanings" in favor of liquor.

Oxnard: No issue but two tickets of ambitious citizens in the field.

Huntington Park: Present officers seek reëlection under name of Citizens' ticket. Fighters for opposition (Independent) ticket say incumbents have not run city in businesslike way. Street improvements said not to have progressed rapidly. "Ins" say legal holidays and red tape of Vrooman Act are the reasons. Independents hint at incompetent legal advisers. Voters are to say whether permits shall be issued for pool and billiard halls.

Covina: Two complete tickets, but voters apathetic. Principal fight over City Marshal. I. C. Fairly, incumbent, has been in office for thre consecutive terms. Some dissatisfaction over alleged lack of enforcement of ordinance. Two of the candidates for Trustees on Fairly ticket said to favor saloons. Town now dry.

Ontario: "Just an ordinary election," with nothing to fight about. No parties.

Santa Monica: No officers are to be elected, but the "initiative" under the new freeholders' charter will be tried for the first time. Exciting contest. Ordinance presented by the "No-Saloon League" prohibits sale of liquor in saloons, hotels and clubs.

Sawtelle: Friends of the present administration organized under name Good Government Party. Citizens' Party mainly composed of those who are in favor of disincorporating city. Liquor question not an issue, as State law forbids selling liquor within a mile and a half of any Soldiers' Home.

Redondo: "Outs," who want to hold office, against the "ins," who already control the government. "Outs" call the "Ins" a ring and other things.

Ocean Park: Same ancient feud of Abbot Kinney and his friends against the magnates of the north end of the beach and their friends. Kinney and anti-Kinney; Jones and anti-Jones.

Santa Paula: High license ticket pledged to return of saloons. Citizens' ticket against saloons. City voted dry two years ago. Is still dry.

Arcadia: Only issue is over the war between O. C. Berdie and the "Lucky" Baldwin gang. Berdie is a candidate for City Marshal to succeed himself. Hot, sporty fight.

Hollywood: No political issue. One ticket only, except for Treasurer. Liquor question not raised.

Claremont: Only one ticket. Town must stay dry because of college one-mile liquor law.

THREE AUTO ACCIDENTS.

One Driver Offers to Do Everything Possible, Another Turns on Speed and Sneaks Away.

Charles Hair, 15 years of age, living at No. 4413 Stanton avenue, was struck by an automobile driven by Hugh W. Harrison of the Lankershim building, yesterday afternoon, and thrown under the wheels of a heavily-laden truck.

The boy's left foot was severely crushed. He was taken to the Receiving Hospital and from thence to his home.

Witnesses state that Harrison and Hair reached Commercial and North Main streets at the same instant. Each slowed down to let the other pass, and then both started at the same time. The automobile hit the rear wheel of the bicycle and turned it over. Hair was thrown to one side and his foot caught under the rear wheel of the truck.

Harrison stopped his car and offered to take the boy to the California Hospital and pay all expenses.

John Faulkner, a flagman for the Santa Fé line, living at No. 1650 Naud street, was struck by an automobile driven by H. C. Lee, yesterday morning. The accident occurred at East Main street and the river. Faulkner was thrown and sustained internal injuries and severe bruises and lacerations. He was sent to the Santa Fé Hospital.

John D. Bartlett, 75 years of age, of No. 1207 West Forty-sixth street, was painfully injured yesterday morning in a collision with an automobile at Fifth and South Spring streets. He was struck by a large car and sustained probable internal injuries, lacerations of the face, and bruises. He was sent to the Receiving Hospital.

The driver of the automobile turned on full speed and escaped before pedestrians could get his number.

WHANG HO HOPELESS.

Chinese War Junk Now Stranded on Tahati's Shores, Crew Mutinous, End Seems to Have Come.

Every little while the winds from off the sea blow in a new story of fresh trouble on the old Whang Ho, historic in press-agent literature as a Chinese war junk. The latest is from Papeete, Tahiti, where the old tub, said to be owned by Los Angeles people, is reported stranded, with the crew mutinous and the captain gone back to San Francisco. The vessel is said to be leaking badly, and the rigging unfit for any more adventures at sea.

According to advices just received, the junk started from San Francisco for New York about the first of the year, but the ballast was too light and the boat could not be kept in its course, finally reaching the Society Islands, where it seems destined to pass the remainder of its days—a rotting hulk. Sensational litigation is threatened as a result of the latest fluke of the ancient junk.

NO MORE UNDERMANNING.

YOUNG GIRL STIRS NAVY.

"HONORARY CREW" IDEA WINS OFFICIAL APPROVAL.

Association Will Attend to Manning of Ships—Miss Lewis of Venice and Her High Ambition—The Cruiser California Comes First in the Unique Plan.

A young girl attending the Los Angeles Polytechnic High School is forming a league to "mother" our pet warship, the cruiser California.

She is getting up an "honorary crew" to be composed of California girls who are to be good to the California; to open their homes to the sailors; to persuade native sons to enlist for service on the cruiser; and generally watch over the destinies of the warship nearest our hearts.

Miss Gladys Lewis,
whose unique idea of an "honorary crew" for the cruiser California meets with naval approval.

Her "honorary crew" agrees to see that the ship will never go to sea undermanned and that every man on board shall be a native Californian, if possible.

The plan has the sanction of the Navy Department and is about to be launched.

The girl-in-the-case is Miss Gladys Lewis, who is 17 years old and lives at Venice.

She must be an astonishing sort of a young girl; for she was able to keep her plans a secret until she had corresponded with the Navy Department and her letters had meandered up and down all the inevitable red tape.

Her idea seemed to have originated in the pang that every Californian felt to hear that the California is undermanned.

The friendless condition of the young sailors who come ashore also appealed to her. Every one knows that these homeless boys are sometimes driven to vice when they are on "shore liberty."

They have no friends, and nowhere to go and nothing to do and in the snobbish East, at least, everything is closed to them.

This girl thought of a way to mother the beautiful cruiser and also to hold out a friendly hand to the sailor boys when they come ashore. She also appears to have some rather impractical ideas about "acting as patronesses" of the ship's social affairs.

THE IDEA.

Instead of an ordinary woman's club, her idea is to organize an honorary crew with the officers having the same rating as the officers of the California—even to musicians, writers, commissaries, cooks and bakers.

All members of this "honorary crew" of girls are to be native Californians between the ages of 16 and 25.

She first took the matter up with

CITY TO SEA.

RIVER BED SOUGHT BY BELT LINE ROAD.

Will Ask Council at Once for Franchise Along Stream, Promising Cut in Freight Rates to the Harbor—Big Storm Brewing.

A NEW river-bed franchise has been drawn, following the course of the Los Angeles River the entire length of the city from the northern to the southern boundary. Formal application for this franchise will be made to the Council tomorrow by the Los Angeles Harbor Railroad Company, a corporation of which A. C. Bird is president. It is backed by the "cracker trust" and, some say, by the Santa Fé Railroad.

The privilege asked for is a fifty-year railroad franchise; its proponents say it is to form a belt line over which all railroads may operate from Wilmington harbor to Los Angeles. President Bird says the road will be instrumental in reducing the freight rates from the heart of the city to its harbor by the sea from 25 to 50 per cent.

It is apparent that the application is not dominated by Southern Pacific influence; Councilmen who are regarded as amenable to Espee discipline already are opposing the application as a device of the Santa Fé to get something for nothing from the city.

MOSTLY LOCAL CAPITAL.

The Los Angeles Harbor Railroad Company is a corporation composed almost wholly of local capitalists. Mayor Harper at one time expected to become a director in the company, but he withdrew when he learned that it would ask the city for a franchise connecting the heart of the city with a free harbor.

When a similar application was made three years ago the franchise was valued at $1,000,000. The company making the application now expects to receive it as a gift from the city. The officials say it is not for a street railway; that it is to be operated solely as a freight road, and that it is not the kind of franchise the city can offer for sale.

The route described in the franchise begins at the southern city boundary and parallels the tracks of the Santa Fé road along the west bank of the river to the Buena Vista-street bridge. There it crosses the river and continues along the east bank to the northern city limits near the pigeon farm. The application asks for a forty-foot right of way.

The petition which the Harbor company will present to the Council is as follows:

To the Honorable City Council of the City of Los Angeles—Gentlemen: The undersigned, Los Angeles Harbor Railroad Company, hereby respectfully petitions your honorable body to grant to it, its successors and assigns, the right to construct, and, for the period of fifty years to maintain and operate a single or double line of railroad tracks for a steam railroad in, over, along and across the official bed of the Los Angeles River, and across certain public streets and alleys, and across private property, in the city of Los Angeles. Said steam railroad to be constructed over that certain strip of land and those certain streets and alleys described in that certain form of ordinance attached hereto, and made a part of this application; and the said grant thereof to carry all the rights and to be subject to all the conditions and restrictions set out in said form of ordinance.

[Signed]
LOS ANGELES HABOR RAILROAD COMPANY.
BY A. C. BIRD, Its President.
And F. C. WINTRODE,
Its Secretary.

Judging from the preliminary skirmish which was in evidence at the City Hall yesterday, the political battle over this franchise will be lively. Messages on the underground wires conveyed the information that the Southern Pacific and its ally, the Salt Lake, are opposed to it, and that the Santa Fé is favorable.

RAILROAD BREACH.

For the first time it has become apparent that there is a break in the directors' room between the Southern Pacific and the Santa Fé, and that the two roads are likely to engage in a traffic warfare. There appears to have been some change of the inner management of these two roads, and traffic agreements in effect prior to three months ago seem to have been canceled.

Mayor Harper knew that the Harbor Railroad Company was seeking an entrance to the city when he vetoed the South Park franchise two days ago. In his veto message he says that a connection from the Plaza to Slauson avenue with freight-carrying privileges should be worth at least $500,000.

Several Councilmen said yesterday that the real object of the Mayor in vetoing the South Park application was to secure competition from the Harbor road, and that this is what caused him to place the reference to freight-carrying in the veto message.

President Bird said yesterday that the Mayor has not consulted with him or with his company concerning the application for the franchise.

"We have not been even so much as contemplating entering the city by way of San Pedro street and South Park avenue," he said. "Our road is intended to carry freight only and the proper place for it is in the bed of the river. The San Pedro-street line is a passenger road."

WANT TO DODGE STORM.

Realizing that the San Pedro-street franchise may become complicated in the application of the Harbor road, attorneys representing the Huntington interests busied themselves yesterday in trying for a line-up of the Council that will pass the South Park franchise over the Mayor's veto. They will make a final effort Monday to pull this franchise in out of the wet before the storm over the freight-road franchise breaks.

Engineer Koebig, representing the Harbor road, says the plan of building a second line paralleling the tracks of the Santa Fé road along the west bank of the river is feasible. Mr. Koebig was consulting engineer for the Santa Fé at the time that the road secured its right-of-way along the river. That was in 1885. Koebig was the engineer when the lines for the official bed of the Los Angeles River were drawn. These were made by the Santa Fé Company and, to use Koebig's expression, "they were run in the interests of the Santa Fé rather than of the city."

PROMISE IMPROVEMENT.

Two years later Koebig was consulting engineer for the Union Pacific when the line along the east bank of the river, now operated by the Salt Lake, was built. Then he helped to establish the east line of the river bed.

The bed of the river is 400 feet wide. If forty feet were granted to the Harbor road there would still remain 360 feet. Engineer Koebig says the river-bed will be improved if the forty feet along the west bank is raised to the grade of the Santa Fé and bulkheads are constructed on the river side.

The officials of the Harbor road say the present application has its initiation in the Mexican Trading Company. This company, through auxiliary corporations, has secured wharfage at Wilmington; there it expects to establish its harbor. They say they found the freight rate between Los Angeles and the seashore so high as to be practically prohibitive. The minimum rate is $1.20 a ton, with an additional charge of 50 cents a ton for wharfage.

OPEN TO OTHER LINES.

The officials say the following section is placed by them in the franchise voluntarily in order that every other line may have full use of its track for transporting freight to and from Wilmington.

"Section 4. This franchise is granted upon the condition that at all times during its term, the grantee hereof shall and will, without unjust discrimination or favor, receive and transport freight, passengers and cars over its entire line, connections and extensions thereof, owned or operated by such grantee, tendered for that purpose by other railroads or common carriers (except street railways) connecting therewith, upon such terms, rates and charges, and under such rules and regulations as from time to time during said term said grantee may adopt, impose or enforce. It being further understood, as a further condition of this grant, that such terms, rates and charges, rules and regulations, will be just and reasonable and will extend and apply to all such other railroads and common carriers and other persons equally and rateably according to the class and character of freight or cars so tendered, without any unjust favor or discrimination of one over the other whatsoever, and that said grantee will, during the term hereof, permit any such other railroad or common carrier, at the cost, expense and charge of such other railroad or common carrier, and under reasonable terms, conditions, rules and regulations to be imposed by said grantee, to connect with the tracks of said grantee for the purpose of receiving and transporting said freight, passengers and cars, as aforesaid."

When the first river-bed franchise was under discussion, Herbert J. Goudge, then assistant City Attorney, advised the Council that the franchise was one that the city should offer for sale. He said he considered it the duty of the Council to decline to grant the franchise at all or to advertise for bids. The Council then made a grant of the franchise, but rescinded its action under fire two days later.

LEASE SUGGESTED.

When the application comes before the Council Monday an effort will be made to have the Harbor Railroad change its form so as to ask for a lease of the river-bank in place of a franchise. The Municipal League has investigated the proposed application and is committed to the lease plan. In this it will have the backing of the BIG SEER OF WILSON PEAK.

Wondrous New Telescope Ready to Go Up.

One of Most Remarkable of World's Instruments.

Made in Pasadena, Thanks to Mr. Carnegie.

BY STANLEY DUBOIS.

Through the courtesy of Prof. E. E. Hale, director of the Mt. Wilson Solar Observatory, and of Prof. G. W. Ritchey, superintendent of instrument construction, The Times was invited to the shops of the observatory on Santa Barbara street in Pasadena to view the new sixty-inch reflecting telescope, one of the world's newest scientific wonders.

With the exception of the glasses, the instrument has been set up much as it will be when installed in its permanent home on Mt. Wilson, and its completion marks an epoch in the march of the world's advance, which should receive more than the ordinary chronicling. It is the successful completion of an instrument which should mark the present era as one of the greatest in the world's history along the line of astronomical photography—the culmination of a dream or vision through which vast knowledge will be gained to the world.

The men concerned in the work of this observatory, Prof. Hale, its director, those on the mountain and those in the shops, are all well trained, earnest investigators, who work from the impulse to know, and while they bother themselves little about thoughts of genius, and not greatly about present results, they are certainly making history for the future.

The telescopes already installed and in operation in the Mt. Wilson Solar Observatory are two in number. They consist of, first, the twenty-four-inch Snow telescope, named for Miss Helen Snow of Chicago. This telescope has a focal length of sixty feet, and lies horizontal. The other one is the twelve-inch tower telescope, which is vertical in its position, and also has a focal length of sixty feet. Both these instruments are intended for solar work, principally photographing the sun. No night work is at present attempted with either of them.

The new instrument, of which this article is specially written, is known as the sixty-inch reflector, and will be used entirely for work at night.

The first two are known as stationary instruments, being erected in rigidly permanent positions, the light being reflected from any part of the sky into them by means of optical plane mirrors.

In the case of the sixty-inch instrument, the tube is movable, and points toward the object being photographed.

The first two instruments being stationary do not require a movable dome in their operation.

The focal length of the sixty-inch instrument is only twenty-five feet, and requires a dome only sixty feet in diameter. Some figures in comparison with other well-known telescopes will be of interest just here. The thirty-six-inch refracting telescope of Lick Observatory is fifty-four feet long, and requires a seventy-five-foot dome; the Yerkes refracting telescope, with a glass forty inches in diameter, has a ninety-foot dome. Thus it will be seen that a dome for a sixty-inch reflector is much smaller in comparison to the size of the telescope than are either of the others mentioned. This is one of the great advantages of a reflecting instrument over one of the refracting type, both in the matter of original cost, ease of action and general adaptability to the end sought.

WHY "REFLECTING."

It is due the interested public to show them why astronomers are in a measure abandoning the use of the refracting telescope, which truly has accomplished wonders in astronomical science, and are turning to the reflecting telescope for present research. This is particularly true of the instruments and work in the Mt. Wilson Solar Observatory (supported by the Carnegie foundation,) where all the most important telescopes are now and will be reflectors.

The chief reason why the reflecting telescope is chosen by so many astronomers is, first of all, because a reflector is perfectly achromatic, while the great refractors, though called achromatic, are unfortunately far from being so. The second is, that in large refractors a very serious percentage of the incident light is lost in passing through the thick glasses, in some instances amounting to as much as 40 to 50 per cent., and the larger the glass is made, the greater the proportion of the loss of light. Not so with the reflector; the light does not pass through the glass at all, but as the name of the instrument implies, is reflected from the brilliant silver film with a very small loss, due to absorption, and the percentage of light lost does not increase by increasing the size of the glass.

A third advantage gained by the use of a reflector, such as is being made for Mt. Wilson, is that the mountings can be made more rigid, the tube being specially short, massive and inflexible, and the dome, an expensive accessory to the telescope, may be very materially lessened in cost.

We will arrive at a better understanding when we learn that if the mounting of this glass, the sixty-inch reflector, were of a proportionate length to a refracting telescope, its tube would be about ninety-five feet long, instead of twenty-five feet, and it would require a dome at least 120 feet in diameter, instead of only sixty feet. When, too, it is remembered that the cost of a dome varies about as the cube of its diameter, it will be seen that a 120-foot dome would cost just about eight times as much as a sixty-foot dome.

The sixty-inch glass, which is to be soon erected on Mt. Wilson, was determined upon, and plans for its construction begun at the Yerkes Observatory in the year 1897, and the preliminary designs of the mountings were made there by Prof. Ritchey in 1898.

THE GLASS.

The glass itself was cast at the St. Gobain glass works, near Paris, France, an establishment nearly 200 years old. It was shipped in the rough to the United States, and was ground in the shops of the Yerkes Observatory. It was then brought to Pasadena, and in the shops on Santa Barbara street the finishing work of polishing, figuring (that is, shaping,) and silvering has been accomplished. When we realize that through these processes it has been brought to such a condition of perfection that the greatest errors in its shape are less than the 2-1,000,000th of an inch, we can form

Deal Fairly With Teachers.

LOS ANGELES, April 10.—[To the Editor of The Times:] The present unfortunate circumstances connected with the financing of the public school funds of Los Angeles, recall to mind a financial trouble relative to public school funds during the writer's service as grade teacher in the public schools of New York City.

In the fall of 1898 the salaries of the teachers of New York City were not only reduced $100 to $200 per year, but were also held up from November to February. However, when matters were finally adjusted and payments of salaries were resumed, teachers were paid in full as per pay roll before reduction in salaries, together with interest. Many teachers had suffered embarrassments and great inconvenience, but these were soon forgotten when, in 1900, the Davis bill became a law, increasing and permanently fixing teachers' salaries.

The same law provides an annual increment of $40 for grade teachers, upon approval of their year's work. Besides this, for teachers of mixed classes with larger percentage of boys, and teachers of classes composed wholly of boys, $60 per year is received in addition to the regular salary in twelve installments.

If, at the end of this year, the teachers of Los Angeles have not received their promised salaries in full, let us hope that they will receive not only the deficit in due time, but increase of salaries and tenure.

There was great rejoicing in the New York City schools when its Board of Education declared for tenure of office for its teachers. Under this system the causes for which a teacher may be dismissed are two, namely, incompetency and misconduct. By so reducing the causes for dismissal, there is little tendency on the part of complainers to go to authorities for the purpose of having teachers discharged for minor offenses, or summarily dropped on account of lack of funds.

Of course there are objections to tenure, and in some instances it may work to the disadvantage of the schools, but these are insignificant in comparison with the greater wrongs done through uncertainty. A teacher discharged from one school finds it difficult to secure a position in another, particularly if she is much above forty.

Los Angeles boasts superior schools and teachers. To have the former she must retain the latter. High standards cannot be maintained without efficient teachers, and in order to secure and keep them it is necessary to offer not only salaries commensurate with their work, but the protection of tenure.

LANTERNS LEFT BEHIND.

Thousands Intended for Los Angeles and San Francisco Fail to Arrive from Orient.

Most of the larger business blocks along Broadway, Spring and Main streets will be elaborately decorated during fleet week.

The contractors for the civic work have experienced some difficulty in obtaining 5500 Japanese lanterns, the number required to go over the electric light globes along these principal thoroughfares.

A San Francisco firm ordered a large consignment from Japan, which was expected to come in on the Manchuria. To the dismay of both San Francisco and Los Angeles business people, that steamer arrived a few days ago with not a single lantern.

The local contractors have been doing much hustling the past day or two, and have obtained 4000 lanterns. They say they will have the full number before the fleet gets here.

FOR NEW YORK BLUEJACKETS.

The New York Society is preparing a welcome for all sailors from that State upon their arrival here. President Francis G. Haley has secured a large tent, which will be used as a reception place in Chutes Park, near the entrance. The women of the society will be on hand, and will distribute light refreshments, as well as a New York special button. It is the intention of the society to make a formal visit to the battleships and greet the bluejackets from their native State there.

WHAT IS EXPECTED.

It is worth while to know what may be expected of this magnificent telescope. By astronomers, stars are divided into so-called magnitudes, depending on their apparent brightness. Commencing with those of the first magnitude they are visible to the naked eye down to and including those of the sixth magnitude, those of lesser brightness must be viewed artificially. The faintest stars that can be seen in a twelve-inch refractor telescope are of the fourteenth magnitude, while the forty-inch refractor shows stars as faint from sixteen and one-half to the seventeenth magnitude. With the twenty-four-inch reflector, with seven hours' exposure, stars were shown on the photographic plate which were of eighteen and one-half magnitude. It is perfectly safe to assert that the sixty-inch reflector will photograph stars as faint as the twentieth magnitude, and considering the great transparency of the atmosphere on Mt. Wilson under favorable conditions, and the consequent long exposures which will be possible there, it is not improbable that stars as faint as the twenty-first magnitude will impress their image on the photographic plate.

It was about the year 1884 that the reflecting telescope was first used with marked success in photographic work. A thirty-six-inch telescope was used, the one afterward given to Lick Observatory, and now in use there. For one photograph made with its aid, its maker, A. A. Common, received the gold medal of the Royal Astronomical Society. Encouraged by his success, he immediately began on a sixty-inch glass, which, some two or three years ago, was purchased by Harvard. It is, however, mounted in the open air, and, because of the lack of rigidity in this mounting, cannot be successfully used in photography, and is of value only for visual work.

PROF. RITCHEY.

The sixty-inch reflecting telescope of the Mt. Wilson Solar Observatory, including the mounting, and the steel dome and building, with the many unique features which are here used for the first time, were designed, and their entire construction carried out, by Prof. G. W. Ritchey; the glasses also, including the sixty-inch silvered-glass parabolic speculum, and the five smaller accessory glasses, were polished and shaped here under his immediate supervision, by men trained by him for this work. All this is the culmination of years of the closest observation and study. Starting out as an optician, his knowledge along these lines enabled him to overcome difficulties that otherwise would have seriously handicapped him in his efforts.

It was in his own home in Chicago that he made his first large reflector, a twenty-four-inch glass, making it, and setting it up, at his own expense, to prove his theory that results not possible in the use of a refractor could be arrived at with a reflector. It was there that Prof. Hale became converted to his idea, won by the eager young apostle of the theory. The Yerkes Observatory at Williams Bay (connected with the University of Chicago,) Prof. Hale being then director, offering him a professorship, he accepted, taking his glass to that observatory. Nine years of waiting elapsed before it could be permanently mounted there for photographic work, and the results then obtained in its use determined many points in the construction of the present sixty-inch glass.

While connected with the Yerkes Observatory, Prof. Ritchey perfected a scheme for adapting the forty-inch visual refractor there to the direct photography of the moon, star clusters, etc. The experience which he gained in photographic work with this refractor—the largest telescope of its kind in the world—led to the development of many of the unique features which have been embodied in the design of the sixty-inch reflector.

No great accomplishment in science comes by accident, and this has meant close application to minutiae of detail such as is possible only to a mind of the finest fiber, and, combined with this, wearying months and years of mechanical labor, for he has not only thought out his idea, but has wrought it out as well. All that he dreamed and thought is his earlier years, all that was learned at Yerkes, all that has been gained through the experience of others has been put into the construction of this telescope, and in its successful installation on Mt. Wilson will be proved the worth of his life work. Prof. Hale, who is an authority in solar work, and a brilliant observer of note, has left the department of stellar and nebular photography to Prof. Ritchey, and it is believed that by this glass vast knowledge will be added to the world's store through his photographs of nebulae and stars for which it is specially designed. Quiet and modest to a degree, as his friends all know, through all these years of toil and waiting, he has held with unwavering persistence to his one idea, and its success is but another proof that the world's marvels are brought to pass by the dreamer of dreams, the man faithful to his vision.

ROYAL SPANISH TOMBS.

Most Gorgeous Burial Vaults in the World—An Ancient Ruler on View Daily.

The Escurial in which for nearly three centuries the Kings and Queens of Spain have been buried is said to be the most gorgeous burial vault in the world.

It is an octagonal chamber, thirty-six feet across, with its walls, save where the coffins stand, entirely overlaid with precious marbles. The staircase which leads to it is of marble with jasper walls. The general effect is unspeakably splendid. In the midst of this magnificence are the massive black marble caskets let into the walls, containing the bodies themselves. They are all exactly alike, incribed simply with the names of the different kings and queens. There is room for just six more monarchs and their consorts.

Of another character altogether is the vault devoted to Spain's royal children—princes and princesses. Mere white marble rules, and very charming are some of the effigies over the tombs. The local name for the vaults is "the place of the little angels," and though many of the princes who lie here were not at all angelic in their lives the impression left by the white marble wings of the statues is one of spotless purity.

One unfortunate Spanish King, Don Jaime II, of Aragon, is daily on view in the cathedral of Palma, in Majorca. The sacristan of the place takes you to a yellow marble monument in the choir, opens a cupboard, and pulls out a very ordinary coffin with a glass lid. As poor Don Jaime died in the fourteenth century, he is not now at all a lively spectacle. His mummy is made gay, however, with imitation royal robes—cottony ermine, and so forth.—[Tit-Bits.

A Wife's Pleasure.

Mrs. Belle De Rivera, president of the Equal Suffrage League of New York, said at a recent dinner:

"We'd have had the suffrage, we women, long ago, were it not for that, where women are concerned, men are inclined to be a little unfair, a little churlish.

"Their treatment of women is on a par with old Hiram Doolittle's treatment of his wife. He made her keep a cash account, and he would go over it every night, growling and grumbling like this:

"'Look here, Hannah—mustard plaster, 50 cents; three teeth extracted, $2. There's $2.50 in one day spent for your own private pleasure. Do you think I'm made of money?"—[Exchange.

GIRL STIRS NAVY.

Commander E. J. Louis of the naval reserve and of this city.

Encouraged by him, she wrote to the commandant of the navy yard at Vallejo.

Coming from a young woman of 17, the dignity of it was great.

"I have been told," she said in the letter, "that the United States cruiser California is undermanned and that the recruiting department has experienced trouble in gaining recruits. The lack of enthusiasm and appreciation of the navy are directly the cause of the scarcity of men for the service. The boys feel themselves isolated. Few people outside of their families interest themselves in the welfare of the bluejackets. Sometimes they receive a welcome and sometimes not."

She told him, what is probably a fact, that this organization will be followed by others in different States.

She received a reply from the chief clerk at the navy yard who told her that the commandant could not authorize anything of the kind, but that her letter had been "referred to the commanding officer of the California, that he may know the great interest the patriotic young ladies of your locality take in his vessel, her officers and crew."

Capt. Cottman of the California was considerably more enthusiastic than the chief clerk.

He wrote a warm letter back, telling her that he needed five musicians right away for the ship's band. Within a few days he wrote her a second letter in which, among other things, he said:

CAPTAIN'S LETTER.

"Your letter was referred to the Navy Department and I am directed to inform you that the interest manifested by you in the manning of the California is appreciated and that combinations in civil life, such as you propose, with a view to increasing the enlistments in the navy should receive every encouragement."

He courteously explained, however, that it could not be guaranteed that all her recruits could be sent to the California. He explained that no enlistments are made for any certain ship. Recruits are enlisted for four years and sent to the training stations until they qualify for transfers to a cruising ship. Upon transfer to a cruising vessel their further advancement depends entirely upon their conduct and ability.

"But," he continued, "I am directed to inform you that requests from any man enlisted through your efforts to go to the California after completing his training at Yerba Buena Training Station will receive most careful consideration."

After this, Miss Gladys wrote directly to Capt. Cottman outlining her plan. She suggested that a little badge of "loyalty" be presented by her honorary crew to every sailor enlisted by them.

In her enthusiasm, she even magnanimously volunteered to furnish recruits to all other depleted warships and to act "as Reception Committee to any and all United States battleships arriving off the Pacific Coast."

It is plain that Miss Gladys intends to live the strenuous life. No one able-bodied person is safe. If you don't look out, she'll have you in the navy.

Capt. Cottman wrote again, making a few suggestions of his own about the appointment of committees to perfect the organization of the "honorary crew." He seems to take the liveliest possible interest.

One may imagine, however, that he smiled a little as he wrote the following kindly note:

"Regarding your desire for the honorary crew of the cruiser California to act as Reception Committee to the battleship fleet, I would suggest your writing to the Chief of Staff, battleship fleet, U.S.S. Connecticut, also to the Governor of California."

He evidently thought that that one small, if enthusiastic, girl had cut out a pretty big job to receive sixteen battleships, not to mention a torpedo flotilla and some miscellaneous supply ships.

The navy officers are evidently eager to find so pleasant a way of opening the respectable homes of Southern California to the forlorn and often homesick sailor boys, who are mostly decent, clean young fellows—ashore for a few hours' liberty and nowhere to go.

During the recent visit of the "pathfinder" fleet, Capt. Cottman and Miss Gladys met at Venice at a dance, and the commander of the California was so interested in the girl's plans that he is said to have almost lost consciousness that the dance was in progress.

Since receiving the virtual sanction of the Navy Department, Miss Lewis has told the plan to several of her friends of the Polytechnic High School and to Principal Francis.

With suggestions for some modifications, the idea has met with the greatest enthusiasm.

"I wish it to be particularly understood that the 'honorary crew' will further recruiting only in so far as the prospective recruits are fitted for the service," said Miss Lewis. "We do not intend to persuade any young man to enter the navy when he is technically inclined, and where that inclination would better suit his future on land.

"However, there is a demand for skilled workers and even musicians in the navy, and those young men who feel that their future would be bettered by a knowledge of naval training, and a better acquaintance with the world at large, or who wish to perfect themselves as engineers, electricians, carpenters, etc., will be aided in their designs and recruited by us, or referred to headquarters for further information and advice about the service. Many of the California Native Sons wish to secure a larger knowledge of the world, and this will place before them the opportunity.

"The Naval Board at Washington is only too glad to accommodate every member of the crew with government launch transportation to and from all battleships. A communication to this effect was sent to Capt. Cottman, and he expected, on the recent visit of the cruiser California, to have had the pleasure of entertaining on board every member of the 'honorary crew.'

"The proposition of our crew is not at all to be confined to California, as regards the idea. We sincerely desire that our sister States will decide to form organizations, using this crew as a precedent.

"The men of Admiral Evans's fleet will carry the idea back with them to the Atlantic, no doubt, and they will never forget us here in the Far West."

Defined "Grass Widow."

Presiding Elder G. A. Lenhoff of the Macon district tells this story of the late Bishop W. W. Duncan of the Methodist Episcopal Church:

"When Bishop Duncan first went to Texas to preside at a State conference there he was suffering severely with hay fever. He was of a nervous disposition and referred to his malady with such frequence that it became a bit tiresome to the preachers. A brother got up to make a report and in the course of it he used the term 'grass widow.'

"'Grass widow!' cried the bishop; 'I've heard that expression used half a dozen times since I've been here. I never heard it before. Will you please tell me, sir, what grass widow is?'

"The offending brother looked as calm and as serious as an undertaker during the storm of laughter which the bishop's speech had developed. When things quieted down he said, very gently:

"'A grass widow, bishop, is a woman

INSURANCE NOTES.

The report that the Eagle Fire Insurance Company of New York has reinsured all its risks and gone out of business is unwelcome news to several losers by the great fire in San Francisco, who had sued the company for the total amount of their policies. The Eagle company is one of the concerns that welched during the fire of April, 1906, and the net result of the present move by the directors of the company is consequently a total loss to the policy holders remaining unpaid.

The annual report of the Connecticut Insurance Department says the total assets of 148 companies show a decrease of $662,658.15, and the liabilities, including statutory deposit, an increase of $4,056,788.34. The surplus, as concerns policy holders, decreased $5,026,856.49. The premiums received during 1907 show an increase of $6,011,702.55 for fire, and an increase of $870,901.20 for marine. The total income for 1907 was $257,729,548.55, a decrease of $71,723,930.12 from the previous year. The total outgo for 1907 was $224,489,906.42, the excess in income being $33,239,642.13. The losses paid in 1907 show a decrease of $115,026,790.37, and the expenses, excluding dividends and remittances to home office, amounted to $97,245,417.48, or an increase of $10,691,389.84 over 1906.

Judge Seawell has decided that the act passed by the last Legislature of this State forbidding the issuance of certificates of authority to insurance companies which transfer cases pending against them from the State to the Federal courts, is special legislation, and therefore unconstitutional. In the Federal courts a jury must be unanimous in this class of cases, whereas in the State courts only a three-fourths vote is required. It is to the interest, therefore, of insurance companies to have the cases against them tried by the Federal courts.

Health and accident insurance companies have been disposing of thousands of policies in Indiana by disposing of them to merchants, who gave them away with sales. The coupon policy, which is sold in this manner, is an impressive-looking document. Usually one sheet of paper contains a number of policy contracts, the policies being separated by perforations. When a customer has bought a sufficient quantity of goods, say $20 worth, the merchant tears off a policy and makes him a present of it. The policy insures against only a few diseases and a few different kinds of accidents, and these are diseases and accidents that are not common. For example, one policy insured against accidents caused by lighting fires in hotels and street-car collisions.

Insurance companies which have held policies on stocks of tobacco destroyed by night riders in Kentucky have refused to pay the same, on the ground that they were not liable for property destroyed by a mob or by a riot. Judge Fleming Gordon of Hopkinsville, before whom suit against the insurance companies was recently brought, holds that insurance companies pay losses due to incendiarism, and that if they pay a loss caused by one incendiary, there is no reason why they should not pay a loss started by ten or 100 incendiaries. It is likely that the suits will be taken to the higher courts, and possibly to the United States Supreme Court.

Embezzlements by insurance men during the month of January amounted to only $300, according to reports collected by the fidelity department of the Fidelity and Casualty. The total of defalcations of all kinds during the month was $616,428.

The Continental Insurance Co. of New York, announces that its loss experienced on schoolhouses and boarding schools shows that on brick schoolhouses all over the United States the average rate for 10 years was 35 cents, the average fire loss 24 cents and the loss ratio 70 per cent. On contents the average rate was 39 cents, the fire loss 31 cents and the loss ratio 79 per cent. The company tells its agents that as a rule risks in this class should pay as much for one year as they now do for three, the fire cost, showing that 50 cents a year, or $1.25 for three years, is necessary for a reasonable profit.

A prominent New York underwriter says the reason there is so much rotten fire hose is due to the custom of folding and packing the hose in a wagon, and it goes without saying that wherever there is a bend or a fold it will very soon become more or less weak and with a little extra pressure will break. The hose should be carried on a reel or in a coil so as to avoid any bending or doubling of it. Just so long as it is folded we will have hose which is weak at different points.

THE SEASONS ON MARS.

The Year Is Twice as Long as Ours While the Days Differ but Slightly.

Were Mars not an older planet, corroborating by absence of cloud the general course of planetary development, our knowledge of it would have been slight. To begin with, it enables us to mark the permanency in place of the planet's features, and so to time their axil rotation; by which we come to knowledge of the planet's day. This day proves to differ little from our own in duration, being twenty-four hours and forty minutes long, instead of twenty-four hours. Next it discloses the tilt of the axis to the planet's orbital plane, a relation which causes the seasons of the year. Now, the martian tilt, as well as the martian time of rotation, turns out to be singularly like our own, being, in fact, 24 deg., as against 23½ deg. for the earth. The year of Mars, however, is twice ours in length, which, joined to great eccentricity of orbit, gives it diversifiedly long seasons. Thus, in the northern hemisphere spring lasts 199 days, summer 183, autumn 147, and winter 158, while in its southern hemisphere the figures stand reversed.

The numbers have more than academic importance, for absolute length is as vital a factor in a season's influence as the fact of the season itself. Much may be brought to pass in twice the time which could not develop in the shorter period. And it is not a little interesting that precisely this possibility actually turns out to be vital in the vegatative economy of the planet's year.—[The Century.

Negroes Who Speak Irish.

"Oi was that surprised," said the Irish sailor, "they could 'a' knocked me down wid a brick. Think of ut—black men shpakin' Irish. Wus Oi dreamin'?

"It wus in the Bahamas. There's a colony there av blacks that shpake Irish only. Oi circulated among 'em. Oi bought 'em dhrink after dhrink. Oi had the toime o' me loife wid me black cronies.

"Ye see, they wus the rimnants of a colony of black slaves banished from Ireland to the West Indies in Oliver Cromwell's toime. Ireland had slaves in thim days, and her slaves, av coorse, shpoke the dear old Irish tongue. This here colony, them slaves' descindants, still shpake the Irish tongue in all its lovely purity.

Editorial Pen Points

It is astonishing that the fleet has been able to sail so many knots without getting tied up in any.

Gen. Castro appears to be such a bad actor we wonder that the theatrical trust hasn't signed him up.

It now remains to be seen whether Japan will be able to get out of debt as brilliantly as she got into it.

Considering that it was given a rise in salary it is a little disappointing that Congress hasn't done more work.

"Turn your face into dollars," advises a Kansas editor. Many a man has at least turned his cheek into dollars.

With the hero of the Merrimac and the hero of San Juan storming the citadel Congress may as well run up the white flag.

Every day that now passes brings nearer the conjunction of the man behind the gun and the girl under the Merry Widow hat.

The movements of the men on the ships are regulated by bells. When ashore in Los Angeles belles will still continue to guide them.

Mr. Bryan's friends will point out that Gov. Johnson is a reactionary because he confines himself to old-fashioned Democratic utterances.

If Wall street were to frame the pictures of all the men it ruined there wouldn't be a gallery in the world large enough to hold them.

The proposition is a very simple one. The United States should have a navy strong enough to make the rest of the world behave.

It seems that when George Gould ordered his sister Anna to "leave this country," she instantly obeyed him by crossing over to New Jersey.

Newport missed an elegant opportunity to give another monkey dinner while Prince de Sagan was in this country to act as the guest of honor.

This country is filled with business men who are worrying themselves to death, and, by doing so, prove that they are really not good business men.

When the time comes that there will be a society set that considers itself aristocratic because it is respectable, the outlook will be better than it is now.

Now that F. Aug. Heinze has returned to his occupation as a copper miner, the owners of adjoining claims may as well prepare for the usual trouble.

A Minneapolis editor runs a column in his paper under the headline, "What Other People Think." We trust that his readers duly appreciate the concession.

Evidently money has assumed such an ascendency, at last, that a man or a nation cannot even have nerve without it. Observe the humble attitude of Japan.

Hobson makes no mistake when he figures that this country does not desire to rank as the third naval power of the world. First place is what we have our eye on.

What with all the orangeade, lemonade, cannonade, and the intoxicating glances of our pretty girls we can't see what the sailormen would want whisky for, anyway.

"Billy" Sunday, the evangelist, has said that he would rather start a revival in Hades than in Harvard College. Well, there's no telling; maybe, Hades needs it most.

It will be about 7 o'clock of the morning when the fleet passes the Mexican border line and the prows of the ships are again in American waters. The hour will be fateful.

Of course there is no use trying to do anything with a woman who is "crazy over a man," but why a woman should be crazy over a monkey is the mystery that floors us all.

The reins of government in Great Britain at present are almost entirely in the hands of Scotch and Welsh Celts. This ought to make the prospect for Irish home rule more promising.

Perhaps Mr. Bryan was right in saying that the only way a young man in this country can succeed is by using his voice. Many of our most eminent prize fighters are living proofs of it.

If the people of the world would make the same efforts to secure happiness that they make to secure wealth they wouldn't miss so much that's worth while on the journey of life.

One-third of the population of Hawaii are Japs. The Pacific Coast would be able to show a greater proportion than that if "Red" Hayes had not stood on the ramparts with his snickersee unsheathed from its bloody scabbard.

We are somewhat unable to account for the presence of these Tyler Morses in the affairs of Anna Gould, because we have never heard of anything scandalous that they have done to entitle them to so much newspaper space.

Just as soon as the news is flashed that the ships of the line are again in home waters any American citizen, wherever he may be at the time, is fully warranted in emitting from his lungs three good cheers or more if he so desires.

A NATIONAL BOUNCER.

Many well-regulated institutions, wherein unrulies and undesirables are liable to appear, have a professional "bouncer" whose business it is to see that those who disturb the peace are put out. This country has been seeking a bouncer for some time. We have here a few persons not to the "manner born" nor to the manners conformable whose room is much to be preferred to their company.

The right man for this important position has been discovered. Rather he has discovered himself. The occasion again has revealed the man, as when Washington took command of the continental forces, and when Grant rose to the highest place in the army.

We hasten to make the nomination of the fittest man to appoint to the office of national bouncer. He has the courage and force of character and with a good law behind him he will fill this office, great as its importance is and strenuous as the duties it may impose. Fellow-citizens, it is hardly necessary to say the name of the citizen in mind for this high function is George J. Gould of New York. [Prolonged cheers.] He has proved his fitness for the office, his capacity for its duties. It will be no experiment to set him at the task.

"Leave this country," says Mr. Gould to sister Anna. The inference is too obvious to need expression in words. With her she must take her poodle puppy whom she brought over. The importation must be deported.

Sister Anna and her poodle pup were too much for the Gould family and too much for America. "Leave this country," is the stern command of the Gould family which had weight. The deportation was prompt.

Now let devotion to country be duly rewarded. Mr. George J. Gould is nominated as "bouncer extraordinary," with full powers to proceed. He has shown excellent judgment and no personal prejudice in his preliminary career. The motion is seconded and carried by a unanimous rising vote on the part of all the men and women and little children of America. Even the well-bred canine race join their yelps. The poodle is too, too much!

THE LANDS BY SUNLIT SEAS.

The sailor boys of the great white fleet have finished their arduous range practice with the big guns in Magdalena Bay which our friendly neighbor, Mexico, loaned us for a month. Now the ships have plowed their way through placid seas following the wake left by Juan Rodriguez Cabrillo's ships over three and a half centuries ago, and will rest in the bay by the Silver Gate where the Spanish admiral first flaunted the standard of a civilized nation.

Now begins real life for these brave defenders of the Starry Flag of Glory, whose broad field of blue speaks hope to all longing hearts the world around. In one more week the sixteen magnificent envoys of peace will ride at anchor in our own waters and the men will realize how beautiful this world is and how incomparably beautiful is their own land among all the lands of all the continents. Many of the sailor lads know the Hudson with its highlands, beautiful New England with its wooded hills, the great West with its broad plains, great lakes and noble rivers. But they have a revelation before them and will have these spring days all the way to Puget Sound all along the lands by the sunlit seas.

We must see that the sailor men shall feast their eyes to surfeit (if that is possible) on the glories of this first stretch along these shores by these sunlit seas. Take them all over Los Angeles, the fairest daughter among the sisterhood of cities in the world. Roll them over the plains billowy with sloping hills and the towering mountains with snow-capped peaks standing guard over the orchards where grow the golden apples of this last Hesperides creation ever can show to dazzle the eyes of men. Feast the sailors' eyes tired with watching the moving pictures made by Neptune with glimpses of Orange Grove avenue, Pasadena, with views along Smiley Heights at Redlands, and along Magnolia avenue at Riverside; exhibit the great panorama of beauty in changing scenes all along the mountain base from this city to the mountain barriers at San Gorgonio Pass, and they will declare that the valley with its spangled knolls where the mustard sets its crowns of gold and the broad blotches of fire-red poppies gleam like the stripes of Old Glory waving in the breeze has no match on all the broad continents of all the world. Go with our guests into the cañons where, in spite of the noontide blaze of the sun in a cloudless sky, the shadows sleep as peacefully as night, and show them the pied beauty of the wild lilac, the variegated cactus blooms, the gloss of emerald hue on the leaves of the arbutus, the modest white little flower the evergreen oak puts out as germ of the acorn from which other oaks shall grow to brave a thousand years the rainstorm and the wind. Do not permit these guests of the nation to get away and miss any of these features which make this land the glory of all lands.

Remember we have rivals at this season of the year. When the sailor boys get to the great bay of San Francisco they may be taken over the Santa Cruz Mountains to the city of Santa Cruz, where in the soft May airs the woods will blaze forth in wild azaleas massed in an abundance that glows over the mountains as far as the lookout on the highest point can see.

And Puget Sound may be dreary indeed when the long weeks of rain pour out their floods, but in June the earth has few fairer spots where the sun's rays paint more glorious pictures. In fact, if the fleet could go up the Sacramento River and thence to the headwaters of the Willamette and so on to the Straits of Fuca, there would be at this season one long incomparable panorama of beauty and grandeur of scene, each succeeding stretch trying hard, although in vain, to outshine the last one passed. The long stretches of Puget Sound, winding like a great serpent scores of miles between cloud-piercing mountain ranges, present scenes in their way unmatched upon the globe.

From San Diego to Tacoma the crews of the fleet are to see these many hundreds of miles of lands by the sunlit seas. As the summer suns in July become torrid they will sail away, following the path marked on the waves by the rays of the setting sun, to stop a few days in the Hawaiian Islands in mid-ocean. They will see the tropics again in the Philippines as well as the Flowery Kingdom of China and artistic Japan. The antipodes will spread their attractions before their eyes.

But when they get back to the Atlantic ports and scatter for a furlough over the country to their old homes they will tell it all, and when the story comes to an end their voices will sink to quiet tones, a far-away look will come in their eyes, and there will pass before their memory the Southland scenes, and they will declare that the earth had nothing to show to compare with the orange groves of Southern California, with the flower-studded plains and hills where the mustard waves its flag of gold, where the poppy glows, the mariposa lily spreads its wings of painted enamel, and in the dark cañons the mountain sides are studded with the lilac bloom, while the mocking bird makes the whole atmosphere vocal with his song, and the lark's shrill treble fills in the intervals of silence.

There are different kinds of "stayers." There are young men who won't stay at a job more than a month at a time who will stay till daylight in the morning courting a girl if her folks are foolish enough to allow him to do so.

And we declare to goodness, if right in the midst of the Gould, the Marlowe and the other spasms, Helen Maloney hasn't kicked into the ring again.

DENOUNCED BY THE PRESIDENT.

Notwithstanding the protests of "Doc" Haynes and Earl's little Express, the President sent to Congress on Thursday a message urging further legislation to enable the Postal Department to purge the mails of papers circulated in this country propagating anarchistic opinions. This message the President considered necessary to counteract the effect of the filibustering tactics adopted by a clique of socialists, cranks and anarchists to block the passage of bills presented at this session for the purpose of curbing the dangerous socialist and anarchist press.

Washington dispatches state that since this message went to Congress the secret service men have deemed it necessary to place a special guard about the Postmaster-General and other members of the Cabinet.

A part of this filibustering campaign has been conducted from Los Angeles by a clique of local cranks—and worse—with Dr. John R. Haynes among them. The point of view of the Evening Express, the local Haynes organ, is slightly different from that of the President. Commenting on this campaign of the filibusters, the Express in the issue of March 29 published the following:

"The attempt of Senator Boies Penrose, Pennsylvania's machine United States Senator, to muzzle the press of the country has been thwarted. As soon as attention was called to the real purpose and effect of his bill relative to publications the protest against it became so strong that it was summarily disposed of in committee and will not even come before the Senate for action.

"This information is conveyed in letters received by Dr. John R. Haynes from various members of Congress. Dr. Haynes was among those who protested against the passage of the measure, and he wrote letters on the subject to the California Senators and to several of the California delegation in the lower house.

"The Penrose bill was designed to give the Postmaster-General power to shut out of the mails permanently any publication which he deemed improper."

Its objections to the Penrose bill were summarized by the Express as follows:

"Under the Penrose measure the publication of only a few lines in a single issue that could be construed as wrongful could be made the basis for forever excluding the publication from second-class postal privileges."

The objection to the Penrose and other bills introduced at this session of Congress for the purpose of aiding the Postal Department in purging the mails of inflammable literature, and supported by the President, has come almost wholly from the socialistic and the anarchistic press and populace. It is only these that fear the ban of the law. They desire legislation which will permit the Postal Department to reject only those issues of a publication that are "notoriously anarchistic or immoral." The President recommends legislation that will suppress future publications of a paper once convicted of making improper use of the mails, and it is against this that the cranks—and worse—are filibustering.

It is through these cliques that Los Angeles is advertised to the world as providing a harbor and comfort for malcontents of the anarchistic type. Two weeks ago the dispatches from New York brought the information that the police of that city had discovered evidence that led them to believe that the plot which resulted in bomb throwing there on March 30 was hatched on the Pacific Coast and that one of the chief conspirators was hiding in Los Angeles.

In Los Angeles the Mexican terrorists established their headquarters, and it was from local cliques that they received aid and comfort.

Collier's Weekly published an article two years ago exposing the inner workings of the anarchistic party in this country; this article was accompanied by a map showing that two units of the anarchist organization are located in Los Angeles.

Straws in the air are a certain indication of a high wind; the gleanings of the anarchistic stubble appear to be floating freely in the atmosphere of Los Angeles. It is not from such sources that our city has become great. The basic purposes of both anarchy and socialism are not to build up, but to tear down, their insignia is the bomb, not the trowel.

SHIPS LIKE THE OLD MARE.

How familiar the homely proverb, "Money makes the mare go." The "mare" is like X in the equation and may be replaced with any word you please. Money makes the pot boil and puts something in the pot to boil.

Japan finds it takes money to make ships go. The programme marked out so confidently on paper for the "Island Empire of the East" to repeat the career of the "Island Empire of the West," and make Japan a new England, is not coming out as was expected.

Japan blew away hundreds of millions of wealth in her struggle with Russia, and like the poor man and his loaf, which he found it impossible to eat and keep, finds the country impoverished by this waste of resources.

A Tokio correspondent for American newspapers writes much interesting information about the straits the Japanese are in for money. The success of their arms in the field turned their heads, and their inexperience prevented them from seeing the inevitable results that must follow from the loss of crops while 1,000,000 men were in the army and from the expenses incurred to carry on the conflict. Flushed with victory the Japanese turned to material development and commerce. Many companies were organized and many enterprises undertaken. One company was the Nippon Kisen Kaisha, whose purpose was to control the commerce of the Pacific. The government gave much aid to this concern and it was expected to gobble the trade of the great ocean in true Monte Cristo style—"One! two! three! The world is mine!"

Already there is a pause in the great swallowing act. The Nippon Kisen Kaisha is almost bankrupt. Many corporations are actually passing through liquidation, and there is threatened a serious financial collapse which may check Japanese development for years to come.

Experience is a great teacher for nations in the aggregate as well as for individuals; and only by experience can the laws that govern trade and national development be well learned.

A CHILCAT JAG.

The curious feat of striking a great blow at the liquor industry and at the same time offending the temperance interests by so doing has been accomplished by "Lo, the poor Indian whose untutored mind sees God in clouds and hears him in the wind." The possession of this imaginative faculty has given the redskin an advantage over his white brother who loves the bottle and at the same time has brought down upon his black-haired pate the wrath of both brewer and blue ribbonist.

A Chilcat Indian has invented the boozeless jag, a temperance drunk, or whatever else particular fancy may dub this curiosity of the North. Necessity has once more proved the mother of invention. The Alaska Indian has had a taste for intoxicating liquor ever since the Russians introduced vodka at Sitka in the days preceding the Spanish occupation of the coast. There have been times of drought, sad days in Chilcat history, when the supply of elevating juice ran low and the natives have had to fall back on Florida water, which has absinthe beaten many blocks as a disturber of interior arrangements, both as regards the brain and that organ which lays around the appendix.

Owing, however, to a momentous discovery by a resourceful Chilcat, he and the rest of his tribe will never more be compelled to fall back on Florida water nor need they fork out good money for either Bourbon, Scotch or Irish. Imagination has come to the aid of the redskin. He will take a bottle, preferably one with a whisky label on it, fill it with water, drink, and allow "Science" to do the rest; in other words, he imagines that he's drunk—and so he is. He will dance and sing for awhile and finally wind up by beating his squaw in the good old-fashioned whisky style. He then goes to sleep in an actual drunken stupor. The worst of it is, he finds that when he wakes up in the cold, gray dawn of the morning after, he has the same old dark-brown taste in his mouth, the familiar swelled head and the same anxiety to get beneath a pump. This he considers carrying realism too far by the imaginative route, but he is willing to put up with it so long as he can get drunk for nothing, on nothing.

BEING'S MYSTERY.

[From "California: Where Sets the Sun."]

I wonder at myself, at my own being's whole,
At my soul's essence, its beginning and its thought,
So strange, mysterious, by God's own wisdom wrought,
Free-will its heritage, and yet in God's control,
Freest when it is God-swayed and sceptered by th' right,
Noblest when humblest it doth stand within his sight.

O mystery! what am I, whither do I tend?
Shall I live on forever, outlive stars and Sun,
And when they cease my being's life be just begun?
The circling centuries pass and long eons end,
Time ceases, yet this deathless and immortal I
Active forever lives. O what is destiny?

Forever onward, upward, higher, higher still,
Godward, unrestingly our spirit life may tend,
And then, O soul of mine! O what shall be the end?
To live with God, to do the fullness of His will,
A sinless, "self-poised personality" to be,
A deathless soul, reflection of Infinity.

ELIZA A. OTIS.

HOROSCOPE.

Sunday, April 12, 1908.

A placid, calm, non-threatening day save for disputes. On these there is a gloomy aspect, warning that tempers will flare forth suddenly and lead to rash words and worse deeds. Avoid all subjects of debate.

The woman with this birthdate will experience some annoyance in her family or close social circle during the twelvemonth, but it will be counterbalanced by a great success in a new undertaking.

The man whose birthdate falls today will meet with favorable results to his enterprises, but he must beware of a quarrel with a colleague or an employer.

The girl born today will be inclined to carelessness in dress. She will be set on professional success.

The boy born today will be quick in temper and unless his disposition to change on slight pretexts be curbed, he will be unsuccessful in business.

Kissing Girls.

Congress decided, last week, to spare the mistletoe from extermination on account of some girls having been kissed at various and several times under its boughs.

Oh, rubbish! Mistletoe should be saved from extermination, but the Congress of the United States should not have assigned so silly a reason.

Mistletoe should be saved because the Lord Almighty put it in the world and didn't consider it necessary to get permission from the lower house of Congress to do so.

As far as preserving the "sentiment" of the mistletoe—rats!

My experience is that the "sweet old ceremonies" of the yuletide are a lot of tiresome rubbish. They are mostly appreciated by sentimental old beaus, who like to mumble, aged, maudlin compliments to girls not old enough to know better. Christmas is great in your own little household, with kiddies, speechless with wonder. But the mawkish "sentiment" with which it is surrounded spoils it.

Any sensible person can enjoy Christmas without licking the pearl powder off some girl's face under a whited piece of mistletoe vine.

"Sentiment" makes me frankly and avowedly tired.

The man of real sentiment doesn't talk about it. He pretends it makes him tired.

Meal Ticket for the Prince.

The socialists, thinking to have a terrible revenge on somebody or other, have demanded the exclusion of Prince de Sagan, Anna Gould's beau, as a dangerous citizen.

Huh! A lot De Sagan would care. All he wants is "eating money." If there were three "squares" a day and a free ticket with the verdict of exclusion he would leap with joy.

Instead of being designing and dangerous citizens, the foreign heiress hunters are, in reality, pitiable. Sapheaded, weak-minded products of shot-out civilizations. Don't know how to work; not brains enough to hold the modern pace; fine, healthy appetites, they are only a poorer kind of "moocher," who lacks the necessary skill and courage to ride the brakebeam.

Valuable Dreams.

A boy jumped out of the window the other night at Azusa because he was dreaming that he was the Count of Monte Cristo.

That boy has a useful temperament—useful to his family. They are scared half to death for fear the young man may read a book of sensations some night and burn down the house.

They should really rejoice in the possession of a singular jewel.

My friendly advice to them is to give him gentle, pastoral books of farm life; books of the home and fireside; books on the simple life; books like "Elizabeth and Her German Garden."

Then when they awake in the morning they will find the cow neatly milked; the kitchen floor scrubbed; the weeds pulled from the front lawn; the windows washed.

Discreet reading at bed time of the first act of "Madame Sans Gene," which takes place in a laundry, might work wonders on the family wash day.

Consider the joy of the wearied housewife—mother of the youth of the literary nightmares:

"James, it is bed time now. Please take the biography of Abe Lincoln and read yourself to sleep; we need some rails split."

Strutting Artists.

Oh, Joy! Some thief has stolen "Cloud Effects" and the "Passing Storm."

Oh, would that some thief would pinch "Arroyo Pastures" and "Twin Sycamores" and "Sand Dunes" and "Laguna at Dawn!"

The police have a theory that it was a tipsy woman who pillaged a fashionable Los Angeles art gallery this past week. The explanation is perfectly obvious to my mind. It was some one tired of seeing all the same old near-pictures that are exhibited in Los Angeles. I would have done it myself if I had thought of it first.

In her ignorance—or rather lack of careful discrimination—the indignant art lover made a mistake and took some of Mr. Redmond's pictures which were actually good if somewhat stale in subject.

Nevertheless her desire to be a public benefactor was sincere. To my mind many of the art exhibitions of this city are not exhibitions of art but of insufferable nerve. Not to mention self-assurance!

What would you think of The Times police reporter if he issued invitations to a bombastic "reading" of his "works?" And then read a lot of accounts of burglaries as literature. I admit that the analogy is not perfect because some of the stuff that the police reporters write comes mighty near to being literature.

Prominent Banker—Huh!

Tears of commiseration would spout from the eyes of any tender-hearted person at reading the plaint of the "prominent banker" interviewed by one of E. Tobias Earl's reporters on yester e'en.

He wailed into the night at the deplorable activity of the motorcycle cops and said, bitterly, that because they insist upon enforcing the law the City Council should change the automobile ordinance. He says automobiles should be allowed to run at twenty miles an hour instead of twelve through the streets.

I should like to know the name of the irritating fool who said that. I don't believe he is a prominent banker. If so, he must be a faro banker.

You and I know as a matter of cold fact that the automobilist who runs at twelve miles an hour through the streets where is any traffic, carries Death on his dashboard. (Are there dashboards on autos?)

As to running at twenty miles an hour through the streets, it would be just as safe to give the fleet the privileges of having target practice down the middle of Spring street.

Sane people who own automobiles don't consider it any added inducement to kill a few people on the way downtown. As to the maniacs who want to get up reputations as Barney Oldfields, they have no place on the public streets. As civilization progresses, and we have things arranged as they should be, there will be a circular speed track as an annex to the insane asylum.

Hail to the American Fleet!

And Admiral Robley D. Evans

THE great fleet of 16 battleships is scheduled to arrive at San Pedro Harbor on Saturday, April 18, at 3 o'clock p.m. The arrival of the fleet in California waters marks a new epoch in history—the significance of which is scarcely realized by the average citizen.

The presence of the battleships in Pacific waters insures protection to the entire coast, from Seattle to San Diego. The idea that the battleships are to remain in Western waters seems to be not without foundation. At any rate, the government is alive to the necessity of coast defences, and large appropriations have recently been made for this purpose.

did the Board of Education offices? Because the old of- too small for the work of department. Moreover, they were and the public records of department not only were not safe had actually been water- and in part destroyed shortly were moved to a safe It is somewhat difficult to find a suite of offices large enough and quite well suited to the needs of the school department. The Security building offered very great advantages, and its management was able to make the change in walls, etc., that the work of the board required. Fifteen rooms were secured at a rental of $400 per month. In the old location, our rental was $195, and as two more rooms were required, it would have been $225, had we remained there. To have secured the same amount of floor space, we have now in the Security building, would have cost $300 per month in our former location. The elevator service—important, since hundreds of people sometimes visit our offices in a single day—is no longer inadequate. Our rooms are large enough now, and we are located in an up-to-date building, which is a very great advantage to the work of the entire department. When the Board of Education took the offices it has just left, the city had a population of 150,000; now it has a population of about 300,000. The volume of its school business has grown correspondingly; that is why new headquarters were required, and the additional rental did not come out of the teachers' salary fund, and, space for space, it would have kept the schools going just 35 minutes longer if applied to teachers' salaries. It cost the Board of Education $1790.60 to furnish fifteen rooms—as much as is sometimes spent by a business house in furnishing two or three rooms, and enough to have run the schools for 80 additional minutes if it had been applied to extending the term. None of the old furniture was stored away, but all of it is still in use in the department.

The board receives no salary for its services; it submits that the least the taxpayers can provide is suitable offices in return for the services the members gratuitously render.

An additional requisition and purchasing clerk was added to our office force, to comply with the new regulations of the Auditor's office concerning requisitions, orders, etc. Seven years ago, when the Superintendent's staff was increased to three men, there were 572 teachers, 24,254 children enrolled in the schools, and 125,000 people in the city. When it was increased to four men, there were 1020 teachers, 42,998 children enrolled, and 280,179 people in the city.

In regard to the statement of the Councilman from the Sixth Ward, that there are thirty temporary buildings in that ward, and that it has no representative on the Board of Education—an implication that the board has not distributed the school moneys fairly—we beg to state that since the non-partisan school board elected from the city at large a little over three years ago, has had the management of school funds, the amount expended in the Sixth Ward for sites, buildings and school furniture amounts to $164,783, and the board now has plans drawn for a new eleven-room school building, and options on sites for other buildings in that ward, which will increase the amount to more than $200,000, making an expenditure exceeding the entire amount paid out for school accommodations in that ward under the sixteen years of the old ward system of school administration.

In regard to the number of temporary buildings in use at present, after the funds secured for new buildings, by the bond issue of 1905, were exhausted, the Board of Education had no funds to erect permanent buildings. Its only recourse was to build temporary structures or turn the children into the streets. In August, 1907, a special tax was voted, which, when paid, will give the board $250,000. The first half of the tax levy, $125,000, should have been available on the last Monday of November; but, by act of the Legislature, the payment of this first half was extended to the last Monday of January. Since this amount has become available, the Building Committee has plans already drawn to build three new buildings, costing approximately $60,000, and it has an option on sites for other new buildings. By the time the schools begin next September, nearly every temporary building will be replaced by a permanent one. At present there is but one half-day primary school, and but three afternoon kindergartens in the city.

The principal of the Polytechnic High School is one of the ablest technical schoolmen in the entire United States. His rare success in school work is known to everyone. What is not so well known is that a large business corporation offered him the post of general manager, a few days ago, at a salary of $6000 per year. For serving the city early and late, as principal of a very large school, whose sessions begin at 8 o'clock and close at 4:45 o'clock, and in addition for the last two years as principal of the evening high school, he gets the sum of $3300. The interest he takes in advancing the Polytechnic High School is evidenced by such facts as that he spent $1000 of his own money in making repeated trips to the East to visit polytechnic schools there, that Los Angeles might have the advantage of the experience of other cities in constructing her schools. Such a man is indispensable to the city, but the Board of Education cannot compete with a private corporation in point of salary. It could, however, assure him of its intention to make the Polytechnic High School one of the foremost of its kind in the whole world, and to that end offer him opportunities to investigate and study the work that is being done in the great centers of technical instruction elsewhere. Los Angeles will profit immensely by this arrangement, for the careful reports of such an expert will put at her service the best educational experience of the world, and as Mr. Francis pays his own expenses, and the school will be carried on voluntarily by the present staff in his absence, this advantage will cost the city not one cent additional. In reply to the invitation of the National Civic Federation, the City of New York has just given leave of absence, on full pay, to twenty of its teachers, to visit the schools of Europe under the auspices of the Moseley Commission. Mr. Francis will represent Los Angeles as its member of the Moseley party.

As to trips to Washington, most cities are in the habit of directing their superintendents to attend the annual conference of superintendents and paying their expenses, for the advantage is worth something to the schools. Seattle, for instance, has done so for some years. The Superintendent of Schools of Los Angeles pays his own expenses, though he would have no occasion to go if he were not superintendent. His nominal salary is $4250 per year, and at his own express request his was the only salary in the teaching force which was not raised last year. Actually he gets something less than this amount, for the field work of the school department is large, and the automobile which he required was purchased and owned by him. Depreciation of the machine, tires, garage expenses, etc., come out of his pocket. The city pays for the gasoline and the repairs of the machine.

What is at stake in this controversy is the educational welfare of the schools of the city. What is evident to everyone familiar with their work is that

SUMMARY OF THE DAY.

Competition has been assured for the contract for building a railroad into the Owens Valley along the line of the Los Angeles Aqueduct; two rights of way have been secured, and two bids are on file.

Representatives of Royal Arch claim to have secured signatures for the majority of frontage necessary to add sixty blocks in the Seventh Ward to the wholesale liquor district, thus bringing three outlaws into the liquor zone.

The Finance Committee of the Council recommended yesterday to give to the health department an increased appropriation of $9000 to help pay salaries for the rest of the fiscal year.

The murder trial of Frederick D. Cook, charged with shooting Mrs. Amanda J. Cook, August 28, 1906, will open in Judge Smith's court tomorrow morning.

After being threatened with imprisonment for contempt of court, A. H. Butteskamp yesterday, in Judge James court, paid to Mrs. Mary Butteskamp $50 on account of family allowance awarded her.

Judge Smith yesterday refused to sentence Samson Greenberg on a charge of forgery, to which the man had pleaded guilty, and set May 2 for a jury trial.

AT THE CITY HALL.

RIVALS FOR FREIGHT HAUL.

OPPOSITION LINE SECURES ITS RIGHTS OF WAY.

Two Bidders Ready to Build a Line Into Owens Valley on Condition They Receive Exclusive Privilege of Carrying and Routing All Supplies for the Aqueduct.

A flutter of expectancy swept through the City Hall yesterday morning, stirred by a report from the Board of Public Works room that at least two bids will be received Monday for carrying aqueduct freight into the Owens Valley. It appears that the Los Angeles-Owens River Railway has suddenly become a prime factor in fixing freight rates. A bid from this company is expected, and many believe that the average freight rate named will be considerably lower than that proposed by the Southern Pacific company. It is pretty certain to be a cent a ton mile lower than the last bid received from the Southern Pacific.

Bids for carrying freight must be accompanied by a pledge and a bond to build a railroad to Jawbone Cañon within sixty days from the date of signing the contract, and to Independence within two and a half years. It is over this road that the city purposes to ship all its aqueduct freight. When the first advertisement was inserted the only reply came from the Southern Pacific Company offering to build the line and carry the freight for about 6 cents a ton mile.

The Board of Public Works decided that the price named was excessive; the commissioners say that the rate should not be higher than that charged for local business on the Mojave division of the Southern Pacific and Santa Fé railways. This rate is about 4½ cents a ton mile.

President Edwards of the Board of Public Works said yesterday morning that the Los Angeles-Owens Valley Company has completed its survey for a line running into the Owens Valley; he said that he believes this company will bid for carrying aqueduct freight.

The Southern Pacific company has gained a lead over any competitor by grading the roadbed for about four miles out of Mojave on the way to Jawbone Cañon. It is in shape to build to the cañon, eighteen miles, by July 1, but it is doubtful whether any other company can build to the cañon so soon. It was suggested yesterday that the opposition road may run traction engines from Mojave to Jawbone Cañon; at the cañon the aqueduct line joins the right of way of the Los Angeles-Owens Valley road, and from there to Independence it follows the line of the aqueduct more closely than does the survey of the Southern Pacific Company.

The company taking the contract for carrying aqueduct freight will be required to build 125 miles of standard-gauge railroad. In return for this it receives the privilege of routing all the freight to be used on any part of the aqueduct from Los Angeles to Independence. This privilege alone has been estimated to be worth $175,000 to a railroad; it would certainly be of great service to a new line in arranging for its eastern and northern connections.

The aqueduct engineers have estimated that the actual amount of freight to be hauled along the aqueduct from Mojave to Independence will be equal to 200,000,000 ton miles; that is, an amount equal to carrying 20,000,000 tons of freight one mile. The engineers estimated that it would cost the city 20 cents a ton mile to haul the freight by team, and 10 cents a ton mile if the city should build its own line.

Plans have been completed for the construction of the aqueduct through Jawbone division, one of the most difficult places on the great work. It is to rush material to this division that the Board of Public Works asks that the railroad be built to Jawbone Cañon within sixty days. The estimate of cost for this division is $2,000,000. To facilitate the construction work the division has been segregated into three sections known as the Red Rock, Pine and Jawbone sections. In crossing the widest part of the cañon a steel syphon will be placed a mile and a half in length with a head of 860 feet. There will be thirty-six tunnels in the Jawbone division; the longest one is to be 5129 feet in length.

READY FOR BATTLE.

LIQUOR FORCES ORGANIZED.

Mayor Harper, President Pease and three Councilmen from the ranks went down into the Seventh Ward in automobiles yesterday afternoon to look over the territory in the proposed extension of the wholesale liquor district. All last week representatives of the liquor interests were busily engaged in canvassing the district bounded by Seventh street, Ninth street, Central avenue and the Los Angeles River; they received the partial assurance from the Council Monday that if they would secure the signatures of a majority of the property frontage in the district the Council will include the territory in the wholesale zone.

Councilman Lyon asserted yesterday morning that the signatures of a majority of the property owners have been secured. He said that there is practically no opposition in the territory to being included in the wholesale district, and that the cry against it comes from west of Main street.

Clampitt, Lyon, Healy and Yonkin are expected to make an effort Monday to extend the zone, so as to include the debatable ground; if they can carry Blanchard with them they will have enough votes to put through the ordinance.

Anticipating opposition from the White Ribboners, the partisans of the liquor interest will attempt to have the discussion in the Council Monday limited to the actual residents in the affected territory; they will argue that the people of the Seventh Ward are the best judges of whether they desire wholesale liquor stores in their midst.

That there will be opposition to this is manifest from the efforts made during the week to persuade the Seventh Warders against signing the pro-liquor store petitions; present indications are that there will either be a postponement Monday for checking up signatures, or the question will be fought out on the floor of the Council. This is the last hope of the liquor interests, and the contest is pretty certain to be a lively one.

HUNGRY HEALTH FORCE.

MUST HAVE MORE FODDER.

The Finance Committee yielded reluctantly yesterday to the importunities of the health force for an increase in the department's budget appropriation. Health Officer Powers reported that there is no money in the fund to pay salaries this month, and that conditions for next month will be worse.

The Health Officer said that the department will be able to pull through the year on an increase of $9000. There was a short discussion as to the fund from which to draw this money, and the Finance Committee finally agreed to recommend that the increase be allowed, but decided to consider later the fund to be invaded in order to make up the deficit.

AT THE COURTHOUSE.

INSANITY PLEA OF MURDERER.

SHOT UNSUSPECTING WOMAN AND ESCAPED.

Surrenders Himself to Justice After Almost Two Years' Freedom, and Must now Answer for Death of Woman He Threatened and Hounded for Months Before Death.

Setting up insanity as his defense, Frederick D. Cook, 35 years old, will be placed on trial for his life in Judge Smith's court tomorrow morning. He is charged with having deliberately shot his divorced wife, Mrs. Amanda Jane Cook, through the head on a Santa Monica car, near Sawtelle, the evening of August 27, 1906. The murder was witnessed by six passengers. As the woman sank to the floor and died L. P. Bishop of New York grappled with the murderer. The latter fired one shot at Bishop before the revolver was wrested from him, broke away, and jumped off the car while it was going twenty miles an hour. He disappeared as completely as if the earth had swallowed him, nor was he heard from again until he gave himself up to the Fort Worth, Tex., authorities last November.

Sheriff Hammel was notified that Cook had confessed to the murder of his wife and the Sheriff brought him back here to stand trial. Cook stated at the time that he was insane, had been attacked by malarial fever in Texas, where he had gone after the murder, and believed that his time on earth was short. For that reason he decided that he might as well make a clean breast of the affair.

The crime is said by Asst. Dist.-Atty. C. C. McComas, who will conduct the prosecution, to have been long premeditated, absolutely cold-blooded, and without excuse. Cook, who was born in Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, was a plasterer by trade. He went to Boston at the age of nineteen and there in 1894 married the woman whom he afterwards murdered, and by whom he had three children.

He became greatly interested in odd religious ideas, wrote books and poetry on these themes, took up with free love ideas, was a preacher on Boston's streets, and finally in a quarrel with his wife, shot her and fled from Boston, ostensibly for Zion City, Ill., where he said he intended to unite with the Dowieites. We went to Oklahoma and from there came to California, where he roamed from one place to another.

Mrs. Cook finally located him and followed him west with her children. He refused to support her, yet when she began divorce proceedings against him on the grounds of cruelty, he told her repeatedly that if she prosecuted her suit he would murder her, her attorney, the judge, and her witnesses. The divorce was granted in July, 1906, and thereafter Cook haunted the Detention Home, where his wife was housekeeper. Once he cut a hole through a window screen and leveled a revolver at her, but was scared away. The woman lived in constant terror of him.

The day before the final tragedy, Mrs. Cook went to The Palms to see her son, who was living with a friend. The next evening she was seen to get on a Santa Monica car at Pier avenue, Ocean Park, followed by her husband. It is doubtful if she recognized him, for Cook had had his hair dyed red and wore a false moustache.

He and his former wife sat side by side in the car, but did not talk together. Near Sawtelle, the man changed his position to the seat near the aisle and then pulled a gun from his pocket and fired into his former wife's forehead. She fell to the floor and died without a sound. The murderer fired two more shots before he was disarmed and escaped in the darkness.

Attorney R. C. Nobleman and S. M. Smyser, who will conduct Cook's defense, say that they will produce unquestionable proof that their client is insane and has been so for many years. They assert that they have many depositions from the East to establish their contention that dementia runs in Cook's family and was inherited by him and that his wife, a most estimable person, was the victim of an unfortunate madman.

FOUND THE MONEY.

WAS THREATENED WITH JAIL.

"I have been unable to collect any money from my debtors because they seem to think they owe me nothing," A. H. Butteskamp, an architect, told Judge James yesterday in his examination on an order to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt of court.

Mrs. Mary Butteskamp, whom her husband is suing for divorce on grounds of cruelty, last December filed against him a suit for separate maintenance, and the court then awarded her $50, with the provision that Butteskamp continue to pay $25 monthly for the support of herself and her two small children until the divorce suit is tried. Butteskamp provided only $45.

Judge James decided yesterday that Butteskamp must pay $50 or be remanded to the custody of the Sheriff. He paid.

"I, my children, and my sister, Mrs. Anna Poscharski, are living in one room at No. 441 Ruth avenue, and we live on what we can earn," said Mrs. Butteskamp. "We spent our last 20 cents for breakfast just before we came to court this morning. It is not true that we have any income from a $15,000 estate, as my husband stated."

ASSERTS INSANITY.

WAS IN EASTERN ASYLUMS.

"I have done these things before when the insane fit has seized me," said Samson Greenberg yesterday when he was arraigned before Judge Smith for sentence on his plea of guilty to a charge of passing on H. Klibanski last November an $18 check to which W. H. Carlson's name was forged. He passed two other forged checks on other persons last fall.

"I have been committed to eastern asylums three times," said Greenberg. "Whenever my mind begins to give way, I seem to do these things. I do not ask for mercy, but I want justice."

A letter was presented to the court from Rev. Gordon W. Hill, a Baptist evangelist of Illinois, who stated that four years ago Greenberg had been a heavy drinker, and became insane at Lindon, Ky., and was sent to an insane asylum. After his release, he went to Louisville, committed a forgery, and was returned to the institution. On being let out, he came West, and has been in California for about two years. The police here say he has served time in San Quentin.

Judge Smith decided that the man's mental condition is sufficiently in doubt to make his trial by jury advisable, and he, therefore, directed that the plea of guilty be withdrawn and the trial set for May 2. Greenberg had previously asked for a jury trial, but had changed his mind, as he said he could not get answers to his letters from his brother and sister in San Francisco, who refused to communicate with him. The court directed that their depositions be taken.

COURTHOUSE NOTES.

BREVITIES MISCELLANEOUS.

CHURCH PROPERTY. By granting a non-suit, Judge Wilbur yesterday decided adversely to J. M. Fouse and other officers of the Mt. Olivet Baptist Church (negro) congregation in their suit against the former pastor, Rev. G. W. Shields, and others to establish a trust in the Santa Fé avenue church property. The court held that the congregation had allowed its rights to lapse.

COLLISION. Alleging that two of his ribs were broken and that he sustained other serious injuries in a collision between two street cars, at Main and Third streets, April 14, 1907, T. J. Buckley, a passenger on one of the cars, yesterday filed in the Superior Court a $11,100 damage suit against the Los Angeles Railroad Company.

CONDEMNATION. Suits in condemnation proceedings to open up Claremont avenue from Garfield avenue to Marengo street, Catalina avenue from Locust street to the right of way of the Southern California Railroad Company, and to widen Mentor avenue from Elms tract to Arden road, all in Pasadena, were filed yesterday in the Superior Court by the city of Pasadena against property owners affected.

CHARIVARI. Justice Selph yesterday set April 23 as the time for the examination of Walter Hall and Walter Lappan on a charge of assault with a deadly weapon preferred by W. E. Reeves. It is alleged that the two men fired charges of bird-shot into a crowd of merrymakers who attempted to celebrate's Hall's marriage at Randalia station last Monday evening. Reeves's son was injured. Both Hall and Lappan gave bail.

APPEAL STANDS. Judge Houser yesterday handed down a decision refusing to dismiss J. Goldner's appeal from Justice Stephens's decision in favor of Justice Pierce, who sued Goldner and others to collect $250, attorney's fees.

GETS TWO YEARS. Antonio Fieras, who pleaded guilty yesterday to a charge of having burglarized F. A. Dewey's house, March 17, was sentenced by Judge Smith to two years in Folsom.

APPEAL DISMISSED. Owing to the non-attendance of attorneys to plead the case, Judge Smith yesterday dismissed F. A. Greenwald's appeal from a police court judgment in January by which he was fined for conducting a restaurant without a permit from the Board of Health.

SCRIP INVOLVED. When Gilbert Collins and W. H. Collins were arraigned before Judge Smith yesterday to plead to a charge of having raised $1 clearinghouse certificates to $10 last fall, their counsel presented a demurrer, on the ground that the offense charged is not a public one under the statutes. The demurrer was taken under advisement.

President Fillmore announces the engagement of Mr. Geo. Anderson, the well-known voice teacher, as an instructor in his school. Mr. Anderson is a graduate in voice culture of the American Conservatory of Music, Chicago, and has had twelve years' experience as a teacher. He uses the pure Italian method of tone production and has made a most careful and exhaustive study of correct tone-placement and the proper development of the voice.

SKINS OUT.

FATE FAVORS FACE FIXER.

WITNESS FAILS TO APPEAR IN BEAUTY DOCTOR CASE.

Plenty of Others in Court to Defend Harris, Charged With Practicing Without a License, but Complainant Is Absent and Prosecution Is Likely to Be Dropped.

Although a dozen or more beauteous damsels with their faces as soft and pink as a May morning after the fog has blown away, appeared as witness in Justice Chamber's Police Court yesterday morning, there was no trial of John F. Harris, charged with practicing beauty-doctoring without a license.

The courtroom was crowded when the case was called. The witnesses were all on the benches anxious to testify as to Mrs. M. Ella Harris' capabilities as a beauty doctor, and as to her son's ability at finding the fountain of youth. Old women whose soft, peach-like complexions seemed to stand out in hollow mockery of their stooped shoulders and painfully rheumatic step, hobbled about with smiles that would have done well for a 16-year-old girl.

Dr. Harris's patients are angered even to think that the "doc" should be taken away from the beauty business to attend a sordid police court. They are even more angered that they should be called upon to show their lobster-like complexions to the court, but just to show how game they were they went to court, anyhow.

Women in all stages of the skinning process were anxious to testify. Many of them carried their faces swathed in veils because they looked like cracked crabs in distress, their faces sans cuticle. Others had one side skinned and the other side sun wrinkled.

Two of the star witnesses of the day had been put through the mill and had emerged with new complexions.

They were anxious to testify and strutted about before the forlorn-looking half-baked ones in much the same manner that a well-feathered peacock struts about in front of the pea hens during the moulting season.

Mrs. Harris, who invented the process whereby women have their faces changed, appeared with her attorney. Her son, John Harris, is charged with practicing medicine and surgery without a license, while his mother is assisting in the defense.

Mrs. Harris looked about the courtroom with a smile. There was excellent material there. As soon as her witnesses got on the stand the crowd would get the finest demonstration that ever happened.

But Mrs. Mary B. Rutherford, the complaining witness, was not in court. She was not in the city. In short, she had disappeared.

Mrs. Rutherford was undergoing the skinning process when she had an argument with Mrs. Harris as to the manner in which the skinning should be done, and Mrs. Rutherford left the institution. She placed her case before the local representatives of the State Board of Medical Examiners, and they arrested young Harris on the charge of practicing medicine without a license.

When the case was first called Mrs. Rutherford was sick. Her face was swollen and she was unable to attend court.

An officer visited her, looked at her seared and reddened features, and, returning to court, told the justice that the woman looked as if she had fallen through the roof of a paint factory. Mrs. Rutherford left the city a short time later. She was in great distress at the time. After having had one side of her face doctored she could not stop the process, and that side of her face is now as smooth and soft as a baby's. The other is wrinkled and according to Mrs. Harris, it may remain that way forever so far as she is concerned.

The case of the beauty doctor was indefinitely postponed, and unless Mrs. Rutherford can be found it will be dismissed.

RAWHIDE ROYAL-HERCULES CO. GOLD MINING STOCK

At 5 Cents a Share--Par Value $1.00

The Rawhide Royal-Hercules Mining Company has just been incorporated under the non-assessable laws of Arizona with a capital stock of $1,000,000, divided into 1,000,000 shares of the par value of $1.00 each.

The corporation has absorbed the Regal-Hercules group, comprising two full claims—about 40 acres—known as the Regal Lode and Hercules Lode mining claims. They are located in the Rawhide Regent mining district of Esmeralda county, Nevada, and are situated in the northwesterly part of the district about three-quarters of a mile northwest of the Regent mine; they end-line each other, making a block of 600 feet wide by 3000 feet long, running in a general east and west direction. This company also owns the Grady lease, or block "D," on the Royal Lode claim. It is remarkably well located, being a part of one of the biggest and richest estates in the entire Rawhide district. The Royal-Tiger is admittedly one of the big mines of the district and many of the best posted engineers of the camp place it at the head of the list. The Granger-Stinson lease on the same claim sold for $25,000 before shaft was 20 feet deep, they having opened 3 feet of $276 rock.

We cannot begin to tell you all about these properties in this advertisement. We would like, however, to furnish you with a map and a complete description of the company's holdings. Development work is now being pushed each day. For the purpose of providing sufficient capital to thoroughly develop the properties, the company has authorized the sale of a small block of treasury stock. It was originally intended to place the stock on the market at 15 cents per share, the incorporators believing the stock to have that value. We have prevailed upon the company, however, to let us first place a small block of the first allotment among our ground-floor subscribers at the low price of 5 cents per share, par value $1. This price is the lowest that will ever be quoted on this stock; it will increase in value very rapidly and we have no hesitancy in saying that in our belief the stock will sell for 15 cents or 20 cents per share within thirty days. The small allotment to be sold at 5 cents will last but a very few days, and if you desire to get in at this price it will be necessary for you to act promptly. Fill out one of the coupons below and mail it to us without further delay. If possible, call at the office and let us give you complete details about this splendid proposition. Please remember that this company has bought and owns outright two full claims of approximately 40 acres, in addition to the fact that it is operating one of the best leases in the camp. The stock is to be registered by the Metropolis Trust and Savings Bank of San Francisco, who will act as transfer agents. Please note that the president of this company is Mr. E. Grutt of Grutt Bros., founders of Rawhide. No further recommendation of this property should be necessary. We warn you, however, that unless you act quickly you will be unable to secure stock at 5 cents per share.

Money, like vegetation, grows fastest where it is most suitably planted. (Invest in Nevada mines.)

The rich man is he who has taken advantage of the good thing when it could be bought at first price.

For every man who invests there are ten men looking on. When Mackay found an opportunity to buy in at Virginia City, there were a hundred others given the same chance.

When Stratton showed faith in the Independence, a score of chuckle heads laughed.

When Wm. Bayly borrowed money at a bank in order to hold the Tom Boy mine he was sagely warned against mining investments.

When Schwab saw better chances for making money in mines than in steel his business judgment was condemned.

The sun of intelligence has just begun to dissipate the mists that have surrounded the mining districts, and the possibilities of weath revealed have stupefied the business world.

There is always room for a man of force, and he makes room for many. A feeble man can see the farms that are fenced and tilled, the houses that are built. The strong man sees the possible houses and farms. His eyes make estates as fast as the sun breeds clouds.

"Give me the man who can hold on where others let go, who pushes ahead when others turn back; who stiffens up when others weaken; who advances when others retreat; who knows no such word as 'can't' or 'give up'; and I will show you a man who will win in the end, no matter what opposes him, no matter what obstacles confront him."

Hearst got $60,000,000 in Nevada; Stanford took over $55,000,000; Jimmie Fair, with only one pair of overalls to his name, took $45,000,000 out of Nevada. Nevada's mines staked the Vanderbilts, Oelrichs and Floods; built the Mackay-Bennett Cable and the Southern Pacific Railroad.

Schwab is there; the Guggenheims are there; Westinghouse and Edison are going to Nevada; the Rothschild and J. Pierpont Morgan interests are already represented there.

IN CONCLUSION, LET US AGAIN URGE YOU TO ACT PROMPTLY AND BUY SOME OF THE STOCK OF THE RAWHIDE ROYAL-HERCULES MINING COMPANY WHILE YOU CAN GET IT AT 5 CENTS PER SHARE. AS SOON AS THIS STOCK IS LISTED ON THE EXCHANGE IT WILL ADVANCE BEYOND YOUR FONDEST EXPECTATIONS. TODAY YOU CAN BUY STOCK AS FOLLOWS:

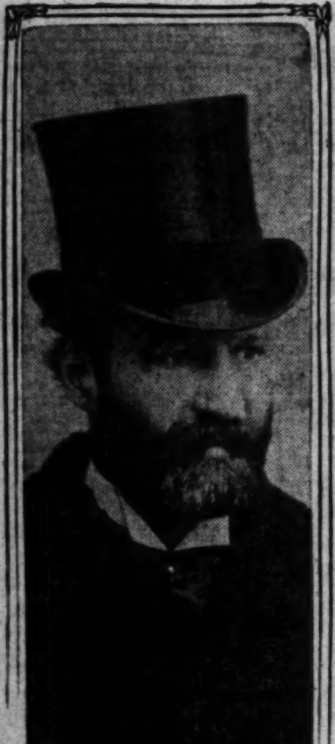
The only recourse for the naval lords is resignation, after which they can wag their tongues and tell what they know. Indeed, such a thing came very near to happening some years ago. Sir William Harcourt once made the public statement "that his naval advisers considered that everything was satisfactory and shipshape in the navy." Next day, to his surprise, these same naval advisers, bluff old sea dogs, waited upon him in a body and gave notice that if he did not make a public retraction of his statement they would resign and thus remove the gag that closed their lips. Sir William retracted.



Lord Tweedmouth.

Lord Tweedmouth, the present incumbent of this difficult position and the center of that "tempest in a teapot" which so recently threatened to sever the already torn and battered bond of good feeling between Germany and Great Britain, is a man of 58 years. With his black hair and close-cropped black beard he does not look his age. He was at one time the owner of Brook House, one of the finest residences in Park Lane, the Fifth Avenue of London, but he has disposed of it to Sir Ernest Cassel, the boon companion of the King. His wife, who died three years ago, was one of the daughters of the seventh Duke of Marlborough and a great society hostess of London during her married life.

Besides being the owner of 33,000 acres in Invernesshire and Berwickshire, Lord Tweedmouth is a large shareholder in Meux's, one of the largest breweries in England. He was supposed to have been hard hit about three years ago by the general slump in the brewery trade, when either by compulsion or choice he disposed of not only his town house and country seat but also of his magnificent collection of paintings. He has, however, retained his extensive collection of Wedgwood china, said to be the finest in the world.

Lord Tweedmouth is very fond of Americans, and one of the "treasure" he never fails to show to visitors to his home, from the other side of the "herring pond" is a half-crown piece (sixty cents.) It is set in a frame and underneath it are the words "Honestly Earned." It came into his hands when his father was still alive and the present Lord Tweedmouth was the Hon. Edward Marjoribanks and Liberal Whip in the House of Commons. He was standing in the lobby one day when two American women entered and asked him if he would show them about. So Mr. Marjoribanks took them about the House and explained all the "sights." Upon taking leave of their guide, the elder of the two women took a coin from her purse and presented it to the future peer with her thanks for his kindness. That is the half-grown which is one of Lord Tweedmouth's most prized possessions today and which hangs in a conspicuous place over his desk in his library.

HONORS IN DEBATE.

Los Angeles Boy at Harvard Member of Team That Wins Decision Over Yale in Freshman Contest.

A Los Angeles boy, Barry S. Ulrich, was one of the team of three Harvard freshmen that won the decision over Yale freshmen in a debate Friday night at New Haven. He is the son of A. L. Ulrich, of No. 2023 Magnolia avenue, this city, and a grandson of E. R. Ulrich, of the same address. His relatives naturally are highly elated over the honors in which the young man shares. Harvard took the negative and Yale the affirmative on the desirability of a national divorce law, and the decision of the judges in favor of Harvard was unanimous.

Ulrich is but 19 years old, and is a member of the class of 1911 at Harvard. He returned but a few months ago from a trip around the world. He is a graduate of the High School at Springfield, Ill., and was in Los Angeles last year, visiting his relatives. Ulrich's associates on the Harvard team were J. W. Frinkel of Boston, Mass., and D. Haar of New York.

As Yale won in a similar contest last year, and as the Harvard University team lost only recently to Princeton, there naturally is jubilation at Cambridge over this success.

TWO SAFES WRECKED.

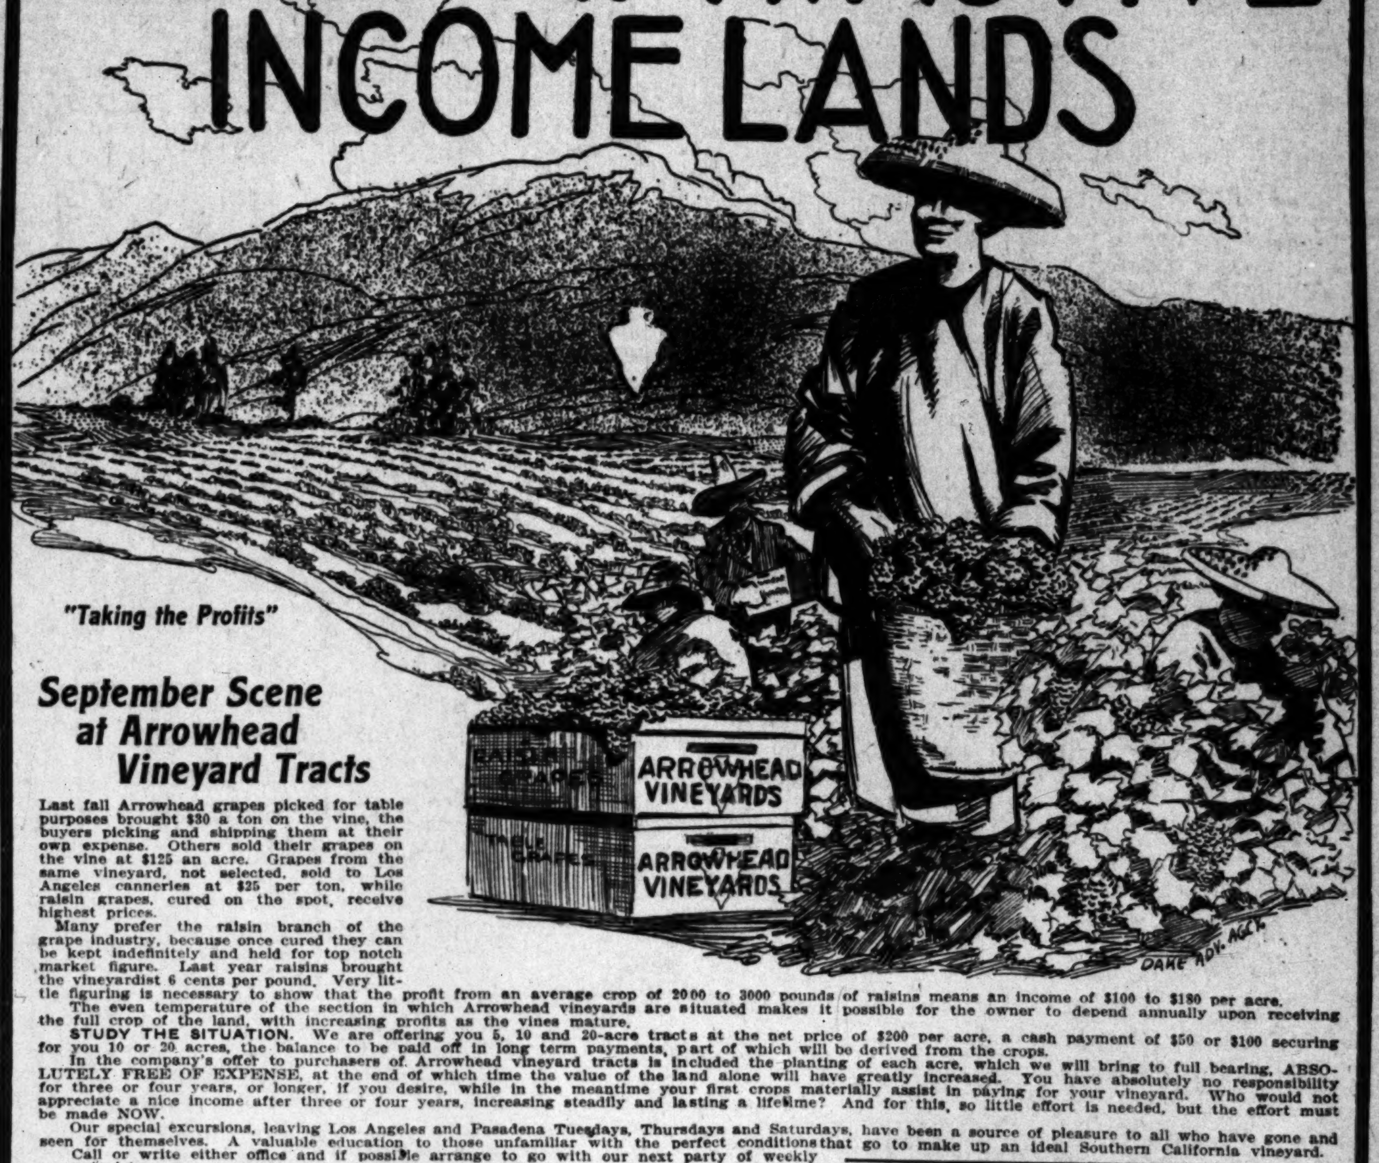
Cracksmen Get but Fifteen Dollars from Bairdstown and Nothing from Treasure Vault.

Two safes were wrecked early yesterday morning by experienced cracksmen. At Bairdstown, on the Pasadena Short Line, the safe of the Dillingham Printing Company, containing funds of the Wells, Fargo Company, was robbed of $15.15.

The explosion occurred shortly before daylight. Residents in the vicinity were awakened, but made no investigation. When the manager arrived shortly after 6 o'clock, he found the doors of the safe wrecked and splintered. The Wells, Fargo Company occasionally kept considerable money in the safe, and it is thought the robbers hoped to make a good haul.

The safe in the macaroni factory of H. G. Mines, at No. 801 Lyon street, was also attacked by robbers. The outer door was blown off and the inner one had been drilled, when the marauders were frightened away by men who hurried to the store.

HIGHLY ATTRACTIVE INCOME LANDS



"Taking the Profits"

September Scene at Arrowhead Vineyard Tracts

Last fall Arrowhead grapes picked for table purposes brought $30 a ton on the vine, the buyers picking and shipping them at their own expense. Others sold their grapes on the vine at $125 an acre. Grapes from the same vineyard, not selected, sold to Los Angeles canneries at $25 per ton, while raisin grapes, cured on the spot, receive highest prices.

Many prefer the raisin branch of the grape industry, because once cured they can be kept indefinitely and held for top notch market figure. Last year raisins brought the vineyardist 6 cents per pound. Very little figuring is necessary to show that the profit from an average crop of 2000 to 3000 pounds of raisins means an income of $100 to $180 per acre.

The even temperature of the section in which Arrowhead vineyards are situated makes it possible for the owner to depend annually upon receiving the full crop of the land, with increasing profits as the vines mature.

STUDY THE SITUATION. We are offering you 5, 10 and 20-acre tracts at the net price of $200 per acre, a cash payment of $50 or $100 securing for you 10 or 20 acres, the balance to be paid off in long term payments, part of which will be derived from the crops.

In the company's offer to purchasers of Arrowhead vineyard tracts is included the planting of each acre, which we will bring to full bearing, ABSOLUTELY FREE OF EXPENSE, at the end of which time the value of the land alone will have greatly increased. You have absolutely no responsibility for three or four years, or longer, if you desire, while in the meantime your first crops materially assist in paying for your vineyard. Who would not appreciate a nice income after three or four years, increasing steadily and lasting a lifetime? And for this, so little effort is needed, but the effort must be made NOW.

Our special excursions, leaving Los Angeles and Pasadena Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, have been a source of pleasure to all who have gone and seen for themselves. A valuable education to those unfamiliar with the perfect conditions that go to make up an ideal Southern California vineyard.

Call or write either office and if possible arrange to go with our next party of weekly excursionists.

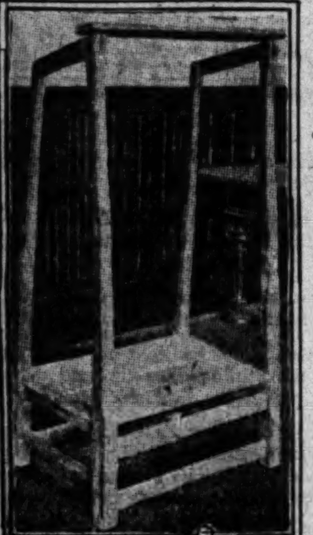
METHODISM.

CHANCES FOR "BRICKLAYER."

Baltimorean Thinks Will Be Made Bishop.

Retirements and More Places Call for New Men.

Early History Began in the Southern City.



Dr. Robert McIntyre, of Los Angeles, whose friends will urge the Baltimore conference to elect him a bishop; and (above) first pulpit of Methodism built in America, to be exhibited at the conference.

The General Conference of the Methodist church will meet in Baltimore on Monday, May 6, and the Southern California delegation will start East from this city on March 29. The delegation consists of Rev. Dr. Robert McIntyre, pastor of the First Church, this city; Rev. E. J. Inwood, pastor of University Church, this city, but of Riverside when elected; Rev. H. W. Peck, presiding elder of the Fresno district; Rev. A. W. Adkinson, presiding elder of the Los Angeles district; Mrs. I. J. Reynolds, Pasadena; Hugh E. Smith, Los Angeles; C. M. Drew, Fresno; George L. Hazard, Whittier.

The near approach of the conference has created new interest in the history of the great denomination, and has also started afresh the talk of Dr. McIntyre's chances for being elected a bishop. News has been received here of a concerted movement on the part of his friends throughout the country, looking to his success, but nothing is known of it locally.

Dr. McIntyre has become widely known as "The Bricklayer Preacher," because he laid brick to earn the money with which to educate himself, and he has unexpectedly developed a following all over the United States, entirely without any effort on his part. He is a candidate only in the sense that his friends have made him such, and he knows less about what is going on in that connection than any one of his friends who may be met on the street.

Henry B. Walters, a Baltimore merchant, passed through Los Angeles a few days ago, and being a prominent Methodist layman, he naturally talked upon the all-absorbing topic.

"The Methodists of Southern California ought to have a resident bishop," he said, "as the work is too 'far-flung' for one man to properly supervise it, and Bishop Hamilton finds it growing on his hands. Your great preacher, Dr. McIntyre is well and favorably known throughout all the conferences, and is known to be fitted to make an ideal bishop. For this reason, and for the additional one that his friends mean to hustle to secure the honor for him, the Baltimore conference has a decided interest for Los Angeles and Southern California."

Chaplain O. J. Nave of this city said yesterday, in talking over the Episcopacy situation:

"I regard Dr. McIntyre as one of the greatest preachers in the Methodist church, and the church would do herself great credit in electing him as one of its bishops. He is a fine Bible scholar, a man of unusual eloquence and power in the pulpit, and that is what we need among the bishops. We have parliamentarians in great plenty, and men of executive ability by the side of whom Dr. McIntyre will hold his own, but what we really need is not men of executive ability only, but great preachers as well among our bishops. I sincerely hope that he may be chosen for the high office by the General Conference."

Coming from Chaplain Nave, himself a power in the pulpit, and a Bible scholar of world-wide fame, through the two teachers' Bibles of which he is the author, this is a strong indorsement of Dr. McIntyre. As for the Methodists of Southern California, and many people of other denominations, they need no other indorsement than their intimate knowledge of the man. As pastor of the First Methodist Church of this city he has become very popular and his work has been marked by the greatest success. The pressure is so great to hear him that precautions had to be taken long since to protect a portion of the seating capacity in the church, in order that the members could find seats, and at every service hundreds of persons are turned away from the doors. He is now serving his sixth year, and there is a greater anxiety on the part of people to hear him than there was during his earlier years in Los Angeles.

WORLD OF METHODISM.

Mr. Walters was also enthusiastic with reference to the preparations being made at Baltimore for the reception of the 50,000 visitors expected there during the General Conference. Baltimore is a city twice the size of Los Angeles and yet it is compelled to house the General Conference in Lyric Hall, a building that cannot class even with our late and unlamented Hazard's Pavilion, in which the quadrennial body met in 1904. There are 131 annual conferences, making the total close to 800 official delegates. They come from all over the world, there being 112 conferences in the United States, 96 English, 10 German, 4 Swedish, and 2 Norwegian-Danish. In addition there are 19 foreign conferences, of which India has 6, China 3, South America 2, Germany 2, and 1 each from Switzerland, Sweden, Norway, Italy, Mexico and Africa.

The year book for 1908 shows a membership of 3,334,624, of which 2,450,353 are in the United States, and a fair estimate places the number of people influenced by the teachings of Methodism, at 10,000,000.

John Wesley began the combat single-handed in England in the eighteenth century, and when he came to Savannah, Ga., and established there the first mission for the spread of his doctrines, it was a failure. Mr. Walters, in speaking of the history of the Methodist church, said:

"Methodist historians differ as to the location of the first Methodist church building in America, some claiming the honor for the old John-street church in New York, and others for the old log meeting-house on Sam's Creek, Md., a few miles from Westminster.

A RELIC PULPIT.

"The latter was built by Robert Strawbridge, who emigrated from Ireland in 1760, and from it may be said to have grown the colossal denominational structure. A relic of this old log chapel will be on exhibition at the Baltimore conference, in the form of the first Methodist pulpit built in America, and constructed of wood from the old Strawbridge meeting-house, which seems to have had no pulpit.

"The real founder and father of Methodism in America was Francis Asbury, who was the first bishop, or overseer, in the United States. He died after forty-five years of service and is buried in Mt. Olivet Cemetery, Baltimore, side by side with Beverly Waugh, Enoch George and John Emory, who were also bishops of the early church. Eutaw-street Church, in which the remains of Francis Asbury were buried for many years, will celebrate the centennial of its dedication while the conference is in session.

"Baltimore is preëminently a Methodist city. It was there, in the Lovely-lane Meeting-house, that in 1784 all the Methodist societies in America were organized into the Methodist Episcopal Church, and from 1792 to 1824, all the General Conferences were held in that city. After sixteen years, the conference met there again in 1840, and not again until 1876.

MORE BISHOPS.

"It was here in Los Angeles that the General Conference inaugurated the system of superannuating bishops, and it is almost certain that others will be retired at the Baltimore gathering, to make way for younger men. In addition to these, it is also likely that the total number of bishops will be increased, thus opening the way for a number of new men.

"In common with all legislative bodies, the General Conference has not escaped the charge of politics in spiritual things, but though favoritism may sway votes, it is certain that in the choice of bishops, only merit wins in any case, and the man upon whom the honor falls is certain to be worthy of it. California, with her two large conferences, should have a wide influence in shaping legislation, as well as in the election of bishops, and I can see no reason why Dr. McIntyre should not be one of them."

Dr. Robert McIntyre is distinctly a self-made man. He was left an orphan when a child, and was thrown entirely upon his own resources. He went the rounds of every calling in the reach of an energetic and talented boy—from a "peanut butcher" on the railroad to an actor on the stage. He finally settled down to about the hardest work any boy could choose for himself and learned the trade of a brickmason. When the city of Chicago was destroyed by a great conflagration he was working at his trade in Philadelphia, and answered the call for men to rebuild the city of the West. Later, he was converted to Christianity in St. Louis, studied for the ministry and served his first charge at Easton, Ill., in 1878. Remarkable as it seems, just ten years later he was pastor of the great Grace Church, Chicago, where he served the three-year limit; went from there to Denver, serving Trinity Church, the greatest in Colorado, for five years; returned again to Chicago as pastor of that city's leading congregation of St. James Church, and after five years removed to Los Angeles, and has been pastor of the First Church since 1902. He is known far and wide as a platform lecturer, and as the expounder of high and noble sentiment and as an entertainer he has few superiors in America. But first and above all, he is an earnest and eloquent expounder of the old Gospel, which knows only an unqualified belief in the whole Bible, and which twice every Sunday draws throngs to his church that the house will not hold.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE LECTURE.

The Second Church of Christ, Scientist, of this city, has called Clarence C. Eaton, C. S. B., of Tacoma, Wash., to lecture on Christian Science.

Two lectures have been arranged for. One at the Auditorium, Fifth and Olive streets, at 3 p.m., Sunday, will be repeated at Simpson Auditorium, Monday evening, at 8 o'clock. Both lectures will be free to the public.

Mr. Eaton is a lineal descendant of Francis Eaton of the "Mayflower." He was educated in the public schools and Academy at Watertown, Wis., then learned the printer's trade, and was a newspaper correspondent for a number of years. He was for twelve years owner and publisher of a newspaper in Columbus, Wis., where he was elected Superintendent of Schools and a member of the City Council. He disposed of his newspaper in 1899 to devote his time to Christian Science. In 1902 he removed to Tacoma, Wash.

TALK ON STAR FISH.

The next meeting of the biological section of the Academy of Sciences will be held Monday evening at the Pacific College of Osteopathy. The lecturer will be Dr. C. O. Esterly; his subject, "Star Fish Behavior."

A Woolly One.

Senator Gilchrist, discussing in Albany his insurance bill, said of speculation:

"Speculative features, uncertainties ought to be removed from our life as much as possible.

"When I think of speculation, I think of a man I know.

"This man, a conservative, suddenly took to stock gambling. At the end of a flurry I met him one afternoon and asked:

" 'Well, were you a bull or a bear to-day?'

" 'Neither,' he answered, giving me a sour smile. 'I was an ass.' "—[Exchange.

A Round Trip Ticket.

A prominent railway man tells of a railway ticket that took a sudden journey on its own account.

It appears that, as a north-bound train on the Colorado and Southern road passed one of the stations, a passenger in a forward car raised a window, and in an instant his ticket was blown from his hands.

The passenger naturally gave it up for lost, and was much surprised when the baggage master handed it to him a little while later.

It appears that when the ticket flew through the window a south-bound train was passing. The suction of that train, which was moving at a rapid rate, drew the ticket as it passed the bound train it smoking car. the baggage

CHINO RANCH

32 Miles from Los Angeles—Adjoining Pomona and Ontario

RICH LAND $100.00 TO $250.00 AN ACRE

One-Fourth Cash—Balance in One, Two, Three and Four Years at Six Per Cent. Interest

ALFALFA

Last year's crop of Alfalfa on the Chino Ranch was worth $200,000.00. The man who has a comparatively small acreage in Alfalfa at Chino, and works it himself, can clear $100 an acre every year. From seven to nine crops of Alfalfa are cut from the same soil in a single season. Dairying, Poultry and Hog Raising work well as a side line with Alfalfa. An immediate market for Alfalfa, Milk, Eggs, Poultry and Pork is available to Chino Ranchers.

"I secured 10 acres of Alfalfa land at Chino in November 1906, for which I paid $150 an acre" says one Chino Alfalfa Grower. "Nine acres were seeded to Alfalfa a short time thereafter. Within ten months I made eight cuttings from this land, a net aggregate of eighty tons of first-class Alfalfa hay. I sold seventy tons at an average price of $10 a ton. The remaining ten tons I fed to my own stock. Not only was I ahead on the profits from my Alfalfa crop, but the land has increased in value to at least $350 an acre.

Good authorities today say that the man who has a comparatively small tract of Alfalfa at Chino, and works it himself, can clear $100 an acre every year, and live well besides. Ask for our booklet "Alfalfa on the Chino Ranch."

Ranchers Make Money in Many Other Crops

Chino lands are purchasable at moderate prices on very favorable terms. The soil is rich, water is abundant. If the practical man can make his first payment and get a start on the Chino Ranch he is practically certain of making a success of it—and can meet the deferred payments for his land out of the profits from the crops he raises. Many Chino ranchers are paying for their holdings this way.

You can buy Chino lands, with water delivered in cement pipes for $200 to $250 an acre. The water goes with the land—a share of water stock is given with every acre of these lands purchased. You can buy other Chino lands, equally as good, but not under irrigation, for $100 to $150 an acre. These are in the Chino Artesian Belt, where water can be had in plenty and where at present over one hundred Artesian wells are in successful operation. The favorable location of the Chino Ranch, 32 miles from Los Angeles and adjoining Ontario and Pomona, insures ranchers a ready market for all they can raise.

Some of the Big Chino Producers

Sugar Beets

Last year's crop of sugar beets on the Chino Ranch brought the growers fully $100,000.00. An immense beet sugar factory is operated in the town of Chino. It is possible to make a net profit of from $30 to $75 an acre from Sugar Beets. Many ranchers at Chino have gotten their start from Sugar Beet culture.

Potatoes

Chino ranchers raised $70,000.00 worth of potatoes last year. A larger acreage is going in this season. Chino potatoes average about $135.00 an acre for the first crop. The second crop, grown in the same land, the same year, brings almost as much.

Walnuts

About 800 acres on the Chino Ranch are set out to walnuts. While the trees are developing most ranchers work the soil between the rows of young trees to potatoes and other vegetables. This is the common-sense way of making a profit from the acreage almost from the start. Several recent purchasers at Chino are expert walnut growers who have made successes elsewhere, selling their developed groves at fancy prices and taking up cheaper land at Chino because they know it is fine walnut land.

Peaches - Apricots Apples

Deciduous fruits produce heavily at Chino. Estimated value of last year's crop, $84,000. Peaches average a return of $100 an acre; apricots about $80 an acre. On the Anderson Ranch at Chino last year there was sold from one tree $12 worth of peaches. Apples also are a success at Chino, selling last year from 1½c to 3½c a pound. Much new acreage is going into apples this year.

Oranges

There is much good orange land on the Chino Ranch. This land is under the irrigation system, and is sold at from $200 to $250 an acre. Oranges develop perfectly at Chino. There is a frostless belt and the dry air of Chino acts as a preventative to scale. One 10-acre grove at Chino paid a return of 20 per cent. last year on a valuation of $10,000. Ask for our special booklet on Citrus Fruit Culture at Chino.

Onions

Onions are a big money crop on the Chino Ranch. The possible yield is from $600 to $800 an acre. Some growers make a specialty of raising onion seed, for which they get big prices. Chino onions frequently grow to weigh from one to one and one-half pounds each.

Vegetables

Sweet potatoes, Pumpkins, Squash, Melons, and many other vegetables produce heavily on the Chino Ranch. Some ranchers go in for truck farming and make big money at it. Plenty of water is available and the soil is rich. The advantageous location of Chino insures a ready market for vegetables.

Dairying

Chino ranchers received about $75,000 for dairy products last year. There is a creamery at the town of Chino, which takes the milk. Dairying works well with alfalfa growing—and alfalfa is one of the big successes at Chino.

Poultry and Hogs

Poultry and hog raising are carried on to great profit on the Chino Ranch, either as a special business or a side issue with alfalfa or other crops. In both instances an immediate market is available for the products.

We want to take you out to the Chino Ranch. You can have no idea of the advantages it offers until you see it with your own eyes. You will find the great ranch a well settled community. It lies in and about the town of Chino, where there are good schools, churches, stores and practically all conveniences. Newcomers to Chino have none of the difficulties to meet that settlers in faraway, newly developed districts, must overcome.

You will find Chino lands "safe" lands to buy. Talks with the ranchers will show you how well they are doing. Here are no experiments—you can see just what others are doing—the proposition is a proven one.

Water, soil, location—all combine to the advantage of the rancher at Chino. You can prove these things to your own satisfaction, check up every statement that we make concerning the ranch, when you visit it. If you are going to buy lands anywhere in Southern California you owe it to yourself to make this trip to the Chino Ranch. Make arrangements with us tomorrow to do so.

A Glorious Day.

Commodore Sir Alfred Paget, a brother of Sir Arthur Paget, is frequently confounded with the latter in the American press probably through the fact that the elder married an American wife and the younger has passed many years in the United States, for a time as naval attache in Washington. Sir Alfred, with the Japanese, German, French and British army attaches, was present at the battle of San Juan, in the Spanish-American War.

The foreign representatives saw the engagement from a convenient elevation, and when the Americans rushed up over the hill in open order and the spectators realized that an actual charge was taking place their enthusiasm became unbounded. They fingered their side arms, and, as the red and yellow flag came down on the blockhouse, broke out in lusty cheer—all but Paget, who stood quite isolated, his legs wide apart, and his field glasses guled to his eyes.

Finally, Col. Arthur Lee, the British army attache, nudged his elbow and said:

"Oh, I say, don't you see the Americans have taken the hill? Why don't you do something?"

Paget deliberately lowered his glasses, and, as he snapped them together glanced at the German officer pointedly and drawled out: "Ah. What—er—a glorious day for the Anglo-Saxon race."

The continental officers suddenly became silent. Then the little Japanese snickered and got behind Lee, who politely lost himself in contemplation of the smoke-dimmed landscape.

Was a Real Widow.

"Rudyard Kipling, when he dined with me," said a literary Chicagoan, "told me about Simla.

"It seems that Simla is up in the mountains—the hills, as they say in India—and the ladies go there in the hot weather to escape the heat of the low country.

"Well, Kipling said that one lovely, cool morning at Simla, he was presented to a 'grass widow.' They call those ladies 'grass widows' whose husbands are detained by work in the hot cities of the plains.

"She was awfully pretty and charming, and as they talked together in the pleasant coolness Kipling said:

"'I suppose you can't help thinking of your poor husband, grilling down below?'

"The lady gave him a strange look, and he learnt afterward that she was a real widow."

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

the time has at last come to provide sufficient funds to pay the teachers adequately, and to place the educational work of Los Angeles upon the proper basis of financial support.

The Board of Education desires the people of Los Angeles to know that it recognizes the principle that it is responsible for the acts of all its agents, and all the acts of the superintendent and his deputies have been performed with the approval of the board. The members of the Board of Education are, furthermore, unanimous in their approval of the policy of the administrative officers of the department.

We welcome investigation generally. We recognize as a public body that we ought to be subjected to legitimate and rigid scrutiny at all times. We would suggest, however, that if we have been thought guilty of extravagance or financial mismanagement, that the most competent people to pass upon that question would be a committee appointed from the commercial bodies of this city, comprising men not only of the highest integrity, but likewise of the best business judgment in the management of their own affairs. Such a committee would no doubt give this board useful information in any event, and if any mistakes have been made they will detect them, and their entire action would clear the atmosphere of any question of policies or sinister influence. Respectfully, Getting Even With Hubby.

"We should give these men the treatment they give us," said Mrs. Boorman Wells, the English suffragette, at a ladies' luncheon at the Plaza.

"I know a woman in Park Lane whose husband used to stay out continually till 4 or 5 o'clock in the morning.

"She cured him.

"The last time he came home at dawn, he found her, in a low-cut dinner gown, yawning over a novel and a cup of tea.

"'I didn't—er—suppose you'd sit up for me, dear,' he said.

"'Oh,' said she, 'I haven't been sitting up for you, darling; I've just come in myself.'"

As They Each Told It.

"Frederic Courtland Penfield, who has just married Mrs. Anne Weightman Walker, is, perhaps, the leading authority on modern Egypt," said an Egyptologist of New York.

"Mr. Penfield is also a superb raconteur. At the Manhattan Club, one night, he contradicted, in my hearing, some story or other about modern Egypt, saying that the story reminded him in its falsity of an occurrence in the Alps.

"He was touring the Bernese Oberland. At the Bear Hotel, in Grindelwald, a mountaineer sat in the hall, a glass of beer before him, and his feet, in their hobnailed mountain boots, extended toward the fire. The mountaineer had just made an ascent of the Eiger, and he talked like this about it:

"'Well, well, well, a climb, indeed! Four hours of incessant step-cutting with the ax on an ice-slope as smooth as glass and as steep as a wall. Look at this bunch of edelweiss. I spied it on the edge of a dreadful precipice. My guide refused to let me pluck it; said it was madness; for his part, he would not risk his life so foolishly. But at last, what with eloquence and an offer of 200 francs, I persuaded him to come along. The advance was awful; one misstep meant death; but I secured the flower, when suddenly the guide's foot slipped, he fell, and began to roll toward the edge. But I thrust my ax firmly into the ice and, bracing myself, seized the rope that bound us together, and—the man was saved.'

"And at the same time, in the hotel kitchen, the guide was giving another version of the ascent, in words like these:

"'Well, well, what a customer! Another like that chap and I give up the business. From the start he was faint and dizzy. In fact, wherever any real climbing began we had to carry him like a sack of meal. And mean! Refused us a single penny extra for all our extra trouble. Last of all he begged for the sprig of edelweiss I wore in my hat, and I was fool enough to let him have it.'"—[Exchange.

MEN, I HAVE THE CURE

We want to talk to men who have pains and aches, who feel run down physically, who realize that the old "fire" and energy which was so evident in youth is absent now; men who can't stand the amount of exertion they could years ago. We want you—if that means you—to see what we have done for others who were just as bad off. That's our introduction. If a friend in whom you had confidence presented someone to you and said, "Jack, here's Brown; he has made good with me, and I trust him," wouldn't you trust him, too? If you will tell us where you are, we will give you the name of a man in your town whom we have cured. We have cures everywhere.

I WILL PAY $1000 FORFEIT

for a case of nervous debility, varicocele, rheumatism, lame back, lumbago, sciatica, any case of kidney disease that has not gone as far as Bright's Disease, indigestion, constipation or any weakness, which we cannot cure with our new improved Electric Belt, the marvel of electricians, the most wonderful curative device that has ever been introduced. This Belt is complete with Free Electrical Suspensory.

This Electrical Suspensory carries the current direct and cures all weaknesses of men, varicocele, etc. It develops and expands all weak nerves and checks a loss of vitality. No case of failing vigor, varicocele or debility can resist this powerful Electrical Attachment. It never fails to cure.

A. G. Stowe, Mesa City, Ariz., writes: "The feeling of despondency is gone, and I have proper confidence in myself now. My kidneys are doing their work, and I am a well man."

No man should be weak, no man should suffer the loss of vitality which renders life worth living. No man should allow himself to become less a man than nature intended him, no man should suffer when there is at hand a certain cure for his weakness.

Most of the pains, most of the weakness of stomach, heart, brain and nerves, from which men suffer are due to an early loss of nature's reserve power. You need not suffer for this. You can be restored. The very element which you have lost you can get back, and you may be as happy as any man that lives.

Our Electric Belt, with special Electrical Suspensory, will restore your power. It will check all loss of vital power and affects every organ of the body.

H. P. Jones, Orange, Cal., writes: "Your Belt cured me after I had spent $1000 in useless doctoring."

We have cured thousands of men who have squandered the savings of years in useless doctoring.

Our Belt is easy to use; put it on when you go to bed; you feel the glowing heat from it (no sting or burn, as in old-style belts,) and you feel the nerves tingle with the new life flowing into them. You get up in the morning feeling like a two-year-old.

An old man of 70 says he feels as strong and young as he did at 35. That shows it renews the vigor of youth. It cures rheumatism, sciatic pains, lumbago, kidney trouble. Banishes pain in a night, never to return.

G. W. Beers, carpenter and builder, Long Beach, Cal., says: "At the age of 75 your Belt has cured me of general weakness and kidney trouble."

What ails you? Write and tell us, and no matter where you are we think we can give you the address of someone in your town that we have cured. We've cured thousands, and every man of them is a walking advertisement for our Belt.

FAMOUS CHRONOMETER.

DEPENDS ON WOMAN FOR OFFICIAL TIME.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

Miss Belleville, who furnishes London with the correct time, having her chronometer certified at Greenwich observatory.

LONDON, March 14.—It is a curious circumstance that London, which is so near to Greenwich, does not get its official time from that famous observatory but from a woman. Practically every big watch and clock maker in this city pays her a fee once a week to learn the right time. And oddly enough, this regulating of the watches of London has been a business of this woman's family for more than seventy years.

It seems that the father of the present "human time-piece" was a Mr. Bellville, who, in 1835, was assistant to the Astronomer Royal. He hit upon the bright idea of taking around to the principal London watch makers a corrected chronometer. In this way he soon built up an income of about $2500 a year. When he died in 1856, his widow was granted the privilege of having her chronometer corrected at Greenwich whenever she liked, and "peddled" the time until 1892, when she reached the advanced age of 82, [illegible].

This right to a monopoly of the absolutely correct time did not leave the Bellville family with the retirement of the old woman, however, for her daughter succeeded to the lucrative job. Every Monday morning she goes from her home in Maidenhead, on the Thames, to the Royal Observatory at Greenwich, where she receives from the keeper an official document saying that her chronometer differs from mean time by so and so many seconds and tenths of seconds. Such a favor is granted to no other person, and armed with this exclusive credential, Miss Bellville sallies forth to correct the time-pieces of the world.

She has about forty customers in London, scattered all over the city. To each she repairs in turn and permits them to correct their time in accordance with that of her own chronometer and the official document. From these forty customers of this woman the rest of London gets its ideas of time.

It is no ordinary chronometer that Miss Bellvelle carries about with her. It was made in 1835 by Arnold, one of the most famous watch makers that ever lived, for the Duke of Sussex, a son of George III. After possessing it a short time the noble owner discarded it because it was too clumsy, and Mr. Bellville bought it at a fancy price. It was originally in a gold case but the assistant to the Astronomer Royal had a silver one substituted, hoping that its unpretentious appearance would be less likely to excite the cupidity of the rough characters in the "shady" parts of old London where his business often took him.

FINANCIAL WORK.

In Europe, in fact, all over the world—money is accumulating so rapidly that discount rates are generally expected to decline to the lowest level of post-panic periods. Today the principal European banks are carrying fully $100,000,000 more specie than they carried a year ago.

The total profits of the forty-eight Associated Banks of New York last year were $24,900,234 which is equal to 8.8 per cent. on the combined capital and surplus of $282,911,100. The total actually distributed in the form of cash dividends was $14,361,000, representing 11.6 per cent. on capital alone, or 5.1 per cent on capital and surplus. During the year $1[illegible] per cent on capital, was [illegible] surplus. Capital was increased [illegible] bringing the total to $124,350,000; of the increase all but $500,000 was contributed through the declaration of stock dividends from surplus.

During the past three years 1,078,463 immigrants took up their residence in New York State, and it is estimated that during last year alone they sent to their native homes savings amounting to $200,000,000.

The United States Steel system of bookkeeping is said to be misleading regarding the amount of business done and the profits on the same. In the handling of the product from the mine to the market for the finished product it has to shift about considerably among the subsidiary companies of the great holding corporation, and every time one of these branch concerns takes it over the stuff appears as an original entry. The result is that the gross volume of business handled appears in the final figures very much larger than it really is. For instance, the gross volume of business handled by the steel trust in 1907 is given officially as $757,000,000 at a net profit of $161,000,000, or about 20 per cent. In point of fact the gross did not exceed $400,000,000, on which there was a profit of about 40 per cent. The explanation of this enormous swelling of the grand totals is that if the bedrock facts were printed and it was officially acknowledged that the steel trust was making 40 per cent. per annum on its business the corporation would become a target for the attacks of tariff revisionists.

Speaking of the latest Harriman move for the enlargement of Union Pacific indebtedness by $10,000,000 or more, one financial writer says that given a chance Mr. Harriman would buy up the whole world and capitalize it for the acquisition of the rest of the universe.

Country banks finding that they cannot always have their surplus funds issued on call even at less than 2 per cent., are turning their attention to high-class commercial paper, which can be purchased at 4¼ to 4½ per cent. to run for ninety days or four months. This offers a profitable field for funds that will not be needed until autumn. Institutions that wish to be ultra-conservative can select only the finest names. As a matter of fact, the demand for these has so increased that the minimum discount rate has appreciably declined, whereas 5 per cent. was the minimum last month, sales are now being made at 4½ to 4¾ per cent. Institutions that would not for a moment think of subscribing to new securities do not hesitate to buy commercial paper, especially as the events of the last six months have proved that this is a very desirable form of bank investment.—[Journal of Commerce.

The National City Bank of New York, being the largest in the country, it may be interesting to explain its method of handling currency. A member of its staff thus describes the operation: "We sort mutilated and clean currency in separate piles at the same time placing silver certificates, gold certificates, legal tender, coin bills, national bank notes in their respective piles, and according to denominations. The $5 and up to $100 notes are counted by 5s; for instance, a $20 note would be called 'four,' meaning four 5s, and on counting up to 100 in case of a package of mixed money we know that it contains $500. Nearly all currency from the West consists of mixed money, which makes it difficult for the novice to count, and hence it requires men of experience and ability to handle it correctly. It takes the best counter about four hours to complete $60,000 mixed money, $5-10-20-50-bills in condition to be paid out or redeemed. In counting one-dollar notes a man can handle $3000 per hour. As our currency is received in a soiled and mutilated condition, it is necessary for us to use extreme care to detect counterfeits. We rely on our sense of feeling as well as the appearance of a bill, and our young men by clever work have captured some very good specimens.

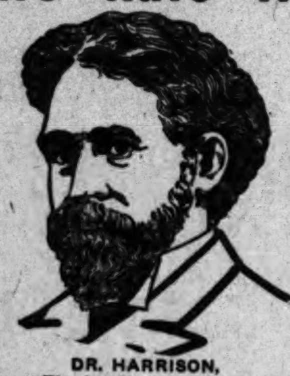
Before receiving mutilated currency for redemption, the Treasury Department of the United States requires that paper currency must be assorted by kinds and denominations and inclosed in paper straps, the straps not to contain more than 100 notes each, and be plainly marked with the amount of the contents. United States notes, treasury notes gold certificates and silver certificates may be put in the same package marked "Mutilated United States currency for redemption," provided the total number of notes in the package does not exceed 4000 national bank notes must be placed in separate packages, marked "National bank notes for redemption." A letter of advice to be marked for each day's consignment of United States currency, and a separate one for national bank notes is required. Counterfeit notes found in remittances from banks are to be returned canceled for the purpose of enabling them to make reclamation, and after such use they must be returned for transfer to the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department."

The tenacity of the English investor has always been a matter of wonder to the average New York trader. When a Briton gets his grip on what he believes is a good thing he simply will not let go. The price may be rushed up sharply, but if he thinks everything is all right he sticks. If the bears raid his stock and force prices down the chances are he buys more. It may all seem very stupid at the time, but he generally comes out at the right end eventually. And when he begins to sell no amount of argument will persuade him to alter his course.

Revered on Battleship.

The longer you remain on a warship, either as a member of the crew or as a guest, two things become more and more impressive. One is the reverence for the quarterdeck, and the other is the patriotic regard for the national hymn, "The Star Spangled Banner." The quarterdeck seems to be almost a holy place. The officers salute it as they step upon it.

We Have No Competitors



DR. HARRISON,
The Leading Specialist.

It is a fact that as high-class, legitimate, down-to-date advertising specialists for men only, we have no competitors in Los Angeles. This is a bold statement, but none the less true, and any interested person can easily verify its truthfulness by a careful investigation of our superb and unexcelled equipment for treating successfully the most complex and complicated ailments peculiar to men.

For sixteen years we have been located right here in Los Angeles and dozens of the most prominent business men will gladly vouch for our character and ability. We have no branch offices. For the ailing man in search of a genuine specialist, who eagerly scans the advertising pages of the daily papers estimating the ability and reputation of the specialist solely by the size of his ad. or the amount of palpably false and brazen misstatements and misrepresentation it contains, or who is influenced by the promise of a worthless guarantee, or the promise of a refunding of the fee if the promised cure is not effected, we have only a feeling of pity.

Every day ailing men consult us who have been "up against" incompetent and unreliable specialists and bemoan the fact that they did not exercise common sense and prudence before parting with their money and purchasing the proverbial lemon.

The Only Cure For Weakness

In a public announcement of this kind it is unnecessary for us to explain in detail the essential points of difference between our modern, down-to-date, scientific and eminently successful methods in treating weakness and those in use by imitators and would-be specialists. Our Prostatic theory of weakness, which we first elaborated and announced in the L. A. Times over ten years ago, as reference to the files of that paper will prove, has since been copied by hundreds of specialists all over the United States.

Functional weakness associated with loss of power and prematureness is usually symptomatic of some abnormal local condition in some vital point in the pelvic region. Congestion, inflammation and enlargement of the prostate gland; stricture, varicocele, hydrocele, rupture, neglected or improperly treated cases of contracted disorders are the most common causes of sexual weakness. To attempt to cure weakness by stomach drugging or by wearing electric belts is just as sensible as it would be to wear a set of harness to cure corns on the feet.

We will cheerfully pay One Thousand dollars to any physician or layman who can produce a case of weakness occurring in any man of good habits under the age of 65, not complicated by any organic disease of the heart, liver or kidneys or by the sequelae of chronic venereal disease, that we cannot completely cure in from four to six weeks by our new and improved method of local treatment. The local treatment is entirely painless and does not involve the use of "instillations, suppositories," etc. We will effect the cure without prescribing a single drop of medicine and without using a single pill, tablet or granule. In the treatment of the more obscure forms of weakness which may be classed as Psychopathic, Neuropathic, Congenital and Traumatic we offer a modern and eminently successful line of treatment.

Psychopathic weakness is usually due to some form of mental aberration; Neuropathic weakness is due to diseases of the brain and spinal chord; Congenital weakness is due usually to mechanical organic impediments; Traumatic weakness is due to local inflammation due to abuse, venereal infection or injuries. Asthenic weakness usually follows exhausting diseases of various kinds.

Theory And Practice

Failure to harmonize theory and practice, particularly on the part of those infallible specialists whose loud boastings are as the sounding brass and tinkling cymbal, has done more than anything else to discredit advertising specialists for men only, in the eyes of a discriminating public.

The cynic naturally queries, why is it that with the bright array of medical talent adorning the advertising pages of the daily press, that there is such a large number of uncured men in Los Angeles. There are hundreds of men walking the streets of this city who would sell the shirt off their back to get cured of their ailment.

After a man has been fed on a lemon diet for several months and discovered by bitter and expensive experience that an alluring and smoothly written advertisement often conceals a physician of very ordinary ability and questionable business methods, he is very apt to become skeptical concerning all physicians, particularly those who advertise.

It is to this large class of disappointed and discouraged men who have lost faith and quit trying to get well, that we appeal. Our clean business methods, our new and unexcelled methods of treatment, our offer to let you personally interview a number of our cured patients (by their kind permission,) our absolutely bona-fide offer to let you pay when well and without making any charges for medicines, and our offer to cure any simple, uncomplicated cases for $10, are certainly excellent reasons why you should call and have a friendly talk with us. This will not obligate you in any way to take treatment and you will not be asked for your name or address or importuned in any way to take treatment.

Varicocele

One man in every four has some degree of varicocele; three-fourths of all cases of varicocele have been up against doctors who advertise to cure without an operation, which is an absolute impossibility. We have been curing varicocele in Los Angeles for sixteen years and can show business men here in the city by the score who will be more than glad to tell any man who is afflicted with varicocele all about their experience with our certain and absolute cure by our strictly painless operation. Now we wish to ask any man who has varicocele if he would like to be cured. If so, will he go to a specialist who will introduce him to any number of first-class leading business men here in the city who have been cured, or will he hand over his money to a would-be specialist who carries a bombastic advertisement saying he can cure without operation, and who cannot show a single reliable man whom he has cured? Read this over and think about it.

Kidney and Bladder Trouble

Dr. Harrison & Co. are phenomenally successful in these troubles; every case that comes to them is carefully examined and the true cause found for existing conditions. It is then easy for us to treat the case understandingly. Not all cases are easily understood. Not all men know how to treat them. Our success in curing demonstrates the positive proof of our ability.

Stricture

Pain is entirely eliminated under the treatment we have developed and perfected for the absolute cure of stricture by our new improved PAINLESS METHODS WE HAVE CURED MANY CASES THAT RESISTED ALL OTHER FORMS OF TREATMENT. CALL AND INVESTIGATE. BY PERMISSION WE CAN REFER YOU TO MANY CURED CASES IN TOWN. We do not pretend to work miracles and cannot claim the almost supernatural skill of some of our would-be competitors, such as "dissolving" strictures as easily as the warm rays of the rising sun dissolve the snow.

Contagious Blood Disease

May be inherited or contracted. When the system becomes tainted with the poison it may manifest itself in many ways, ulcers, sores, scrofula, eczema, stiff and painful points, eruptions, copper-colored spots on the body, little ulcers in the mouth, swollen or inflamed tonsils, loss of hair, decay of flesh and bone. If your symptoms are any of these, we invite you to take advantage of the treatment we offer, which will completely eradicate the last taint of poison from the system. You are cordially invited to consult us in person and we will give you such advice as will be for the betterment of your condition. Our treatment has been acquired through 25 years' arduous work. It contains no injurious drugs and goes to the very core of the disease.

WE NEVER TRY TO SCARE OUR PATIENTS. THE EXACT NATURE, PROBABLE DURATION, PERIOD OF CONTAGION AND THE DIFFERENT METHODS OF TREATMENT ARE CAREFULLY EXPLAINED TO EACH PATIENT. We also explain the differential diagnosis of purely local infection and constitutional infection.

To meet the exigencies of the times, and place a perfect cure within the reach of ailing men who have squandered money and wasted precious time on poor treatment, we offer A THOROUGH CURE FOR ONLY $10. In any simple case. You can pay when cured.

A Specialist For Men

What you see in my announcements you can depend upon it. I make no misrepresentations.

I fulfill every promise I make to those who take MY DIRECT SANITARIUM TREATMENT, thus making staunch friends of my patients as well as living proof and testimony to my PERSONAL SANITARIUM METHODS. You who are suffering let me offer you proof positive by bringing you face to face with some of my cured patients.

I treat only those diseases peculiar to men.

Contracted Diseases

Be sure your cure is thorough. Not one of my patients has ever had a relapse after being discharged as cured and I cure in less time than the ordinary forms of treatment require.

Specific Blood Poison

No dangerous minerals to drive the virus to the interior, but harmless blood cleansing remedies that remove the last poisonous taint.

Stricture

My treatment is absolutely painless and perfect results can be depended upon in every instance.

Weakness

So long as physicians continue along the old lines of treatment of this disorder men will continue to be disappointed time and again in their efforts to obtain a cure. I have found that disorders entirely local are responsible for prematureness, loss of power, etc., and that there is not even the slightest possibility of obtaining a cure through use of internal remedies. My treatment is directed toward the removal of all abnormal conditions throughout the organs involved, and I do not fail in a single instance to restore complete and permanent activity of all the functions.

Varicocele

My personal sanitarium treatment for Varicocele is absolutely certain, is painless, and you are completely cured in one week's time. Failure is sure to follow the common methods in use by unreliable parties. One week is all I ask, and you are cured forever.

My immense practice, my large medical offices are the result of cures—sure, certain. I can cure you.

My moderate fee covers medicines, and is clearly understood in the beginning.

A talk concerning your case will cost you nothing.

MEN
How and Why I Can Cure

Any man, diseased or weakened from private disorders, seeks earnestly and desires most, a permanent cure of his trouble. It is but natural that many men become discouraged when they have tried different medical courses of treatment, patent preparations, electric and other appliances, receiving, if anything, but temporary relief.

I Find the Cause of the trouble, in every case, FIRST. If there is an injury from abuse or past excesses, if there is a chronic inflammation or derangement, if there is an inactivity of any part, if there is a lack of nourishment caused by blood stagnation, if there is some remaining taint of past disease which has never been thoroughly eradicated, I SEARCH OUT THE CAUSE and remove that first. I never attempt to hide symptoms, nor do I give tonics or stimulants for temporary benefit. That is why my cured cases STAY CURED. That is why my treatment is different. And that is the real reason why I CURE WHEN OTHERS FAIL. I do not profess to perform miracles, and I sometimes find cases beyond help, but such cases I will not treat for any consideration. But there are few incurable cases. Failures of others do not reflect upon my skill. You owe it to yourself to investigate my system of certainly, completely and permanently curing all diseases of men.

DR. TAYLOR
The Leading Specialist

My title to the term of "leading specialist" is so well established that is no longer seriously tioned. This fact is due the enviable reputation have made for perfect permanent cures and nothing else.

All necessary X-ray examinations are absolutely free to patients. My equipment for X-ray work is the finest and most ever produced, and perfect results are not sible with an inferior paratus.

You Pay My Fee When Cure

"Weakness" Permanently Cured

No other ailment yields more readily under my treatment than functional "weakness." No other disorders peculiar to men so completely baffles ordinary medical effort. When a treatment cures there is a reason why it cures, and when a remedy fails there is also a reason why. My treatment cures because all effort is directed toward the restoration of normal conditions throughout the organic system, removing all inflammation or over-sensitiveness of the prostate gland, which is the sole cause of the functional derangement. Other forms of treatment fail because they are calculated to excite activity by stimulating the nerve centers. I treat more cases of "weakness" than any other physician, and I obtain perfect results in all instances.

Contracted Disorders Quickly Cured

Any one of the ordinary forms of treatment may cure, or it may only appear to cure, or it may show no results whatever. These diseases are treacherous and demand and most careful and thorough treatment. Many a case that appears practically cured is all the while developing chronic complications that may cause a lifetime of suffering. The only safety lies in the quickest cure possible, and that means a cure by my own system of treatment. In half the usual time required, I effect a radical cure, cleansing the membranes of every vestige of disease and removing every possibility of chronic developments.

Varicocele Cured Without Cutting

Varicocele can be cured surgery. I am curing every day, by mild and treatment, thus demonstrating the folly of resorting and dangerous methods one week at most is and seldom is it necessary even detain the patient day from his business pation. My cures are nent. There are no unpleasant after effects treatment I employ is with myself. There is doctor who treats I treat it, or who dupli cures.

Men Cured

DR. MILES,
The Master Specialist.

No matter if you have been pronounced incurable by any other physician, that account hesitate to come to me for treatment. I have cured hundreds had been told that they were incurable. Remember that my methods will that are practically incurable by any other treatment. My methods are me, and are the result of many years' experience in medical practice. I effect in every case I take for treatment, because my treatment is adjusted to the each patient with scientific precision. I leave nothing to guesswork. I KNOW I begin treating a patient that I will perform a complete and permanent CURE a cure by my treatment is just as certain as that two and two make four.

I claim that nothing less than complete eradication of the disease from tem is a real cure. I treat to completely remove the disease and not merely toms. I drive out every root and fiber of the ailment and effect a cure that you strong and vigorous for a lifetime.

The cures I effect are the result of my thorough knowledge of every phase diseases I treat and to the fact that I apply individual treatment to each every instance I know the ailment and I know the cure for it. The fact that to wait for my fee until you are cured is proof of my confidence in my ability in every case. Some physicians assert that certain diseases of men are incurable deny that, and stand ready to PROVE that by my methods there is peculiar to men that cannot be cured.

YOU CAN PAY ME WHEN YOU ARE CURE

CONSULT ME FIRST

Even though your case may be one that some other doctor is able to care, and though cure be absolutely thorough and permanent, there is yet good cause for your to me for treatment. The service I render is entirely unlike and better than the nary. I have devised new and scientific methods of treating men's diseases in all phases. I cure cases that others cannot cure, and cases that others can cure, I less time and without pain or possibility of injury. All my forms of treatment been perfected along the lines of nature's requirements, and are in exact harmony the natural recuperative forces. Therefore, my cures are painless, prompt and ough.

VARICOCELE

Under my treatment the most aggravated cases of varicocele are cured in a few days' time. There is no pain, and it is seldom necessary that the patient be detained from his occupation. Normal circulation is at once restored throughout all the organs and their natural processes of waste and repair are again established. If you are afflicted with varicocele, consult me at once. Delay can bring on aggravated conditions and nervous complications and involve the general health. No other physician employs a like treatment, and so thorough is my work that there need not be the slightest fear of a relapse into old conditions.

"WEAKNESS"

I am confident that I have cured more cases of so-called "weakness" than any other physician. There may be doctors in the large eastern cities who have treated more cases than I, but they cling to the old and ineffective practice of dosing with tonics. "Weakness" is merely a symptom of local disorder that requires local treatment. This is a truth that I have discovered and that has been fully established by my success in effecting permanent cures. My method is original with myself, and is employed by no other physician.

FREE CONSULTATION

To judge my ability without personal consultation may be an injustice to yourself that will cost a lifetime of suffering. Consultation is free and confidential, and you place yourself under no obligation to me whatever by coming to talk with me about your case.

SPECIFIC BLOOD POISON

Others dose the system with mineral poisons scarcely less dangerous than the disease itself. The best they hope to do by this treatment is to keep the disease from manifesting its presence upon the surface of the body. Under my treatment the entire system is cleansed. The last taint of virus is destroyed. Every symptom vanishes to appear no more. I employ harmless blood-cleansing remedies. They are remedies heretofore unknown in the treatment of this disease. They cure by neutralizing and absolutely destroying the poison in the system. Such cures cannot be other than complete and permanent.

STRICTURE

My treatment for stricture removes the necessity for surgical operations even in severe cases of long standing. I do no cutting nor dieting. No other physician employs my method of overcoming this disorder, so the service I offer you is original and distinctive. Do not give up hope because others have failed. I will cure you, and the cure will be a prompt and painless one. My treatment dissolves the stricture, subdues all inflammation, relieves all irritation or congestion that may exist in the kidneys or bladder, reduces enlargement of the prostate gland and restores health and tone in all organs affected by the disease.

All medicines are prepared in my own private laboratory and are absolutely fresh and pure.

MY FEE IS
$10.00

[illegible] SENSIBLE MOTHER.

[illegible] in the dark days of New [illegible] when the blight of the Civil [illegible] had left poverty of money, of [illegible] and of everything that a city [illegible] she was born. When 3 years [illegible] was dropped by a nurse, and [illegible] injured that for six years she [illegible] strapped to a chair, a helpless [illegible]. But she had a fine, sensible mother, who trained the little [illegible] by making it for [illegible] and by the time she was 9 [illegible] she was able to hobble to [illegible] on crutches.

[illegible] she had learned everything she [illegible] in the public schools and bravely [illegible] a day school for girls. By [illegible] of the first year she had [illegible] pupils, and was earning the [illegible] sum of $16 every four weeks, [illegible] being but 50 cents a month [illegible]. As she could only teach her [illegible] to the eighth grade she went to [illegible] principal of a normal school and [illegible] to teach beginners in [illegible] in return for further instruction she needed. At 16 she was [illegible] two schools and learning [illegible] herself.

[illegible] she began her life-work, the [illegible] school for boys and men and so [illegible] has she worked that today [illegible] hard to imagine what a dearth [illegible] existed in New Orleans [illegible] years ago. There was no compulsory education law, no child-labor [illegible] and the struggle for existence [illegible] keen that the only hope for [illegible] of children, boys and young [illegible] engaged in keeping the wolf from [illegible] lay in obtaining education [illegible] working hours.

[illegible] FAMOUS NIGHT SCHOOL.

[illegible] acrobat was wandering in [illegible] of New Orleans one day [illegible] position, but he was longing [illegible] chance to get the rudiments of [illegible] that he might enter the competition for a civil service position for [illegible] examinations would soon be [illegible] good angel led him to the [illegible] Miss Wright's school for girls, [illegible] rang the bell. The little mis[illegible] answered the summons, and when [illegible] the situation she told him [illegible] gladly teach him all she [illegible] would have to come out [illegible] the beginning of the night school. Miss Wright called for volunteers to assist her and borrowed money at a high rate of interest to get a place to house the school that grew up as if by magic. Poor boys flocked to the building, many going straight from the factories without taking time for supper. The only qualifications for entrance were: The applicant must be employed during hours when the day schools were open and he must be too poor to pay. She started with one pupil, and now has nearly 2000; she began with a night school, and now has every charity in New Orleans. All who need help go to Miss Wright. About five years ago she started a home for crippled children, and by her own efforts, gathered the $10,000 to build it.

In 1905 the city paid her a public tribute. A loving cup is presented each year by one of the daily papers to the person who has done the greatest service to the community in the previous twelvemonth. When Miss Sophy Wright was chosen as the recipient it was found impossible to find a building large enough to hold the crowd that wanted to be present. All her boys wished to attend and they could not do so in the day time, so the celebration has to be held in Audubon Park from midafternoon till 9 o'clock at night. It was suggested also that the $10,000 mortgage on her school should be lifted that day. It was the high tide of a glorious life when the little afflicted woman faced the multitude gathered in her honor, and received the loving cup and the money to free her school.

The "first citizen of New Orleans" will be the guest of her old-time friend, Mrs. Hite Wickizer of Ocean Park, and will speak at the Venice Chatauqua.

Miss Sophie B. Wright, [illegible] the honorable title, "First Citizen of New Orleans," and who will visit Los Angeles in July.

GOSSAMER-LIKE.

IT DELIGHTED QUEENS OF OLD.

FABRIC WHICH PRESERVED THE EGYPTIAN MUMMIES.

Perfection of Stripping Machine Will Make It Possible to Grow This Fiber in California—Inventor Says Industry Will Be More Important Than That of Cotton.

Have you ever heard of grass linen, China linen or Japan linen, this fine, beautiful, expensive gossamer-like tissue? Have you ever stopped to think what fiber could have been fine enough to make for the ancient Indian queens' linen bed sheets that were so thin and fine that they could be drawn through finger rings? Have you ever thought what kind of linen it was that preserved the mummies? or was mentioned in the Bible as the cleanest and most sanitary material to be dressed in?

These fabrics were made and are made of ramie, a linen fiber so much superior to flax that comparisons are out of place; it is as fine and as lustrous as silk, more than three times as absorbent as flax, and far more durable. While it is the oldest textile substance in existence and in use long before silk, flax, cotton or wool, its utility seldom came beyond Asia, its native land, because on account of the very high cost to prepare the fiber, it could only be done by the cheapest labor, so abundant since long ago in Asia.

Of recent years, G. William Schlichten, a German textile expert, discovered a process by which this ramie fiber, imported from China, could be refined in an economical way, making it possible to manufacture goods of it in Germany, the land of cheap manufacture, in competition with the high grades of flax, although at a very much smaller profit. As ramie linen is considered the most hygienic, most sanitary textile substance in existence, Mr. Schlichten followed a humanitary impulse, and produced first of all underwear. Through ceaseless effort and labor he has now perfected a machine which will strip the fiber from the stalks at a lower cost than can be done by the cheap labor in Asia, and that will make it possible to grow ramie in California for the world's market. It will now be possible to make all kinds of linen goods of ramie in this country, that formerly were made of flax and imported from Europe, and at least at the same, if not at lower, prices, but of a much more durable quality. Furthermore, ramie mixed with silk does not decrease its luster, but increases its durability considerably, and lowers the price. Mixed with cotton or wool, it greatly improves these textiles in every respect. In short, the utility of ramie is unlimited. Therein lays the value for California, as Mr. Schlichten has ascertained by years of experimenting that this State, principally Southern California, will grow better ramie fiber than any country on earth, and the time is not far off when the ramie industry will be more important to California than the cotton industry is to the South.

Mr. Schlichten, as president of the Schlichten Ramie Company, has begun the growing of the ramie fiber in Southern California on a large scale, and to encourage the farmers and land owners to take up the growing as well, he will give a demonstration with his decorticating (stripping) machine between April 18-22, at the factory building of the Murray Show Case and Fixture Company, Fourth and San Pedro streets, under the auspices of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, and under the supervision of experts from the United States Department of Agriculture. Persons interested should inquire April 17 at the secretary's office of Chamber of Commerce for the exact date.

Ramie is a perennial, and from four to six crops can be produced yearly in Southern California, principally at places that have soil and climate like the Imperial Valley.

It will pay the grower from $75 to $100 an acre net profit a year, without any other work but harvesting after the second year, as ramie is a perennial. The market is ready for unlimited quantities of ramie raw material—Schlichten Ramie Company will contract for every pound produced—and as soon as about 25,000 acres are grown with ramie in this State, the Schlichten Ramie Company will build manufacturing plants here; until then the fiber will have to be shipped to Germany.

Ramie, therefore, seems destined to become one of the most valuable industries of the State, bringing untold wealth to the farmer, giving employment to thousands of people, and making Los Angeles the most important textile city in the world, because here the raw material will be refined and spun, and, naturally, as in New Bedford or Fall River, or Belfast, Ireland, or Bielefeld, Germany, many manufacturers of all sorts of goods for which ramie can be used to advantage will settle here.

WESTERN PHILOSOPHY

Live every day so you can look every man in the face, which is synonymous with the golden rule, "Do unto others as you would have others do unto you."

The Western people have startled the world with their progressiveness.

As in the time of our forefathers, who left the "old sod" because of their dissatisfaction with the narrow conditions prevailing there, so the progressive Eastern people emigrated to the West and helped materially in making this part of Old Glory's domain the "pride of her people."

Profiting by the experience of the East, LOS ANGELES has utterly refused the demands of union labor agitators.

Seeking to make LOS ANGELES a hot-bed of dissension, the labor unions built a temple here, but that undertaking was not a success because its foundation rested on antediluvian principles—demands, dictation and coercion.

We as merchants do unto our employees as we would wish to be done by, and like The Merchant Tailors' Association, which today is fighting the demands of the agitators sent out from the East by the Journeymen Tailors' Union, utterly refuse to be coerced.

But the MERCHANTS cannot do all; they must have your hearty co-operation, your encouragement and your patronage.

Therefore, by consulting the appended list before purchasing, you strengthen the hands of the Association and carry out more fully the Western idea of progressiveness:

ORANGES ENTER BEAUTY SCHEME.

FRUIT TAKES WITH RICH FOR DECORATIVE PURPOSES.

New Field Calls for Perfect Form and Color, the Flavor Being a Matter of Secondary Importance—Hoping That the Demand Will Be Kept up by the Wealthy.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, April 7.—In talking of the development of the orange trade with Hicks & Son, the leading fancy fruit dealers of New York, some interesting facts were elicited. It was said that thousands of wealthy people are buying and consuming oranges who never before asked for them. Oranges have not been a fashionable fruit until the Californias came with their beautiful shape and their rich color. It was possible to utilize such fruit for decorative purposes. From buying them for decorations the transition to consumption was comparatively easy.

Now the market among the wealthy people who make New York their homes and in the fashionable hotels and restaurants is becoming of great importance. As usual, in such circumstances the increase is not limited to the wealthy ones alone. Others who attempt to ape the wealthy ones are discovering what delightful fruit California oranges are and sales have increased among the sycophants quite as liberally as among the ultra rich. But the producer and the dealer do not care. The main proposition is to get them consumed. If, therefore, the ultra rich can be induced in any consideration to purchase freely it is reasonably certain that others will do likewise and the consumption in this particular direction will become of importance in this city and likewise elsewhere.

The increase in the consumption of oranges among the class to which this firm caters is more marked than that of any other fruit.

Mr. Hicks couldn't give the percentage, but he thought that it was several fold. And he said that the demand is stronger this spring than ever before. Perhaps this will not continue longer than the opening of the season when wealthy residents move to the country, but, inasmuch as very many of them send their hampers to the city to be filled each week with groceries and other provisions, it is hoped that oranges will be included in the list this year. If they are the demand for the best grades will continue unabated as long as navels last.

So much depends in this class of trade upon the appearance of the fruit. The taste doesn't matter so materially since it is quite likely to be eaten with something else that destroys the pure flavor of the orange to some extent. But the skin must be smooth and the color perfect. The orange lends itself to decorative uses and may eventually be elevated to the dignity of a food product and its success will be assured. Even the jaded palate of the epicure will tingle with a new sensation when the richly flavored orange grown in sunny Southern California touches it for the first time. And after that this same over tested and more or less wearied palate will always have something attractive to look forward to. The coming of the navel oranges will be the signal for the resumption of the attempt to satisfy one's self with something really worth while.

Of course the great bulk of sales of California oranges in New York are among the middle and poorer classes. They take the medium sizes and grades and are the ones who are ready to overlook any slight irregularity in quality and will consume vast quantities of fruit which the epicurean rich would never touch. Even though this is true the rich trade is well worth cultivating and the sales which come from both classes of buyers are essential to the growth and development of the orange industry.

SPANIARDS AS WORKERS.

Consume Small Amount of Food as Compared With the Hard Work They Will Do.

A present-day globe-trotter said to me: "I should like to recommend the employment of Spaniards to dig the Panama Canal. The rest of the world does not seem to realize the wonderful capacity for work possessed by the Andalusians. Why, I have seen in the Castle of Solomon copper mine men doing the hardest sort of labor for full twelve hours a day and knock off as happy as a lark, ready for a fight or a frolic, ready to go mad at the distant tinkle of a guitar, ready to beat their hands sore keeping staccato time to the Cadiz cachucha.

And what has his ration consisted of? A piece of bread dipped in a cow's horn of oil and another of vinegar, spiced up with hot green pepper, garlic and salt. In summer his food consists of a section of pink melon.

"How many million pounds of meat have been shipped to Panama since the digging began? The Andalusian knows not the hunger for meat. He is never ill. The doctors at the isthmus have their hands full all the time trying to cure diseases directly due to meat.

"Here is a common Spaniard, who could pull a bull down by the horns, drive his knife through a three-inch plank, nourishing his 'robur' and stamina on a slice of melon brought from that moist province where the mocking proverb says, 'the trees are grass, the earth water, the men women and the women—nothing.'

"Yesterday I witnessed in one of your semi-fashionable resorts a New Yorker double up and pack on his fork for one calm mouthful about four cubic inches of red roast beef. It was not a pleasant sight. I compared the man's food capacity with that of people who had achieved.

"The Arab on his rice diet scourged the shrinking world. The Roman soldier on his sour wine and vinegar bread mapped out Europe with his roads. One of our great generals, Francis Marion, the Swamp Fox, kept his forces in perfect physical condition by a daily sip of vinegar. Oil stands for the most ethereal fat you can feed the stomach flame with, and vinegar for the destroyer of thirst and purifier of the blood."—[New York Press.

GREAT COIN COLLECTION.

Largest Number of Rare Coins in the Western World Now Housed in New York.

The American Numismatic Society has opened its new museum building in New York with a collection of 42,000 specimens of rare coins. From Daniel Parish, Jr., it has just received a $50,000 collection of coins and medals.

Forty years of research are represented by the Parish collection, which contains 3000 specimens. Some of them were minted before the Christian era and others represent the Dark and Middle Ages. They are in themselves a complete history of the world.

It was the rule of Mr. Parish never to keep an imperfect coin or medal, and for that reason every piece is practically as good as it was the day it left the die, although many of them are more than a thousand years old.

The society has also obtained the J. Pierpont Morgan collection of 801 American coins, many of which are of great rarity and value. This collection was originally given by Mr. Morgan to the American Museum of Natural History. The trustees of the Museum voted, with his consent, to transfer it to the society, because they considered it better adapted for a coin exhibition than was a general museum.

The society has also obtained 200 rare Greek and Roman coins collected by Miss Bruce, and Prof. George M. Olcott of Columbia University has loaned to the organization his private collection of 3000 ancient coins, which are mostly Roman.

The Wrong Letters.

Two commercial travelers in a railway carriage entered into conversation.

One of them tried very hard to make the other understand something, but he was either very hard of hearing or slow in believing.

At last his friend lost his temper and exclaimed: "Why, don't you see? It's as plain as A B C!"

"That may be," said the other, "but, you see, I am D E F."—[The Pathfinder.

BLYTHE RANCH

Water In Abundance For the Blythe Rancher

The strategic location of Blythe Ranch insures an abundance of water for all time to come. It has 17 miles of Riparian ownership along the Colorado. It holds the key to the irrigation situation in the Palo Verde Valley, owning the highest gravity diversion point. A large natural storage reservoir and an extensive canal system provide for the proper distribution of water to all parts of the ranch. Government experts estimate that the Colorado, properly controlled, will irrigate two million acres. There is not more than one-twentieth of this area of irrigable land above Blythe Ranch. The waters of the Colorado are rich in fertilizer. A chemical analysis by the Arizona Experimental Station shows them to be as rich as the waters of the Nile.

RICH BOTTOM LANDS $35 UP, INCLUDING WATER.

Terms one-third cash, balance 1, 2 and 3 years. These lands will produce a net income of $40 to $300 per acre, according to intensity of cultivation. One good crop will more than pay for the land. Wheat, corn, barley, alfalfa, cotton, fiber, sugar beets, etc., are successful crops. There is no uncertainty about title or water rights. The land can be made immediately productive. To meet the great demand for small tracts a number of 5-acre tracts near the town of Bylthe have been placed on the market. Call today and learn more about Blythe Ranch and its great possibilities. IRRIGATED LANDS.

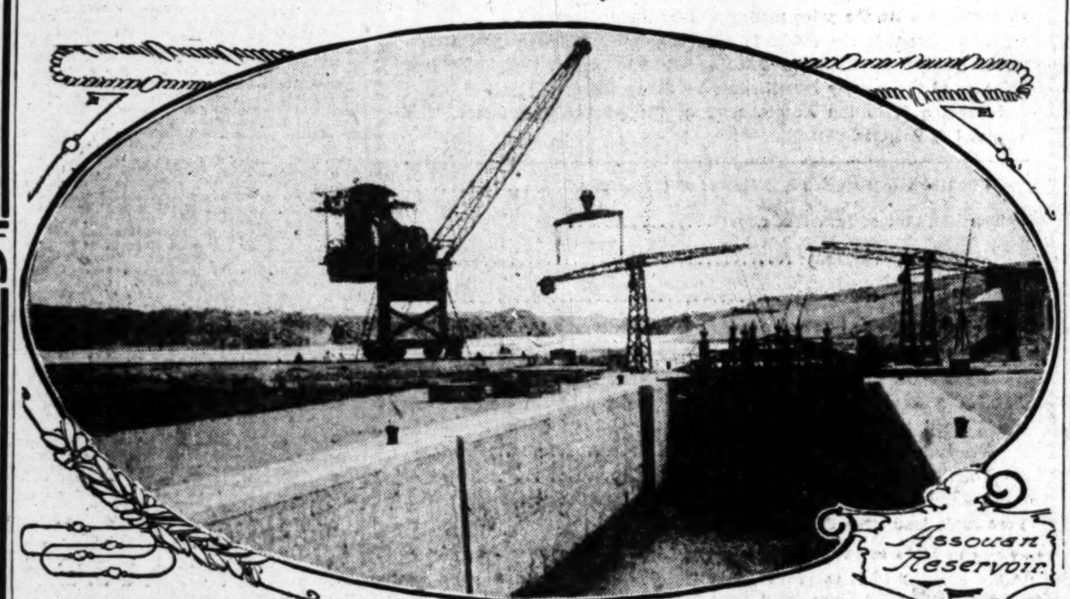
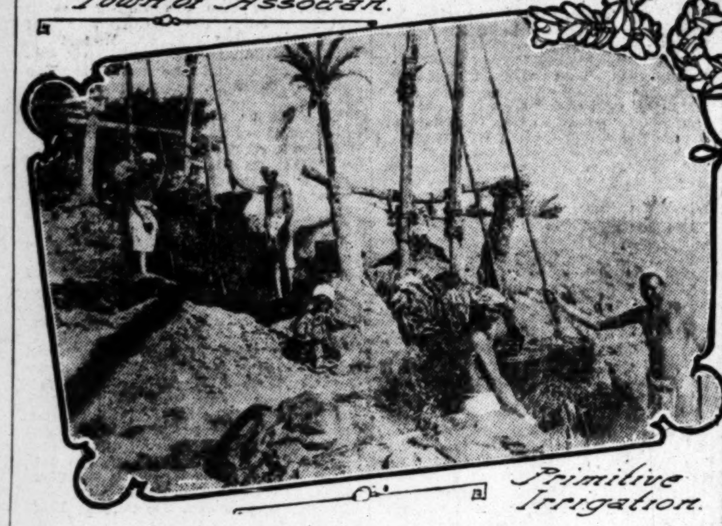
NILE'S DELTA AND COLORADO VALLEY.

Suggestive Comparisons Made by H. J. Whitley of Los Angeles on His Return from Egypt—Opportunities of the Southwest.

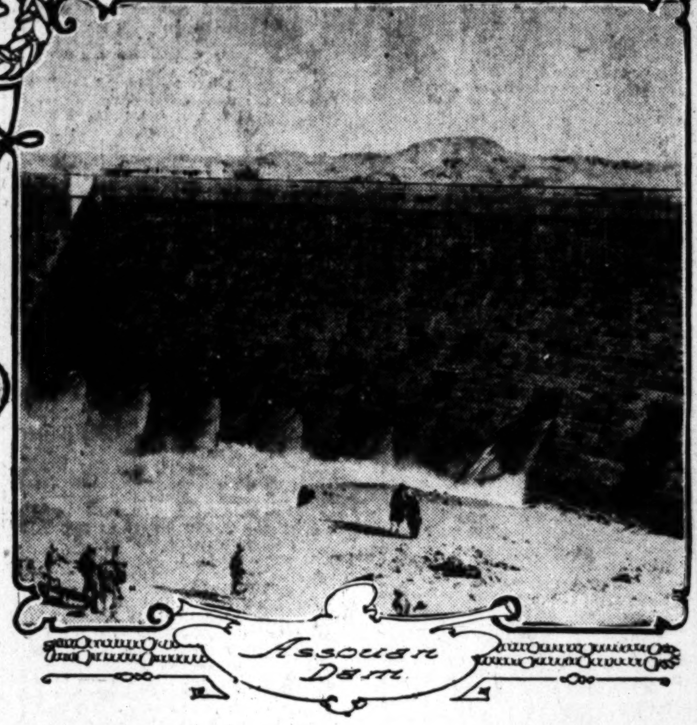


Assouan Reservoir.

Town of Assouan.



Primitive Irrigation.



Assouan Dam.

H. J. WHITLEY, one of the foremost business men of Southern California, has just returned from a three months' foreign tour, which included Egypt, the Holy Land and the Delta of the Nile.

Mr. Whitley long since made a name for himself as a successful land subdivider, town builder and banker in the western country. His comparison of the soil of the Nile delta with that of the Imperial Valley in the Rio Colorado country and with the Tulare lands, together with his comments on the possibilities of the irrigated lands of the Great Southwest, will be read with avidity by those who are interested in agricultural pursuits and who have knowledge of the immense projects successfully undertaken by Mr. Whitley in this and other sections of the country.

Mr. Whitley is the "father of Hollywood," the beautiful suburb of Los Angeles. He is also responsible for the new town of Corcoran and the recent remarkable developments in that part of Kings and Tulare counties whose magic growth has surprised even those who are used to the giant industrial strides of California, this garden spot of the world. His operations have taken him through the Middle States and Oklahoma, where he raised the first cotton and built the first brick block of the now thriving town of Guthrie. In speaking of his foreign trip, Mr. Whitley said:

"I sailed from New York on January 1, and was particularly fortunate in my selection of a boat. The Adriatic, upon which I had reserved passage, is one of the most perfect of Atlantic liners, and is, indeed, a floating palace. The service is perfection itself, and the trip was one of the most delightful I ever took in my many visits to the other side. I landed at Cherbourg and proceeded to Paris, where I remained a few days. I then went on to Nice, where I rejoined my wife and daughter, who had preceded me.

"Nice is a delightful place of 140,000 population, with a climate very similar to that of Los Angeles, though, perhaps, a trifle cooler. In every way it is a modern city, and I can understand the delight which is felt by those from the colder latitudes of the North who make the city their rendezvous during the winter months.

WORSE THAN WALL STREET.

"We visited Monte Carlo, the great gambling hell of the world, and found much to interest us in the gaily-dressed crowds which frequent the gaming rooms. I confess that I made no attempt to break the bank, and I have come to the conclusion that the bunco game of Monte Carlo is, if possible, a little worse than that which is so generally indulged in on Wall street by our own people. There were many Americans playing while we were there, but I heard of no sensational winnings or losings, and presume that they were sheared with the rest of the huge flock of lambs which crowds the rooms nightly. Apart from the sordid side of this gambling life, Monte Carlo is a charming place, and the electric line which runs to Nice takes one through some of the very finest scenery of all Europe.

THROUGH SUNNY ITALY.

"Our itinerary took us through Genoa, Milan and beautiful Venice, where we spent several days seeing the sights and lazying around in the picturesque gondolas on the street canals. Florence, the center of art and culture of Italy, revealed much of great interest to us all, and we spent several days in the delights which it offers to the traveler. It is claimed that the population is nearly 200,000, and there is no doubt that it is rapidly increasing. After that, we visited exquisite Naples, a civic jewel set in the azure blue of the Mediterranean, and containing a population which is said to be in the neighborhood of half a million.

PRIMITIVE FARMING.

"In my travels through Italy I took careful mental note of the agricultural conditions and was much surprised at the primitive methods of farming which are still in vogue. The greater part of the land is innocent of plows, as yet, the ground being spaded over by hand. On every hand women and men can be seen toiling with their spades, and other branches of the agricultural industry are apparently in the same primitive state.

ON TO EGYPT.

"Before leaving Naples we visited Vesuvius and Pompeii and sailed for Alexandria on February 5. Cairo is a most interesting city, with a population variously estimated at from 800,000 to 1,000,000 souls. The newer part of the city is modern in every way, with palatial homes and hotels that will compare with other up-to-date cities of the world. Ancient Cairo, with its unique bazaars, its camels and its myriad donkeys, remains the same as it was ages ago. The leavening of foreign population, which has been coming in a steady stream for the past few years, is, however, making the city one of striking cosmopolitan features, and within a comparatively short time it is probable that a great many of the ancient landmarks will be swept away in the upbuilding of a truly modern city.

ENGLAND'S PART.

"Here, as in all the other places which fall under her sphere of influence, England has done much for the development of the country, and on every hand are seen unmistakable signs which entitle her to the position she has gained as the greatest colonizer among all nations. In no part of the world is her hand so clearly shown as in the development of the great Nile Valley. Formerly this immense stretch of land was cultivated only in the crudest manner, but since the advent of the Briton many districts show the hand of modernism in the art of husbandry. Of course, the greater portion of the valley is still cultivated in the ancient way. The method of irrigation is extremely interesting to those who realize what strides the world has taken in the past few years and who have seen something of the gigantic enterprises which have been established in this country for the reclamation of our semi-arid lands. On the Nile they still raise water with camel power and by hand in buckets, and it takes forty men to do what one will accomplish here with modern methods. What little hay is marketed is cut by hand and transported on the backs of camels and donkeys; but the major portion of the crop is fed on the ground.

SLOW WORK.

"In the digging of canals the natives carry the earth from the excavations upon their backs in baskets, and they also carry the stone used in buildings in the same primitive way. Even the rip-rap and small stone for the great Assouan Dam was carried, in great measure, in the same way. For this work men only receive from ten to twenty-five cents a day, and a woman's work is valued at from five to eight cents. You can therefore see that it is necessary for an Arab to order that he may live care and work free! This practice is common in Egypt, and a man is gauged in great measure by the number of his human possessions.

WASHING SOIL.

"As I said before, the English are pumping water from the Nile and irrigating with modern methods in some portions of the great delta, while the methods which they have adopted for washing the alkali out of the soil are bringing wonderful results, and were studied by me with a great deal of interest. The land is more alkaline in composition than ours is, but it seems to be necessary in great measure and it certainly looks as if it brought great results. A great deal of the alkali is overcome, in places where it is not too strongly impregnated, by proper methods of cropping.

GREAT ASSOUAN DAM.

"One of the greatest sights seen on our entire trip was the great Assouan Dam, which has been built by English capital to control and utilize the waters of the Nile. It is a marvelous piece of work, the greatest by far of its kind in the world. We spent a whole day on the dam with Mr. Watts, the chief engineer in charge. The structure is built of solid granite, is one and a half miles long, with an average of fifty-five feet in height and a width of twenty-eight feet at the top. They have recently commenced to add fifteen feet to the height and twenty-one feet to the width, an improvement which will enable them to irrigate nearly a million acres more, making it cover a total of nearly 6,000,000 acres. The work, which is being done by the English on a rough hillside at Assoun, is only second to the dam itself in wonderful engineering features. The way in which the rough ground has been converted into habitable domain is simply remarkable in its exhibition of pluck and energy. They are certainly past masters in engineering.

DELTA OF THE NILE.

The Delta of the Nile, stretching from Alexandria to Assouan, is about 900 miles in length, and the fertile irrigated portion of it varies from three to eight miles in width. It widens out at Alexandria and extends on down to Port Said. It is needless for me to say anything of its fertility—that is well known to all. The soil varies in color and quality, the prevailing colors running from dark to gray, with some occasionally found of a reddish cast. It is all sedimentary or alluvial in nature. Land is worth from $200 to $2000 an acre and pays a profit of from $10 to $80 a year.

SEEDS FOR CALIFORNIA.

"Aided by Mr. Iddings, the United States Consul, and by the secretary of the Khedival Agricultural Department, D. P. Foaden, we spent several weeks in looking over the lands of the valley, with an idea of collecting information as to their quality, what they would produce, what they were best adapted for, and at what average net profit they could be worked, in order that comparisons could be made with the sedimentary lands of California. I am shipping seeds that have proved most profitable there, in order that I may try them in the United States, under conditions which are somewhat similar. In making a just comparison, and after giving the Nile due credit for all advantages, I feel that we have fully as good, if no better, land both on the Mexican border and surrounding Tulare Lake. Some of the Nile ground is tule land, some of a reddish cast and some black, while some is lighter or mixed. Conditions are similar in many places in this country, and I do not doubt that we can do all they have done, and perhaps more. Besides that, we have a country where we are not fried to death in the summer-time and subject to continuous and terrific dust storms in the winter, fall and spring. Neither do we live in a country dominated and handicapped by prehistoric ideas, or among a class of people who are so

RILEY PLAYS LAST STACK.

Rawhide Pays High Tribute to Dead Plunger.

Funeral in Variety Theater in Rear of Saloon.

Eulogy by Prospector, Formerly Preacher.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

RAWHIDE (Nev.) April 5.—Half-shielded under an oil-cloth blanket, lodged in a common express wagon, the casket of Riley Grannon, race-track plunger of national renown, was carted this morning to an improvised memorial chapel, a variety theater at the rear of a saloon.

There congregated a throng in silks and corduroys, women of metropolitan costumes, miners covered with high-grade grime, prospectors sun-tanned, brokers, bankers, merchants, promoters, owners of saloons, bartenders, gamblers, rounders. Again, as always in mining camps, class was forgotten. All men were equal.

Saloons were closed, and the streets were silent throughout the service. At its end a solemn cortege trudged with the remains, destined to travel by automobile thirty miles to Schurz, there to go aboard the cars to Riley's brother in Kentucky.

Unique beyond experience, and dramatic beyond compare was the eulogy pronounced by H. W. Knickerbocker, once a clergyman, then a mine operator of Goldfield, later a Rawhide pioneer. Hardly orthodox, but wholly in keeping with the scene and with the mute desires of the dead, was the orator's appearance. The once pulpit and now people's exponent stood beside the lily-laden bier, his eye bedimmed with honest tears, his voice choked with a fraternal emotion, he shod in the high boots and clothed in the rough garb of a miner. A stenographic report of the eulogy follows:

MINER'S EULOGY.

"I feel that it is incumbent upon me to state that I now occupy no ministerial or prelatic position. I am only a prospector. I make no claims to moral merit whatever, or to religious authority, except it be the religion of the brotherhood of man. I wish to be taken only as a man among men, feeling that I can shake hands and style as my brother the most humble of you all. If there may come from me a word of moral admonition, it springs not from a sense of moral superiority, only from the depths of my experience.

"Riley Grannan was born in Paris, Ky., but forty years ago. He cherished all the dreams of boyhood. Those dreams found their fruition in phenomenal success financially. I am told that from the position of bellboy in a hotel he arose to be a celebrity of world-wide fame. Riley Grannan was one of the greatest plungers the continent has produced. He died day before yesterday at Rawhide.

"That is a brief statement. We have his birth, and the day of his demise. Who can fill the interim? Not I. Who can tell his hopes and fears? Who knows the mystery of his quiet hours? Not I.

"Riley Grannan was born in the Sunny Southland of Kentucky. He died in Rawhide. That is the beginning. That is the end. Is there in this a picture of what Ingersoll said at the grave of his brother, 'Whether it be near the shore, or in mid-ocean, or among the breakers at the last, a wreck must mark the end of one and all?'

"Born where brooks and rivers run musically through prolific soil, where magnolia glandifora, like white stars, glow in a firmament of green, where lakes dot the greensward and the softest summer breezes dimple the wavelets, where the air is resonant with the melody of a thousand sweet voiced birds and resolent of the perfume of blooming flowers, that was the beginning. Riley Grannon died in Rawhide, where in winter the tops of the mountains are clothed in garments of ice and in summer the blistering rays of the sun beat down upon the skeleton of the desert.

"Is there in this a picture of universal life? Sometimes, when I look upon the circumstances of life, there comes to my lips a curse. I relate to you now only my views. If these run counter to yours, believe that what I say is sincere. When I see the ambitions of man defeated, when I see him struggling with mind and body to accomplish his end, when I see his aim and purpose frustrated only by a fortuitous combination of circumstances over which he can exert no control, when I see his outstretched hands about to grasp the flag of victory, and to seize instead the emblem of defeat, I ask, 'What is life?' What is life? Dreams, awakening, death. Life is a pendulum betwixt a smile and a fear. Life is but a momentary halt within the waste; and then, the nothing we set out from. Life is a shadow, a poor player that struts and frets his hour upon the stage and then is heard no more. Life is a tale told by an idiot, full of sound, signifying nothing. Life is a child-blown bubble that but reflects the shadow of its environment and is gone, a mockery, a sham, a lie, a fool's vision, its happiness but Dead Sea apples, its pain the crunching of a tyrant's heel.

"If I had gauged his character correctly, he accepted the circumstances surrounding him as the mystic officials to whom the universe had delegated its whole office concerning him. He took defeat and victory with equal equanimity. He was a man of placid exterior. His meteoric past shows him invincible in spirit and it is not irreverently that I proclaim him a dead game sport. When I use that phrase I do so filling it as full of practical human philosophy as it will hold. Riley Grannan fully exemplified the philosophy of those fugitive verses, 'It's easy enough to be happy when life goes along like a song; but the man worth while is the man who will smile when everything goes dead wrong; for the test of the heart is trouble, and it always comes with the years, and the smile that is worth the hommage of earth is the smile that shines through tears.'

"There are those who will condemn him. They believe that today he is reaping the reward of a misspent life. They are those who are dominated by Medieval creeds. Them I am not addressing. They are ruled by the skeleton hand of the past. They fail to see the moral side of a character lived outside their puritanical ideas. Riley Grannan's goodness was not of a type that reached its highest manifestation in ceremonious piety. It found its expression in the handclasp of friendship. It found its voice in the Henry, walking homeward with his package of peppermints, speculated a little on what Albion Bennet had said; then his mind relapsed to his anxiety with regard to Sylvia and her discovery that he had returned to the shop. He passed his arm across his face and sniffed at his coatsleeve. He wondered if he smelled of leather. He planned to go around to the kitchen door and wash his hands at the pump in the yard before he entered the house, but he could not be sure about the odor of leather. He wondered if Rose would notice it and be disgusted. His heart sank as he neared home. He sniffed at his coatsleeve again. He wondered if he could manage to slip into his bedroom and put on another coat before dinner, before Sylvia noticed. He wondered if he could manage to slip out unnoticed after dinner. He wondered if Sylvia asked him where he was going, what he could say. He wondered, if she were to call him to account for his long absence that forenoon, what he could say. When he reached the house he entered the side yard, stopped at the pump, washed his hands and dried them on his handkerchief, and drank from the tin cup chained to the pump nose. He thought he might enter by the front door and slip into his bedroom and get the other coat, but Sylvia came to the side door.

"Where in the world have you been all this time?" she said. Henry advanced smiling with the peppermints. "Why, Henry," she cried in a voice of dismay which had a gratified ring in it. "You've been and bought a whole pound. I only said to buy a quarter."

"They're good for you," said Henry, entering the door. Sylvia could not wait and put one of the sweets into her mouth, and to that Henry owed his respite. Sylvia eating strong peppermint was oblivious to leather. Henry went through into the bedroom and put on another coat before he sat down to the dinner table. Sylvia noticed that. "What did you change your coat for?" said she.

Henry shivered, as if with cold. "I thought the house seemed kind of damp when I came in," he said, "and this coat is some heavier."

Sylvia looked at him with angry anxiety. "You've got cold; I knew you would," said she. "You stayed out too late last night and the dew was awful heavy. I knew you would catch cold. You had better get some of those cold pellets that Dr. Wallace puts up at the drug store."

Again was Henry's way made plain for him. "Perhaps I had," said he eagerly. "I'll go down and get some after dinner."

But Horace innocently offered to save him the trouble. "I go past the drug store," he said, "let me get them."

Sylvia unexpectedly came to Henry's aid. "No," she said, "I think you had better not wait till Mr. Allen comes home from school. Dr. Wallace says those pellets ought to be taken right away, just as soon as you feel a cold, to have them do any good."

Henry brightened, but Rose interposed. "Why, I would love to run down to the drug store and get the medicine," she said. "You lie down after dinner, Uncle Henry, and I'll go."

Henry cast an agonizing glance at Horace. The young man did not understand in the least what it meant, but he came to the rescue. "The last time I took those pellets," he said, "Mr. Whitman got them for me. It was one Saturday and I was home and felt the cold coming, and I lay down, just as you suggest Mr. Whitman's doing, and I got asleep and woke with a chill. I think that if one has a cold the best thing is to keep exercising until you can get hold of a remedy. I think if Mr. Whitman walks down to the drug store himself and gets the pellets and takes one and keeps out in the open air afterward, as it is a fine day, it will be the very best thing for him."

"That is just what I think myself," said Henry, with a grateful look at Horace. Henry changed his coat again before leaving, on the plea that it was better for him to wear a lighter one when walking and the heavier one when he was in the house. He and Horace walked down the stret together. They were out of sight of the house before Henry spoke. "Sylvia don't know it yet," said he, "but there's no reason why you shouldn't. I ain't got any cold. I'll get the pellets to satisfy her, but I ain't got any cold. I wanted to get out again and not tell her, if I could help it. I didn't want a fuss. I want to put it off as long as I can. Sylvia's none too strong, and when anything goes against her she's all used up, and I want to save her as long as possible."

Horace stared at Henry with some alarm. "What on earth is it?" he said.

"Nothing; only I have gone back to work in the shop." Horace stared in amazement. "But I thought——"

"You thought we had enough so I hadn't any need to work, and you are right," said Henry with a pathetic firmness. "We have got property enough to keep us, if nothing happens, as long as we live, but I had to go back to that infernal treadmill or die."

Horace nodded soberly. "I think I understand," said he.

"I'm glad you do."

"But Mrs. Whitman"——

"Oh, poor Sylvia will take it hard, and she can't understand. Women can't understand a lot of things. But I can't help it. I'll keep it from her for a day or two. She'll have to hear of it before long. You don't think Rose will mind the leather smell?"

"I wouldn't worry about that. There is nothing very disagreeable about that," Horace replied, laughing.

"I will always change my coat and wash my hands real particular before I set down to the table," said Henry wistfully. Then he added after a second's hesitation, "You don't suppose she will think any the less of me? You don't suppose she won't be willing to live in the house because I work in the shop?"

"You mean Rose, Miss Fletcher?"

"Yes; of course she's been brought up different. She don't know anything about people's working with their hands. She's been brought up to think they're made of different stuff from her. I don't suppose it's ever entered into the child's head that she could live to set at the same table with a man who works in a shoe shop. You don't suppose it will make her feel different to me?"

"I think if she had been brought up differently, as you say, that she has a great deal of sense," replied Horace. "I don't think you need to worry about that."

"I'm glad you don't. I believe it would break Sylvia's heart to lose her now, and I've got so I set a good deal by the child myself. Mr. Allen, I want to ask you something." Henry paused, and Horace waited.

"I want to ask you if you've noticed anything different about Sylvia lately," Henry said at last.

Horace looked at him. "Do you mean her looks or her manner?"

"Both."

Horace hesitated in his turn. "Now you speak of it"—— he began.

"Well," said Henry; "speak out just what you think."

"I have not been sure that there was anything different," Horace said slowly. "I have not been sure that it was not all imagination on my part."

"That's just the way I've been feeling," Henry said, eagerly. "What is it that you've been noticing?"

"I told you I am not sure that it is not all imagination, but——"

"What?"

"Well, sometimes your wife has given me the impression that she was brooding over something that she was keeping entirely to herself. She has had a look as if she had turned her eyes inward and was worrying over what she saw. I don't know that you understand what I mean by that."

Henry nodded. "That's just the way Sylvia's been looking to me."

"I don't know but she looks as well as ever."

"She's grown thin."

"Maybe she has. Sometimes I have thought that, but what I have noticed has been something intangible in her manner and expression, that I thought was there one minute and was not at all sure about the next. I haven't known whether the trouble or difference was with her or myself."

Henry nodded still more emphatically. "That's just the way it's seemed to me, and we ain't neither of us imagined it. It's so," said he.

"Have you any idea——"

"No, I haven't the least. But my wife's got something on her mind, and she's had something on her mind for a long time. It ain't anything new."

"Why don't you ask her?"

"I have asked her, and she says that, of course, she's got something on her mind; that she ain't a fool. You can't get around Sylvia. She never would tell anything unless she had made up her mind to it. She ain't like most women."

Then Horace turned the corner of the street leading to his school, and the conversation ceased with an enjoinder on his part to Henry not to be disturbed about it; he did not think it could be anything serious.

Henry's reply rang back as the two men went their different ways. "I don't suppose it can be anything serious," he said, almost angrily.

Horace, however, was disposed to differ with him. He argued that a woman of Sylvia Whitman's type does not change her manner and grow introspective for nothing. He was inclined to think there might be something rather serious at the bottom of it all. His imagination, however, pictured some disease which she was concealing from all about her, but which caused her never ceasing anxiety and perhaps pain. That night he looked critically at her, and was rather confirmed in his opinion. Sylvia had certainly grown thin, and the lines in her face had deepened into furrows. She looked much older than she had before she received her inheritance. At the same time she puzzled Horace by looking happier, albeit in a struggling sort of fashion. Rose was the cause of the happiness, or the inheritance was. Horace was inclined to think it was Rose, and the more so because that night he had found in the postoffice a story, of whose acceptance he had been almost sure, accompanied with the miserable little formula which arouses at once wrath and humiliation.

Horace tore it up and threw the bits along the road. There was a thunder shower, with wind, coming up. It scattered the few blossoms remaining on the trees, and many leaves, and the bits of the civilly hypocritical note of thanks and non-acceptance flew with them upon the wings of the stormwind. Horace gazed up at the clouds overhead, which looked like the rapids of some terrible heavenly river, overlapping each other in shell-like shapes and moving with intense fury. He thought of Rose and first hoped that she was in the house, and then reflected that he might as well give up all hope of ever marrying her. The returned manuscript in his pocket seemed to weigh down his very soul. He recalled various stories which he had read in the current magazines of late, and it seemed to him that his story compared very favorably with them. He tried to think of the matter judicially, as if the rejected story were not his own, and it seemed to him that he was right in thinking well of it. He had a sickening sense of being pitted against something which he could not gainsay, which his own convictions as to the rights of persons in authority to have their own opinions forbade him to question.

"The editors had a perfect right to return my story, even if it is every whit as worthy of publication, and even worthier, than anything which has appeared in their magazine for a twelvemonth," he told himself. He realized that he was not dependent upon the public's opinion concerning the merit of his work; he could not be until the work appeared in print; but he was combating the opinions, or appealing to them, of a few men whose critical abilities might be biased by a thousand personal matters with which he had no concern, and with which he could not interfere. He felt that there was a broad general injustice in the situation, but absolute right as to facts.

These were men to whom was given the power to accept or refuse. No one could question their right to use that power. Horace said to himself that he was probably a fool to entertain for a single moment any hope of success under such conditions. "Good Lord, it might depend upon whether the readers had indigestion," he thought, and at the same time he accepted the situation with a philosophic pride of surrender. "It's about one chance in a good many thousand," he told himself. "If I don't get the chance some other fellow does, and there's no mortal way but to make the best of it, unless I make a fool of myself."

Horace was exceedingly alive to the lack of dignity of one who kicked against the pricks. He said to himself that if he could not marry Rose, if he could not ask her, why he must accept his fate, not attack it to his own undoing, nor even deplore it to his ignominy. In all this he was rather curiously leaving the girl and her possible view of the matter entirely out of the question.

Horace, while he was not in the least self-deprecatory and was disposed to be as just in his estimate of himself as of other men, was not egotistical. It did not really occur to him that Rose's fancy, too, might have swerved her as his own had done; that he might cause her suffering. It simply seemed to him that he had not actually wooed her, although he had been very near it; that she had not shown any especial encouragement to him; that since he was not able to marry her, although if he had been at liberty to do so he might have taught her to love him through his enormous tenderness for her, he had not done so, and that she might marry some other man who would be just as good to her and who would be justified in asking her. It went to prove poor Horace's unselfishness that, upon entering the house and seeing Rose seated in the south room with her embroidery, his first feeling was of satisfaction that she was housed and safe from the fast gathering storm.

Rose looked up as he entered and smiled. "There's a storm overhead," Horace said.

"Yes," said Rose. "Aunt Sylvia has just told me I ought not to use my needle with so much lightning. She has been telling me about a woman who was sewing in a thunderstorm, and the needle was driven into her hand." Rose laughed, but as she spoke she quilted her needle into her work, tossed it on a table, got up and went to the window. "It looks almost wild enough for a cyclone," she said, gazing up at the rapid scud of gray, shell-like clouds.

"Rose, come right away from that window," cried Sylvia, entering from the dining-room. "Only last summer a woman in Alford got struck standing at a window in a tempest."

"I want to look at the clouds," said Rose, but she obeyed and left the window. Sylvia placed a chair away from the fireplace and out of any draught. "Here," said she, "sit down here." Sylvia drew up another chair close beside Rose and sat down.

There came a flash of lightning and a terrible crash of thunder; a blind slammed somewhere. Out in the great front yard the rain swirled in misty columns like ghostly dancers and the flowering shrubs lashed the ground. Horace watched it until Sylvia called him also to what she considered a place of safety.

"If you don't come away from that window and set on the sofa I shall have a conniption fit," she said. Horace obeyed. As he sat down he thought of Henry and, before he considered, inquired where he was.

"He went down to Mr. Meeks," replied Sylvia with calm decision. Horace stared at her. He wondered if she could possibly be lying, if she really believed what she said. He did not know what had happened that afternoon, neither did Rose.

Rose had gone out for a walk, and while Sylvia was alone a caller had come, Mrs. Jim Jones. Mrs. Jim Jones was a very small, angry looking woman. Nature had apparently intended her to be plump and sweet and rosy and altogether comfortable, but she had flown in the face of nature like a cross hen and had her own way with herself. It was scarcely conceivable that Mrs. Jim Jones could be all the time in the state of wrath against everything in general which her sharp tongue and her angry voice evinced, but she gave that impression. Her little blond face looked like that of a doll which has been covered with angry pin scratches by an ill-tempered child. Whenever she spoke these scratches deepened. Mrs. Jim Jones could not bring herself to speak of anything without a show of temper, whether she really felt it or not. She fairly lashed out at Sylvia when the latter inquired if it was true that Albion Bennet had left her house and returned to the hotel.

"Yes," said she, "it is true, and thank the Lord for his unspeakable mercy to the children of men! I couldn't have stood that man much longer, and that's the gospel truth. He ate like a pig. There wasn't a mite of profit in it, and he was as fussy as any old maid I ever saw. If I had to choose between an old maid and an old batch for a boarder give me the old maid every time. She don't begin to eat so much and she takes care of her room. Albion Bennet about ruined my spare chamber. He ate peanuts every Sunday and they're all ground into the carpet. Yes, I'm mighty glad to get rid of him. Let alone everything else, the way he pestered my Susy was enough to make me sick of my bargain. There that poor child got so she tagged me all over the house for fear Albion Bennet would be making love to her. I guess Susy ain't going to take up with a man like Albion Bennet. He's too old for her, anyhow, and I don't believe he makes much out of his drug store. I rather guess Susy looks higher than that. Yes, he's gone, and it's a good riddance bad rubbish."

"If you feel so about it I'm glad he's gone back to Lucinda," said Sylvia. "She didn't have many steady boarders, and it did sort of look against her, poor thing, with all the mean talk there's been."

"I guess there wasn't quite so much smoke without a little fire," said Mrs. Jim Jones, and her small face looked fairly evil.

But then Sylvia had arisen. "Now, Mrs. Jones, you know better," said she. "You know as well as you want to that Lucinda was no more guilty than you and I. We both went to school with her."

Mrs. Jim Jones had backed down a little. There was something about Sylvia Whitman when she was aroused that a woman of Mrs. Jones's type could not face with impunity.

"Well, I don't pretend to know," said she, with angry sullenness.

"You pretended to know just now. If folks don't know, it seems to me the best thing they can do is to hold their tongues, anyhow."

"I am holding my tongue, ain't I? What has got into you, Sylvia Whitman?"

"No, you didn't hold your tongue when you said that about there not being so much smoke without some fire."

"Well, there always is fire when there's smoke, ain't there?"

"No, there ain't always, not on the earth. Sometimes there's smoke that folks' wicked imaginations bring up out of the other place. I do believe that."

"Why, Sylvia Whitman, how you do talk! You're almost swearing."

"Have it swearing, if you want to," said Sylvia. "I know I'm glad that Albion Bennet has gone back to Lucinda's. Everybody knows how mortal scared he is of his own shadow, and if he's got grit enough to go back there it's enough to about satisfy folks there wasn't anything in the story."

"Well, it's good riddance of bad rubbish as far as I'm concerned," said Mrs. Jim Jones. There had been on her face when she first entered an expression of peculiar malignity. Sylvia knew it of old. She had realized that Mrs. Jones had something sweet for her own tongue, bitter for hers, in store, and that she was withholding it as long as possible in order to prolong the delight of anticipation.

"You've got two boarders, ain't you?" inquired Mrs. Jim Jones.

"I've got one boarder," replied Sylvia, with dignity, "and we keep him because he can't bear to go anywhere else in East Westland and because we like his company."

"I thought Abrahama White's niece——"

"She ain't no boarder. She makes her home here. If you think we'd take a cent of board money from poor Abrahama's own niece, you're mistaken."

"I didn't know. She takes after her grandmother White, don't she? She was mortal homely."

Then Sylvia fairly turned pale with resentment. "She doesn't look any more like old Mrs. White than your cat does," said she. "Rose is a beauty; everybody says so. She's the prettiest girl that ever set foot in this town."

"Everybody to their taste," replied Mrs. Jim Jones in the village formula of contempt. "I heard Mr. Allen, your boarder, was going to marry her," she said.

"He ain't."

"I'm glad to hear it from headquarters," said Mrs. Jim Jones. "I said I couldn't believe it was true."

"Mr. Allen won't marry any girl in East Westland," said Sylvia.

"Is there anybody in Boston?" asked Mrs. Jim Jones, losing her self-possession a little.

Sylvia stuck to her trump card. "I don't know anything; that is, I ain't going to say anything," she replied, mysteriously.

Mrs. Jim Jones was routed for a second, but she returned to the attack. She had not yet come to her particular errand. She felt that now was the auspicious moment. "I felt rather sorry for you when I heard the news," said she.

Sylvia did not in the least know what she meant. Inwardly she trembled, but she would have died before she betrayed herself. She would not even display her ignorance of what the news might be. She did not, therefore, reply in actual words, but a noncommittal grunt.

"I thought," said Mrs. Jim Jones, driven to her last gun, "that you and Mr. Whitman had inherited enough to make you comfortable for life, and I felt real bad to find out you hadn't."

Sylvia turned a little pale, but her gaze never flinched. She grunted again.

"I supposed," said Mrs. Jim Jones, mouthing her words with intensest relish, "that there wouldn't be any need for Mr. Whitman to work any more, and when I heard that he was going back to the shop, and when I saw him turn in there this morning, I declare I did feel bad."

Then Sylvia spoke. "You needn't have felt bad," said she. "Nobody asked you to."

Mrs. Jim Jones stared.

"Nobody asked you to," repeated Sylvia. "Nobody is feeling at all bad here. It is true we've plenty, so Mr. Whitman don't need to lift his finger if he don't want to, but a man can't sit down day in and day out and suck his thumbs, when he's been used to working all his life. Some folks are lazy by choice and some folks work by choice. Mr. Whitman is one of them."

Mrs. Jim Jones felt fairly defrauded. "Then you don't feel bad?" said she, in a crestfallen way.

"Nobody feels bad here," said Sylvia. "I guess nobody in East Westland feels bad about it, unless it's you, and nobody wants you to."

After Mrs. Jim Jones had gone, Sylvia had gone into her bedroom and sat down in a rocking chair by the one window. Under the window grew a sweet briar rose bush. There were no roses on it, but the soothing perfume of the leaves came into the room. Sylvia sat quite still for a while. Then she rose and went into the sitting room, with her mouth set hard. When Rose returned she had greeted her as usual. When Rose had asked where Uncle Henry was she had replied she

SYNOPSIS.

In a short foreword we are told that the story is to deal largely with the revels of the notorious Society of St. Francis, founded during the reign of George II, at Medmenham Abbey, on the Thames, by John Wilkes and Sir Francis Dashwood. Among its members were William Whitehead, poet laureate, and Frederick Lord Harborne, a rascally voluptuary. One of the rules of these burlesque Franciscans was that a man must die or marry any woman whose good name he defended. Inasmuch as only women of notorious character were ever named here, the marriage demanded was merely a mock ritual, celebrated with a burlesque of religious ceremonial.

Sir Richard Escombe, a brilliant and daredevil Irish baronet, during his absence in France has had a price set upon his head as a suspected Jacobite. He boldly returns, partly to clear his name, partly to see Kitty Dulcimore. Blundering into the Dulcimore country house, he finds it occupied by some of Lord Harborne's officers, who, in drunken jest, have put Kitty's name in a lottery. Whoever draws it is pledged to marry her. The winning ticket is cunningly thrust into Dick's unwitting hand just at the moment that Kitty enters. She demands an explanation, which he cannot give, and the lovers part in anger. Dick rides to Windsor and, vindicating himself, is made captain of the guards by George II. Three months later Honor Marwood, a discarded mistress of Harborne's and still in his pay, informs him that Kitty is to be married next day to Harborne. Forgetting his duty, Dick flies to Harborne's London residence, Northumberland House. On the way he is plied with liquor by two of Harborne's hirelings, and on reaching Northumberland House he drinks a glass of drugged wine tendered him by Harborne. He staggers intoxicated into the presence of Kitty and King George. The latter shrewdly suspects the trick and exposes Harborne by making him drink his own wine. Meanwhile Kitty has fled to Bristol, and thence, under escort of her cousin, Willoughby, to the house of her aunt, Miss Elizabeth Dulcimore, at Marlow, near Medmenham Abbey. Dick, too, is on the way to Marlow, when his horse, scared by a pistol shot, runs away with him. As he whirls past Medmenham Abbey he notices a number of fine gentlemen entering it. A moment later he lands on his head and is picked up insensible by a cottager, Jasper Clegg.

Ten days later, while convalescent, he learns that Kitty has been abducted by order of the vindictive Harborne and is to be taken to Medmenham Abbey.

At the abbey the fun is fast and furious when Kitty, all unconscious of the truth, is ushered in.

CHAPTER XXVI.

ENTER KITTY DULCIMORE.

Now, Kitty was dressed in a pretty gown of blue and silver, and had a dark blue velvet cloak covering her from shoulder to ankle. Her hat was immense and feathered, such a great round hat as the pictures of Romney and Sir Joshua have made known to us; and she wore, moreover, a great brooch of aquamarines and diamonds which Aunt Elizabeth recently pressed upon her acceptance, with tears and more anecdotes of good Queen Anne.

A thousand miles from suspicion, believing that the accident to her coach had been a very ordinary affair, and much surprised to find herself among old friends—for she had met Captains Beddoe and Rupert at the very door of the club—she walked into the refectory with no more concern than she would have entered her own parlor at Sherbourn, and standing there amazed, she did not even then understand.

"Lady," says Tobias, bending his back heroically and waving the great mortar board so wildly that men stepped back in affright, "lady, welcome to Medmenham."

She gazed at him dumfounded. The horrid cowls about her, the mocking eyes which laughed but half concealed, the lights, the tables, the drink—and this monster of a man bowing to her as some clown at a circus! Good God! what must she think now?

"To Medmenham! cried she; "but, Captain Beddoe, you told me"——

"That this was the vicar's house? My dear lady, the fiction was not mine. Upon my life, eh, Rupert?"

"Upon your life, it wasn't says Rupert quickly, and the pair of them laughing together, the chaplain spoke again.

"It shall be any house you choose to name it while you are here, lady. Say not that Tobias Cambray knows his duties so ill. Vicar of Medmenham or Pope of Rome, 'tis one and the same thing to him. We are but your slaves—command us when you will."

She drew back a little, as though his very touch were an affront. Speaking in rapid tones, becoming excited and fearful, and feeling that her courage was not equal to this, Kitty tried to tell them how she had come to the place.

"We lost a wheel of the coach and the men are gone down to the village to make it good. I count it most fortunate that Captain Beddoe should have ridden by—and Captain Rupert, surely, would not be far off. I thought that I was among friends, and cannot be mistaken. Is not this, sir, the club at Medmenham of which Lord Harborne has spoken to me?"

"Lady, as you say, the club at Medmenham."

"And these—these gentlemen——"

She shuddered a little for the cowls were all grouped together and the eyes that blazed upon her through jagged slits gave poor promise of the friendship she relied upon.

"They hide their virtues from the world, lady, such is their modesty. Parvum parva decent. They will be first to tell you what we owe to our ancient tradition of hospitality. Even now, mistress, I will present them to you—Brother Elphege, Brother Boniface, Brother Angela, Brother Jerome—they bring lilies in their hand, lady—which is a metaphor, speaking of those blameless lives they would lead in this house."

He waved his hand magniloquently and one by one the brethren did obeisance to their guest. Not a man in the room by this time who did not understand the trick or tell himself that Harborne had lured Kitty Dulcimore to the place that he might profit by her adventure.

If any finer sentiment stirred in any heart it was not spoken. The laws of Medmenham Abbey were better obeyed than any decree of King or Parliament. It was death to stand between a brother and his jest—you can read the very rule in the old code that has come down to us—and who would spill his blood for a country girl, caught in a net by a villain, and there affording the brotherhood a pretty hour's amusement? Not the monks of St. Francis, be sure of it! Not Churchill or Ailsa or Whitwould or the fat fop, Cunninghame. Let my lord see to it, for this was his affair; and so they bowed and smirked before Kitty; and, presently, one bolder than the others, reminded the chaplain of the ancient custom—that any lady who entered the refectory at Medmenham must take the oath before she went forth again.

"I need no obedience," says Kitty prettily, "indeed, sir, I must now be on my way again."

And then from the cowled group in the shadows came the voice—

"She cannot leave until she is one of us."

An ominous utterance—one that many voices seconded. Hear them altogether crying: "Agreed, agreed," and then the appeal to Tobias, and then the appeal to the law.

"The oath—she must take the oath, Tobias," and again the cry, "Agreed."

Tobias pretended to be greatly shocked by this, but he was all aflame with it, none the less, and as grateful as any man could be for this new opportunity of distinguishing himself.

"Indeed, it is so, mistress," he said, while he affected such an air of distress that tears alone were wanting for its complement—"indeed, it is so. Our pious founders have decreed that all who enter this room during the hour of the office shall take the oath of our order. Confer this priceless boon upon us, and then you may go in peace."

And what could Kitty Dulcimore say to that? Consider her position. She had no friend in the room. Those about her practiced toward women a code which Chesterfield and the age had glorified. The vilest rakes that ever skulked in the dark places of a city leered and fawned about her. The scene was strange and frightful to a point beyond all power of modern understanding. She believed that her coach would shortly be brought to the door and her servants come for her—but meanwhile what should she say to these men, how bear herself toward them? Discretion and courage alike taught her to temporize. She would enter into the spirit of the jest to the uttermost of her power. But chiefly she, the Kitty whom they had toasted of old time, would show them that she was not afraid.

"Sir," she said, standing up before them as Kitty Dulcimore knew how, "who am I to offend your pious founders? Please tell what to do and I will try to please you."

A great shout of "Hear, hear," greeted this unexpected assent. One villain, snatching a discarded habit from a chair, flung it open and prepared to put it about her shoulders. The chaplain took the candle from his desk and raised it aloft.

"Sister," he said, answering the question she had put to him, "the custom is as old as the club. We thank you for your acquiescence. No one who enters this house as you have entered it, leaves until the oath is taken. You must become one of us."

"One of you—oh, sir, but which one?"

They liked her wit, and applauded it. When she asked them if she must put the habit on, and was told that it was necessary, "being the habit of a gracious order," she asked why the "gracious order" chose to hide its face from the world. And this gave Tobias his second opportunity.

"The light of your presence, mistress. Come, answer me according to the book——"

"Is it a good book?" Kitty inquired again, with a light laugh that almost spoke contempt.

"It is a very good book—the rules of our order."

"What great, big, noble rules they must be! And I must put my little hand upon it. Sir, 'tis never formidable enough to break your rules?"

"Nay, mistress, but it touches them with fingers of gold. Be pleased to humor us, and out of your good will to take the oath we shall require of you."

"An oath, sir? Since when has woman been asked to swear an oath?"

"Since man knew that she keeps no oath. You will be the honorable exception. Nay, you will understand the imprudence, the danger, of repeating anything you have heard here tonight. Swear this to us, and then shall you depart in peace."

The man had put menace into his tone and all sense of comedy was lost upon that instant. Clever and quick, Kitty realized that something more than jest lay behind this requirement. They threatened her and would compel her to swear, while she, who had never lacked obstinacy since she was old enough to possess any character at all, was just as determined not to be so trapped.

"Sir," she said, "I am a stranger, but I shall not believe evil of you. I know nothing of the meaning of your oath and am not willing to degrade myself by swearing it. In so far as I may honorably safeguard your confidence, I will do so. More than that is impossible."

She gazed about her, facing them with amazing courage and in no way afraid. Tobias, himself not quite sure of his ground and having no instructions to make a scene, affected to treat her refusal as a joke. In truth, he retreated so nimbly that even the brethren laughed aloud.

"Nolent ubi velis," cried he—quoting from Terence—"even as the Master has written so shall it be. Let the brethren speak for you, lady. Let one of them answer in your name."

Now, for the first time, my lord appears; he has been skulking in the shadows hitherto and watching the scene as a hawk may watch a quarrel among the sparrows. But the moment had arrived for his intervention, and stepping boldly into the arena he cried:

"I answer in the lady's name!"

CHAPTER XXVII.

Now, no sooner had my lord spoken and laid his hand solemnly upon the book than a great shout went up from the assembled brethren, and in a twinkling their robes were cast aside again and all the riot and debauch resumed.

From every quarter, through the door and apertures, leaping gayly through the curtained arches, came the elves and sprites and dancing girls. Fiddlers and trumpeters, wonderfully refreshed, thrashed and blew their instruments with a finer vigor; lackeys ran to and fro with drink; the officers sat to their tables, the more profligate to the amours. And in that almost instantaneous vision Kitty knew and understood why Lord Harborne had brought her to this house and what was the nature of the trap he had set for her.

Perchance even the most fertile imagination will hardly understand her position as circumstances had made it and would report upon it when the affair was over.

Those were not the days when common sense readily obtained a hearing. Vain to say that Kitty had but to tell her own story, to relate the misadventure which carried her to the Abbey, to demand the consideration of all right thinking people. Reputations were blown about as straws when George II was King. Honor drew the most ridiculous bills upon mankind and they were duly discharged.

Kitty knew as well as any man in the great refectory that this trick would confound her utterly in the world without and hold her up to the shame and derision of the town. She, to be sure, understood in a moment why Harborne had been driven to it and what his ultimate purpose must be. And we shall blame her not at all if a sense of utter helplessness and defeat overwhelmed her for the time being and left her almost blind to the frightful scenes about her, pale and trembling and so ashamed that even death itself would have been welcome?

WHAT'S SAID IN SAN FRANCISCO.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.] SAN FRANCISCO, April 10.—Despite the suggestion of a distinguished clergyman that we celebrate the 18th of April San Franciscans are determined to forget once and for all. Earthquake and fire are back numbers with plenty of new skyscrapers to keep them in the rear. The only things that worry now are the illness of Admiral Evans and the vain effort to pay $65,000 of fleet reception debts with $30,000 cash in hand.

The liquor interests of San Francisco have contributed $15,000 to entertain visitors, and this is put to their credit in the ledger of public approval. It is estimated however that $4,000,000 will be spent in San Francisco before the squadron sails May 18th for Puget Sound. The army people are a bit jealous of the oncoming marine guards and are not at all pleased at the result of a pugilistic contest at the Olympic Club where a sailor knocked a soldier cold.

In anticipation of the crowds thronging already to the metropolis, the United Railways are straining every nerve to handle them. Every old thing with wheels and strong enough to support a trolley pole is pressed into service. Grasping Supervisors insisting on the corporation paying the city for the privilege of using four trolley tracks on lower Market street have been whipped into line to grant the franchise for nothing until June 1. If refused the company proposed to put on horse cars or even ox teams and so won out.

In police circles, all hope is abandoned of persuading the Supervisors to provide an extra hundred patrolmen to keep the sailors from fighting the citizens. In lieu of outside squabbles the peace guardians mix it themselves, and Chief Biggy fled to San Diego, after calling Commissioner [illegible] a mean thing. Five grafting cops have been fined $100 of their earnings, and Capt. Gleeson has bought himself a toupee in order to shake hands with Admiral Evans.

While San Francisco is struggling to get rid of its garbage, and is getting ready to spend a million dollars to burn it, Oakland is proposing to dump her refuse in the bay and allow the next incoming tide to sweep it under the wharves of the larger city. In view of the craze for cleanliness here, this will not be tolerated long. In addition to the disposition of the garbage, it is now planned to have the school children, during the week's vacation, spend their time cleaning up back yards, instead of playing with Teddy bears.

The grand jury has reported that San Francisco schools are in a filthy condition, but the worthy and estimable citizens who compose it have never qualified as sanitary experts. To offset this Dr. Blue points with pride to the fact that in one district alone, that of the Ninth, nearly 4000 rats were killed in a week, and 34,000 traps guessed he must be at Mr. Meeks's. That was where he generally was when he wasn't at home.

SHOULDERS OF ATLAS.

It did not really occur to Sylvia that she was lying. It did not, later in the afternoon, when Horace came home and she answered his question concerning her husband's whereabouts in the same manner. She had resolved upon Sydney Meeks as a synonym for the shoe shop. She knew herself that when she said Mr. Meeks she in reality meant the shop. She did not worry about others not having the same comprehension as herself. Sylvia had a New England conscience, but, like all New England consciences, it was susceptible of hard twists to bring it into accordance with New England will.

The tempest, as Sylvia termed it, continued. She kept glancing from her station of safety at the streaming windows. She was becoming very much worried about Henry. The sitting room had four windows, two facing the road and the front yard, two at the side. At last Sylvia saw a figure bent to the rainy wind pass swiftly before the side windows. She was on her feet in an instant, although at that minut the room was filled with blue flame, followed by a terrific crash. She ran out into the kitchen and flung open the door. "Come in quick, for mercy sake!" she called to Henry. Henry entered. He was dripping with rain. Sylvia did not ask a question. "Stand right where you be till I bring you some dry clothes," she said. Henry obeyed. He stood meekly in a dripping pool and waited. "Mr. Whitman has got home from Mr. Meeks' and he's dripping wet," she said to Horace and Rose, as she hurried through the sitting room to her bedroom. "I am going to get him some dry things and hang the wet ones by the kitchen stove."

When she re-entered the kitchen with her arms full, Henry cast a scared glance at her. She met it imperturbably. "Hurry and get out of those wet things or you'll catch your death of cold," said she.

Henry obeyed. Sylvia fastened his necktie for him when he was ready for it. Henry wondered if she smelled the leather in his drenched clothing. His own nostrils were full of it. But Sylvia made no sign. She never afterward made any sign. She never intimated to Henry in any fashion that she knew of his return to the shop. She was, if anything, kinder and gentler with him than she had been before, but whenever he attempted, being led thereto by a guilty conscience, to undeceive her, Sylvia gently, but decidedly wafted the revelation aside. She would not have it.

That day when she and Henry entered the sitting room she said, so calmly that Henry had not the courage to contradict her:—"Here is your Uncle Henry, home from Mr. Meeks's, and he was as wet as a drowned rat. I suppose Mr. Meeks didn't have any umbrella to lend. Old bachelors never do have anything."

Henry sat down quietly in his allotted chair. He said nothing. It was only when the storm had abated, when there was a clear streak of gold low in the west and all the wet leaves in the yard gave out green and silver lights when Sylvia had gone out in the kitchen to get supper and Rose had followed her, that the two men looked at each other.

"Does she know?" whispered Horace.

"If she does know and has taken a notion never to let anybody know, she never will," replied Henry.

"You mean that she will never mention it to you even?"

Henry nodded. He looked relieved and scared. He was right. He continued to work in the shop, and Sylvia never intimated to him that she knew anything about it.

MANUFACTURES WOOD.

Angeleno Invents Machine Which Converts Sawdust and Shavings Into Solid Body.

For years shavings, sawdust and chips have been looked upon as a refuse, but a Los Angeles citizen has perfected a machine which assimilates these materials into a solid body which makes excellent fuel. Ira Foreman has worked upon his invention for two years.

The first perfected machine is installed in a mill at the corner of Ninth street and Lawrence avenue and is daily converting shavings and sawdust into hard wood. The materials are carried from the dump, where they have been perfectly dried, on a rotary belt to the hopper, thence into a trough and through this to the plunger.

A small hempen rope runs through the center of a mold into which the shavings are forced. Twenty-ton pressure is then exerted and the solid body issues from the machine in the shape of a tree limb three or four inches in diameter. An automatic apparatus cuts the sticks into any desired length, usually eleven inches. Electric power is used in this operation. The total output is six tons a day.

Mr. Foreman is completing plans for a forty-ton machine to be installed at Terminal Island. Several other mills will be put in operation as rapidly as they can be completed. The new product will be handled by all retail coal and wood dealers. From tests made it has been demonstrated that it will burn longer than eucalyptus wood. The intensity of heat and amount of flame is largely governed by the kind of shavings used. Redwood shavings last longest. White pine causes a bright flame and eucalyptus a pleasant odor.

The company which has been formed for manufacturing the machines includes F. H. True, Ira Foreman, M. G. Agnew and Dr. H. True. Mr. Foreman hopes to complete a machine, in the near future, which will produce molding for pictures and walls from sawdust and shavings.

Statistics showing that 2,000,000 children are born in the United States every year, while only 300,000 come through in England, may have influenced Canada in strictly enforcing exclusion laws against us; but we respectfully notify our northern neighbors that Germany is annually producing 900,000 youngsters, and we protest against discrimination, even from our neighbors.

Builders Hardware Another Week

A week ago we announced that we would close out our Builders' Hardware Department on Saturday, April 11th—box up what stock was left, and send it to our warehouse. But we found upon taking inventory on Saturday night that the selling has been so heavy that very little Builders' Hardware remains. This being the case, we have decided to extend the sale another week and close out every single piece. This will be your last opportunity to get Builders' Hardware at less than cost price. We won't extend the time longer than Saturday next—because goods are on the road and we need the room the Builders' Hardware now occupies for it.

EVERY BIT MUST GO IN THE NEXT 6 DAYS

WE'RE DISCONTINUING OUR BUILDERS HARDWARE DEPARTMENT

Builders' Hardware at Less Than Cost

We are closing out our Builders' Hardware Department entirely. We have lost money on this class of goods. We know that there are many lines which will pay us better to handle—therefore Builders' Hardware must go to make room for them.

While the selling has been simply tremendous since we announced our intention of closing out this department, there is enough stock left from which to make satisfactory selections. But we advise you to see us early in the week—what little stock remains will soon be disposed of.

No Builders' Hardware Will Be Charged

We are selling Builders' Hardware at from 15c to 20c on the dollar less than we paid for it. For this reason we will open no accounts—Builders' Hardware will be sold on a strict cash basis. Goods will be sent C.O.D. only when we are assured there will be somebody on the job to pay for same. We haven't time to figure your plans—make out your lists and bring them in tomorrow. Copy of our inventory can be seen by any hardware dealer who wishes to buy.

WILL TUNNEL A MOUNTAIN.

To Construct Largest Reservoir in World.

Eight Million Dollars to Be Cost of Work.

Saves Water for Two Hundred Thousand Acres.

The reservoir which will be formed by the construction of the Elephant Butte dam across the Rio Grande River at Engle, N. M., the construction of which was begun a few days ago by the Federal government, will be twice as large as any other artificial water reservoir in the world. This distinction is now held by the reservoir which is formed by the great Assuan dam in the Nile River.

The Elephant Butte reservoir will be forty miles long, and, in places, six miles wide. It will have a storage capacity of 2,000,000 acre feet to the level of the spillway, or approximately 100,000,000,000 cubic feet, or 650,000,000,000 gallons of water.

This is one of the reclamation projects of the government, and its consummation will mean more in the matter of the development of the Southwest than any industrial enterprise ever undertaken in this region.

TO COST EIGHT MILLIONS.

The estimated cost of the dam is $6,000,000. In addition to this sum, not less than $2,000,000 will be expended in constructing the system of canals and ditches for the great irrigation project. The site of the proposed dam is at the mouth of a long and deep cañon, and its width will be only 400 feet at river level. Its length at its crest will be 1200 feet. Its height from bedrock foundation to the crest will be 275 feet. The width of the dam on top will be twenty feet, and this space will be occupied by a driveway, which will afford a convenient means for crossing the river.

An enormous amount of material will enter into the construction of the dam. It will include more than 300,000 barrels of cement and a great amount of sand and gravel. Involved in the construction are 44,400 cubic yards of soft rock and earth excavation, and 335,000 cubic yards of sand excavation. The construction of coffer dams, each to be 400 feet long, will be necessary. The excavations in bedrock for dam anchorages will amount to 5000 cubic yards. The concrete in the dam above the river bed will aggregate 300,000 cubic yards, and below the river bed 114,000 yards. The excavation of more than 120,000 cubic yards for the spillway will be necessary.

One of the important preliminary pieces of work to be done in connection with the construction is the building of a tunnel through the mountain which borders one side of the dam site. This tunnel will enter the mountain just above the dam, and will make its exit into the river some distance below the dam. It will be used to divert the flow of the river while the construction of the dam is in progress. In view of the fact that there are occasional floods in this stream, when a large outlet is required to take care of the flow, the tunnel will be of ample size and its construction of a permanent nature. It will serve the purpose of an irrigation canal or flume when the dam is finished. This tunnel will run through solid rock for most of its length.

WILL IRRIGATE 200,000 ACRES.

The initial acreage to be placed under irrigation in the valley of the Rio Grande from this reservoir is about 200,000, and to water this number of acres only about 600,000 acre feet of water will be required. In order, however, to provide for a series of dry seasons that may occur, the reservoir is to have a capacity for an enormous amount of surplus water. It also is expected that a big quantity of silt will be brought into the reservoir, and, while sluices will be provided for ridding the basin of as much of this accumulation as possible, it is not expected that all of it can be taken out.

Workmen are now excavating for the eastern abutment of the dam. When the preliminary work is finished several thousand men will be employed in the construction work. A site for a town to be made up of these Federal workmen has been laid off, and it will be a lively place when the work is in full progress. It is stated that the government will construct its own cement plant. A fine deposit of cement material has been found adjacent to the site of the dam, and no difficulty will be experienced in obtaining plenty of the raw product. The site of the proposed dam is located some distance off of a railroad, but it is stated that a branch line will be built to the place in order to haul in the construction material and supplies will will be needed for the work.

The stretch of valley land that is to be brought under irrigation and cultivation by the building of the Elephant Butte dam extends from the site of the proposed dam to old Fort Quitman, Tex., a distance of 185 miles. The valley is narrow in most parts, and it takes a long stretch of territory to make up the 200,000 acres that are to be reclaimed. It is estimated that at this time not more than 35,000 acres of this valley are under cultivation.

LAND OWNERS TO PAY COST.

In addition to this 200,000 acres that are to be brought under the system of canals and ditches on the United States side of the river, a considerable part of the water from the big reservoir will be delivered to the land owners on the Mexican side of the river. This apportionment to Mexico of a certain part of the impounded water is provided for in the international treaty, which permits the construction of the dam. The United States government has appropriated $1,000,000 toward the cost of the Mexican side of the big project.

While the government bears the original cost of establishing this great reclamation enterprise, the land owners who are to receive the direct benefits from the irrigation system will repay the government at the rate of $4 per acre per year for ten years. At the expiration of that period the big enterprise passes into the hands of the land owners themselves, with free water in perpetuity.

Chinese Dentists.

The Chinese dental system is a thing wonderful to behold. He uses no instruments to get a tooth out, but pulls it from the patient's jaw with his fingers. Of course, it takes years of training, the apprentice being set to work pulling out plugs which have been hammered in harder than the rest, and the youngster shows what progress he makes by pulling out as many as possible. It takes months for the muscles of the novice's fingers to get supple enough for trial at a real tooth.

THE NILE'S DELTA.

immersed in antiquity that they cannot change the methods of primitive man. We certainly should be able to get better results with the material at our disposal.

COTTON AND SUGAR.

"There are over 1,500,000 acres of Nile Valley lands planted to cotton and sugar cane. One-fourth of the arable land is in Egyptian clover, known as bersine, rich in nutritive qualities, and I have no doubt that this product could be raised here. The Egyptian farmer owns an average of from one to ten acres, and every time he makes a little money he takes unto himself another wife, and thus increases the number of his farm hands at a minimum of expense. The country is developing very slowly, and it will be many years before it reaches a really high state of cultivation. Families live on about 25 cents a day. Men's suits cost a dollar or so, and women's suits even less.

THE UPPER NILE.

"We also took in the many sights of the Upper Nile, among them the Luxor Temple and Old Thebes, considered one of the greatest monuments of antiquity in the world. It is said that it is over 4000 years old, older than Adam and the Garden of Eden; but, of course, I can only vouch for that from hearsay. I was not personally acquainted with Adam. Most of the settlers live in mud huts in villages and cities, a manner of living which tends to desolate the surrounding country. There are very few improvements on the land, and I should judge that the whole country is about 9000 years behind the times. The principal products of the soil are peas, clover and alfalfa. It is a good stock country, and raises many camels, donkeys and small Egyptian cattle.

SUEZ CANAL.

"We visited the Suez Canal, and it seems unnecessary to give any description of this wonderful feat of engineering—the greatest in its line ever attempted and perfected in the world's history. It is enough to say that it is simply wonderful in its immensity. The United States Consul gave us every facility for obtaining information and was courteous in the extreme. I forgot to say that we saw several cane-sugar factories on our trip through the Nile. This is a very important industry, which, I believe, can be developed to great proportions on the desert lands similar in character near Calexico and in other places in the Southwest. I also believe that Egyptian cotton, also a profitable product, can be successfully grown here, and as soon as my shipment of seeds arrives we shall try them on the Mexican side of the Colorado Delta and on the sedimentary lands about Corcoran, in Kings county.

THE HOLY LAND.

"We then toured the Holy Land, sailing from Port Said to Jaffa, which I found to be a very interesting city of about 40,000 population. After taking in the sights there we went to Jerusalem by rail, a trip which consumes about four hours. The sights here brought back to our minds in vivid colors the memories of Sunday-school days. Jerusalem is a city of about 60,000 population, built upon the hills, and being, even to this day, without any water or electric light systems. So far as I could see, the only water supply is collected in immense rain cisterns. We visited Gethsemane, the Mount of Olives, the Church of the Holy Sepulchre and Bethlehem, a manufacturing city of about 10,000 inhabitants. We also took a glance at Bethany, which is said to be exactly the same as it was in the time of Christ, and went on to Jericho, the River Jordan and the Dead Sea—altogether an intensely interesting trip, which we wished we might have prolonged. The entire Holy Land is infested with professional beggars, and we saw many lepers, in all stages of the dread disease, lining the streets. The perpetual cry from one end of the land to the other is "Backsheesh!" and one is always glad to get home, if only to forget the monotonous and constant cry.

IN OLD ROME.

"We spent a week in Rome, which we reached after a pleasant trip from Alexandria. I was very much impressed with the rapid transformation which is going on, and believe that this grand old seat of history will some day again regain its golden glory. The population at the present time is said to be between 600,000 and 700,000, and it is thought that the million mark will be passed within the near future. We visited the principal historical points of interest, including St. Peters, the art galleries and the Coliseum.

We set sail for home from Naples on March 7 on the Cedric, another fine ocean greyhound. Coming via Gibraltar, the somber guardian of the Mediterranean, we arrived home, after a very pleasant trip, on March 17. My wife and daughter were somewhat tired from their trip, and so remained for a visit with relatives and friends in Boston.

NO PLACE LIKE HOME.

"On my trip across this grand and glorious continent of ours, I made comparisons between the Old World and the New, and was more than ever impressed with the evident fact that this is the greatest country in all this wide world. We are not surrounded by ignorance nor handicapped by customs which cannot be changed. Ours is a country of unlimited opportunity, where every man may make of himself almost what he will.

"Arriving once more in the city which I love to call home, I felt that, while we may not have the grand sights, the historical places and the great antiquities which I had seen in the countries of the Old World, yet we have a city unsurpassed in natural advantages of beauty and climate, and one which is among the best-built and most prosperous in the world. We cannot boast of Rameses II, we have no pyramidic piles of useless stone, nor ancient temples, nor grand age-beaten cathedrals, but we have got what counts more, after all, in this life—a city which is prosperous, which is free, which is clean, which is beautiful, and which is unequaled in any country or in any clime as a place to live in."

Just an Ordinary Tack.

He was a fragile youth and didn't dance all the dances.

"Let's sit it out," he said to his pretty partner.

"On the stairs?" she suggested.

So they went up and sat down.

"Ah!" cried the fragile youth suddenly, and rose hastily, gasping for breath.

"Why, Mr. Stackpole, what's the matter?" cried the fair young girl.

He could not answer. His face was livid, his eyes were rolling, and his whole frame was shaking.

"What kind of attack is it?" she gasped. And at this interrogation his voice returned to him.

"What earthly difference does that make!" he growled, "so long as it was one?"

Then, without a word of apology, he strode manfully away.

But how was she to know that the particular description of attack was just an ordinary tack, acrobatically standing on its head?—[Exchange.

Wished Information.

"Mamma, is the old black hen going to be sent away for the summer?"

"No, Tommy; but why do you ask?"

"Well, I heard papa tell the new governess that he would take her out riding when he sent the old hen away for the summer."—[Harper's Weekly.

RILEY'S LAST STACK.

to a discouraged brother. His were deeds of quiet charity. His were acts of manhood.

"Riley Grannan lived in the world of sport. My words are not minced because I am telling what I believe to be true. It was the world of sport, sometimes of hilarity, sometimes worse. He left the impress of his character upon us all and through the medium of his financial power he was able with his money to brighten the lives of all who knew him. He wasted his money, so the world says; but did it ever occur to you that the men and women of such class upon whom he wasted it are yet men and women? A little happiness brought into their lives means as much to them as happiness carried into the lives of the straight and the good. If you can take one ray of sunshine into the night-life and thereby carry a single hour of happiness, you are a benefactor. Riley Grannan did this.

God confined not his sunbeams to the nourishing of potatoes and corn. His scattering of sunshine was prodigal. Contemplate. He flings the auroral beauties round the cold shoulders of the North. He hangs the quivering picture of the mirage above the palpitating heart of the desert. He scatters the sunbeams like shattered gold upon the bosom of a myriad of lakes that gem the robe of nature. He spangles the canopy of night with star jewels and silvers the world with the reflected beams from on high. He hangs the gorgeous crimson curtain of the Occident across the sleeping-room of the sun.

"God wakes the coy maid of the morning to step timidly from her boudoir of darkness, to climb the steep of the Orient, to fling aside the gates of morning and to trip o'er the landscape, kissing the flowers in her flight. She arouses the birds to herald with their music the coming of her King, who floods the world with effulgent gold. These are wasted sunbeams. Are they? I say to you that the man or woman who by the use of money or power is able to smooth one wrinkle from the brow of human care or to change one moan or sob into a song, or to wipe away a tear, and to place in its stead a jewel of joy, is a public benefactor. Such was Riley Grannan.

"Did you ever stop to think that this old world of ours is dawning all the time? Down the grooves of time, this earth, flung by the hand of God, with every revolution is meeting an eternal dawn. That may signify our hope of life. In the development of the human soul as it swings toward its destiny we constantly near the sun.

"The time has come to say good-by. For the friends and loved ones not here to say the word let me say good-by, old man. We will try to exemplify the spirit of your life as we bear the grief at our parting. Words fail me here. Let these flowers, Riley, with their petalled lips and perfumed breath, speak in beauty and fragrance those sentiments too tender for words. Good-by."

FOOD FADS OF KINGS.

Most Monarchs Find It Necessary to Live Very Plainly, Contrary to Reputation.

"Living like a king," is a favorite republican expression to designate the acme of luxury, but, as a matter of fact, most modern rulers live very simply, observes a writer in Harper's Weekly. Edward of England's cook receives a salary of $10,000 a year, but he is rarely called upon to prepare an elaborate meal. Both the King and the Queen prefer simple dishes. Plain and nourishing food is what the King likes. He is very fond of oysters and of vegetable soups. Fowl with toasted bread and asparagus is quite a favorite dish on the royal table, and His Majesty generally takes a second helping of preserved fruit and toast.

Queen Alexandra is very fond of pastries and sweets. "I have the appetite of a dairy maid," she once declared. A cook was brought from Germany to prepare her stewed fruit, for which she has a remarkable fondness, and to which she attributes her unusually fine complexion. She is also very fond of the American "fritter," and until a short time ago an old Virginia cook was employed to make corn fritters, peach fritters and to prepare egg-plant, with batter and butter sauce.

The Queen of the Netherlands is especially fond of chocolate in all its forms, and has a special "chocolate chef." Queen Wilhelmina has also a decided penchant for all kinds of milk dishes, and for everything made with cream. King Alfonso of Spain was formerly noted for his liking for highly-seasoned and French dishes, but his Queen, Victoria, has taught him to like roast beef and Yorkshire pudding, it is said. Spanish dishes, this English Queen of Spain declares, are "too oily and too garlicky."

Congressman Ralph D. Cole of Ohio was recently renominated for a second term by the toss of a coin. The convention had taken 480 ballots unsuccessfully. Four years ago he was also nominated by the toss of a coin after the convention had been deadlocked for three days.

Cancer Cure

Established in Los Angeles for Eight Years

Three per cent. of deaths are caused by Cancer. Yet in seven cases out of eight the Cancer could be cured. The records of this institution show that we register even a higher percentage of cures. We have cured hundreds of women suffering with Cancer of the Breast; a large number of men afflicted with Cancer of the Head and Face. Some of our most notable cures are of Cancer which had affected the Tongue and Throat. Many of our cures are little short of marvelous.

We do not qualify the word "Cure." We mean what we say. We never consider a Cure perfect unless recurrence of the disease is prevented. We are very careful about recording a discharged patient as Cured until enough time has elapsed to assure that there is no relapse. Surgery and other methods may remove the Cancer, but not terminate the disease. We cure any Cancer which surgery can safely excise, and without that pain and disfigurement which the bloody knife occasions.

We invite your investigation. We give names and addresses of living persons within easy reach in this city and vicinity who have been cured, and will swear by the MRS. BRIDGE CANCER CURE. You cannot be mistaken if you have a Cancer. You need not be misled by quackery. You can well mistrust any doctor who asks you to put up the price of a cure in advance. If you come to us with a cancer, and we can cure it, we will take you under treatment. We accept no cases past hope of cure. We make no charge except for service performed. Our fees are not extortionate. Our cured and grateful patients are our testimonials.

RICHARD ESCOMBE.

[illegible] of my lord meanwhile? There was a sardonic grin upon [illegible] face, though we confess he safeguarded the word and manner of a gentleman and appeared to [illegible] solicitous for Kitty's welfare as though she had been his own daughter.

"This," says he, "is truly an unfortunate meeting, Miss Kitty."

"Since you are present, my lord, unfortunate is the word I would employ."

"And yet others would be more [illegible]. Shall we say at once that I [illegible] responsible for every coach upon [illegible]?"

"[illegible] be the sense of favors [illegible] and you are about to quit the [illegible], then—"

"Come, come," says he, "and what [illegible] happen to Kitty Dulcimore in [illegible] house as this if those who [illegible] her honor at heart go calling for [illegible] own horses?"

"[illegible] will find others more acceptable [illegible] even among the meanest—and [illegible] that honor at the heart is rarer [illegible] in the head will more easily [illegible] salvation, my lord."

[illegible] waved it off, his hand glittering [illegible] diamonds and his manner somewhat agitated.

"[illegible] consider this," says he; "my word [illegible] in this place. There is not a [illegible] among them all who will speak [illegible] affair until I give him [illegible]. And, mark you, I do not come [illegible]. Good God, Kitty—why [illegible] I be forbidden to love you? [illegible] you forbidden me to love [illegible] the first? Am I different [illegible] men? Is sentiment to be [illegible] me because I was born to [illegible]? Was there a day in your [illegible] at Sherbourn when I [illegible] my affection for you as [illegible] loves must do? Oh, no, [illegible] speak of Brighton—don't tell [illegible] a man may do when a woman [illegible] and love for her is hot in [illegible] I am no different from other [illegible] it is my misfortune to be [illegible]. By God, Kitty, if you [illegible] the right, it is not of a [illegible] speak in this house tonight but of my wife. Now think of that before you answer me. No man can pay a woman a greater compliment than to ask her to be his wife. Here and now I do so, and would be judged only by that.

He bent over her until his burning lips almost touched the roses upon her cheeks. And who shall presume to say that my lord was altogether dishonest? Perhaps he would have made her his wife had Kitty played her cards properly. The oldest roués, long accustomed to consent, may desire, not the possession of a woman, but a victory over her obstinacy.

Harborne was moved by Kitty's beauty and spirit as he had not been moved in all his disreputable life. One word of consent from her might have shattered the ideal and left him the mere schemer, willing to summon a parson from the Fleet, but not from any church with its doctrine of vows eternal. So much Kitty understood—her woman's instinct had taught it to her from the first. She knew that honor and my lord never would walk far hand in hand; and even had it been otherwise she would never have listened to him until the end of time, and for the best of reasons—she loved another.

"Oh, my dear lord," says she, "you choose a strange hour to speak of such things."

"Hours pass very quickly at Medmenham—and when they have passed they may never be recalled."

"Wooing those whom men love with a menace and bartering time for their honor."

"Give me the right and I will take you from this place now. It is very necessary that you should decide quickly. Your ears will tell you that."

"Yes, yes—if I must listen——"

"There is no alternative, my dear child."

. . . .

My lord referred to a brawl which even then engaged the attention of the company. The most part of the men, understanding that Kitty Dulcimore and Harborne had an affair of their own to decide, had been paying them scant attention—but now, all unexpectedly, the old fop Whitwould began to quarrel with the fellow Musgrove over some scarlet-cheeked Aphrodite in the corner; and immediately there arose such a babel that the King's dragoons themselves might have ridden in from Windsor.

"Peace, peace!" roared Tobias, his figure huge and prominent above the other brawlers. "What is this?"

"I brought the girl here," cries Musgrove, standing defiantly with his back to the wall.

"That's a lie," says Whitwould; "it was my introduction."

"Silence, I say!" roared the Chaplain,

He pushed in among them, while the men about him bawled, "The rule, the rule!" All the wenches in the place were a-tiptoe now. Men had risen from the play and thrown the cards aside. A ceaseless clatter of voices almost drowned the shuffle of strife; but presently Tobias's dominant thunder prevailed above the hubbub and he read the rule aloud.

"The rule is No. 15, page 2—a rule, be it known to you all, made by our brother Wilkes in the first week of the club's initiation. Here are our brother's words—'For the safeguarding of our honor, it shall be decreed that any brother who draws sword upon another in the name of woman shall by his own hand pay the forfeit of his life before twenty-four hours have passed.' "

Roars of laughter greeted this announcement, as it ever had done in the story of Medmenham Abbey and the Brotherhood. Wise John Wilkes foresaw that nothing but a drastic penalty, scrupulously exacted, could save such a place from the wildest orgies of bloodshed and quarrel—and so he drew this rule: which we have heard of before; for which a young lad died upon Harborne's threat; and on account of which King George had sworn to leave no stone of Medmenham standing upon another. None the less, the company heard the words with levity, and almost immediately the old fop Whitwould retired and left his rival in possession.

"Take her, my brother," says he, indicating the wench who had brought them to blows—"I intend to live."

. . . .

This, then, was the scene which distracted Kitty at the moment of my lord's avowal; this the interlude which brought resolution back to her.

It may be that she herself hardly knew what she did at such a moment. The vileness of all that she heard and saw—the glitter of the gauds, the silk, the ruffles, the velvet, the clanking of glasses, the shouts of the players, but more than all these of familiar looks, the open contempt expressed for her by the sluts in whose company she had fallen. Oh, be sure, that this was such an ordeal as woman has but rarely faced and never might face with resolution. Nor may we express surprise when we hear that, driven to the last point, she turned boldly from my lord and would have fled from the room but for a barrier of the very women themselves, a net cast suddenly around her, and upon that such horrid laughter, such an outcry of mockery that she reeled back almost fainting and moved even such a well-schooled rake as Harborne to some compassion.

"I will take you home," he said quickly. "You shall be put to no conditions, Kitty, if you will hold me guiltless of this"——

"My lord," says she, pressing white hands to her pretty forehead, "as heaven is my witness I would hold you guilty to my life's end."

He cowered and drew back from her. Every one in the room read the words as a menace and many there began to murmur. Tobias himself, forseeing graver perils, mounted to his rostrum and rang the bell three times, bringing three white-robed cooks to the room and cleverly diverting attention from the incident. As for the chefs, they played a part with the others, bowing before the rostrum and announcing the good news.

"My lords and gentlemen," says the first——

"It is our great gracious privilege," added the second——

"To announce to your worship"——

And then the trio together in a terrible tone:—

"That supper is served."

They withdrew still bowing. The company received the announcement with great applause. Tables of play were broken up, the procession of the Bacchantes was formed again, trumpets were blown, the cymbals beaten, and then, for a finer effect, the great crimson curtain above the central arch was thrown back and a space cleared before it.

"Gentlemen," roars the chaplain——

But he said no more. There, standing in the very aperture of the arch, his hand upon his sword, was Sir Richard Escombe, and, seeing him, every man in that company knew that the crisis in the story of the Hell Fire Club had come and that many must answer before the new day was old.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

There had been but one loud cry at his coming, and that from a woman's throat.

Mad with shame and anger, believing herself to be utterly ruined by a villain's ruse, it is not very difficult to understand what Kitty Dulcimore felt when she beheld her lover come as an avenger to that dreadful place. And what hand would dare to keep her from him now? Oh, be sure she was sobbing at his feet before a man might have counted two, caught in his strong arm, comforted by his whispered word. And holding her thus, her hands clasped in his, such a look upon his face as even his enemies had rarely seen there, he called for other help.

"If there be any friend of mine in this company," he said, speaking for the first time, "I will thank him to take Miss Dulcimore to her coach."

Repton stepped forth. Repton the novice, but just made of the elect, and no witness of the infamies. He had been abroad in the gardens by the river when they brought Kitty to the Abbey, and had not returned to the refectory until men spoke of supper.

"I will take her, Sir Richard," says he, and the murmur of astonishment and rage did not daunt that phlegmatic individual at all.

Escombe pressed his hand, and whispering again to Kitty he bade her go with the Marquis.

"For both our sakes," said he, "'tis in this house I must remain."

"Dick—Dick—but you will be alone."

"Amongst cowards. Go, for God's sake—you would make it difficult for me. And, Kitty, show them your courage. Let it be the old Kitty"——

He could say no more, for the murmur of words threatened already to break into a storm which might overwhelm them both. And Kitty, though her heart was breaking, understood that Dick must answer for her, that he must be her avenger though his life paid forfeit. How could it be otherwise? No voice of angels could command Richard Escombe in such a mood as that.

He had taken the burden up and would never lay it down until that which men call honor had answered in his name. So much Kitty's cleverness perceived, when with one last appealing glance at the marble of his face, one whispered word of love, she turned to the Marquis and permitted him to lead her from the room. As a child she had come in, as a queen she went out from among them. And the man who had picked up the glove remained to do battle for it—one alone in a house of infamy prepared to pay the price to the uttermost farthing.

The scene was grim enough, as some who have taken part in it do not hide from us.

A great circle of men, hussies, masqueraders, mock monks, sharpers, roués, villains—these all grouped about one man who had come there to accuse them.

To the right of the room our friend Harborne, standing uneasily, his eyes searching Escombe's face, a sword, got during the interval, already in his hand. He knew well what the issue must be. Rule made by John Wilkes or rule not so made, the sword alone could arbitrate tonight. And yet my lord continued to ask himself if the rules of Medmenham might not shield him after all. A shadow of death seemed to hover about him; he knew, for man is rarely ignorant in such hours, that this was the momentous hour. He had no faith of the morrow, boast of it as he might.

Of the others Tobias, the chaplain, was the most excited and showed himself the least self-possessd in that stirring crisis. Here, there, and back again, raising his monstrous hands, crying, "Gentlemen, gentlemen!" Tobias was thinking little of that assembled company, but much of what the King would say if this night's work came to his ears.

Good God! What a thing to be told abroad! And did not he, Tobias, clerk in holy orders, did not he rely upon the Abbey not only for board and lodging, but for such paltry washing as he did? No wonder that he bustled about, no surprise to us that he cried, "Gentlemen" until the very walls seemed to echo the words ironically. And his final achievement remained stupendous, for what must he do but go up to Sir Richard, and, bowing low, commit a gaucherie for which none ever forgave him.

"Sir Richard Escombe," says he, "you are welcome to Medmenham."

Dick waved him aside with a gesture of contempt, and saying, "D——bly welcome, it appears." He began to inspect the faces narrowly, looking into each as though it must be impressed upon a memory that would be tenacious beyond all belief."

"Most d——bly welcome, it appears."

"Brother, you have been five years as a sheep that is lost to the fold. We loaded you with gifts and you departed from us. Many come and go in five years, brother. Be sure if we hesitate to rejoice it is that we may know the reasons which kept you from our midst."

So Tobias babbled on. Supper, the ritual, the dance, the play—all these had given place to the excitement of the scene. Every man knew that Richard Escombe would meet Harborne face to face before many seconds passed. This prelude, this delay, but whetted their appetites. They listened to Sir Richard as to one who spoke the prologue of a tragedy.

"Curious as ever, reverence. And my old friends all about me as of yore."

And then looking again searchingly into the nearest faces, he went on:

"Is not that Churchill, flying with the same old hawks, ay, as quick on the wings as ever, I'll be bound—and my fat friend Cunninghame; he's been after the bottle ever since I can remember, and, by my soul, the bottle's before him still.

Sir Richard Escombe," cried Cunninghame in a voice that might have been thunder heard afar:—

"Mr. Cunninghame."

"You—you—jest. Sir Richard."

The craven in the man withdrew and his invective took a crutch and limped away. Ailsa was the next to be charged, but he heard it with a poor wan smile as who should say "I'm not the man for you."

MINES AND MINING--Past Week's News From the Surrounding Ore District

IN THE EARTH.

RARE MINERALS, METALLURGY AND CHEMISTRY.

To Correspondents:

This department is not conducted for pay. Its object is to convey reliable information of interest and value to the public, and it is not for the private benefit of any miner, collector, speculator or prospector. Correspondents are particularly cautioned to take careful note of the statements and injunctions contained in the paragraphs below.

(1.) Specimens must be small and bear a tag giving name and address of sender, and the general—not exact—locality from whence the specimen was taken, also the name of it as nearly as the sender knows. Send, also, with the specimen a clearly-written letter briefly describing the find and what the finder wishes done with it. The letter must be properly dated and plainly signed.

Letter and specimen must be in one package, not in separate enclosures.

(2.) No attention will be paid to anonymous letters or to letters signed merely with initials.

(3.) No examination of samples or specimens will be made in cases where The Times may decide that the specimen and inquiry are not of public interest. This office does not undertake to perform the work of an assay office.

(4.) Inquiries relative to matters of purely personal interests will not be answered.

(5.) When no response to an inquiry made or specimens sent appears in these columns, the inquirer will understand that his inquiry does not come within the purview of this department.

(6.) It is impossible to return specimens, as they must necessarily be destroyed or impaired in the process of analysis.

Address invariably. The Times.

Tungstic Acid Absent.

LOS ANGELES, March 24.—[To the Editor of The Times:] No. 1 says this sample contains tungsten values. No. 2 says it is a fraud. The rock is from eastern Yuma county, Ariz.

Thanking you. F. F. S.

ANSWER: The sample is composed of manganese oxide and micaceous iron. Tungstic acid is not present in the specimen.

Cement Material.

MOUNTAIN'S MOUNT, March 15.—[To the Editor of the Times:] Will you please give me the proper names of these samples, the deposit is four miles south of Corona. Give me their uses, if valuable, and oblige, G. W. L.

ANSWER: One of your samples is in the shape of very crude tiling, marked "mixed with water and calcined;" naturally this specimen calls for no reply.

Your other two pulverized samples (treated chemically by you) are a form of cement material which would be of value in the cement industry.

Low Copper and Silver Values.

SAN BERNARDINO, March 12.—[To the Editor of The Times:] The inclosed samples contain copper, and possibly some silver values, and are ten miles distant (south) from Cracker Jack, Cal.

Yours truly, J. T. T.

Iron Peroxide.

PARKER (Ariz.) March 13.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I hand you in this package some oxydized iron ore, and am told it runs high in gold values. The lead is within six miles of Parker. I do not ask you for an assay. Please tell me what you think of it.

Yours truly, D. A. T.

ANSWER: An exception is made for your benefit. The samples carry over three ounces of gold per ton ore.

Lean Ores.

ESCONDIDO, March 15.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I forward you under separate cover three numbered specimens from our claim near Escondido. They are taken from face of tunnel twelve feet from surface, have three feet of ledge matter. Please identify samples and say in your "In the Earth" whether we have anything worth developing. Accept our thanks now.

Yours truly, N. AND T.

ANSWER: You state that your ledge is three feet. Your samples if gathered from face of tunnel show up as follows: No. 1 is yellowish-white impure talc. No. 2 is porphyritic (iron oxides) resembling sample 3.

Judging from the samples submitted it would appear (as a very cold fact,) that your claim is of exceedingly doubtful value.

Banded Jasper.

LOS ANGELES, March 16.—[To the Editor of The Times:] These samples I brought from desert side of Sierra Madres, between Little Rock and Big Rock Creeks.

No. 1 I call jasper; the others I wish defined.

Sincerely. H. L. T.

ANSWER: No. 1 is banded jasper. No. 2 siliceous, hornblendic calcite. No. 3 (lost in transit.) No. 5 volcanic shale.

Ilmenite.

FENNER, March 15.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Kindly state in your "In the Earth" columns the name of the inclosed specimen and also if it has any commercial value. I think it is an ore of tungsten. Thanking you in advance, I am

Yours truly, C. A. R.

ANSWER: The sample is a very deceptive one at sight. It resembles hubernite (manganese tungstate,) but a careful test made on the mineral proves that it is a variety of ilmenite, (tetanic iron ore.)

Fair Copper Prospect.

AFTON, March 15.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I send a small box of copper from the surface in San Bernardino county. Please tell me if it is a formation for copper. The vein is eight feet wide and the samples are taken along the face.

Yours truly, J. L. M.

ANSWER: For copper and silver values it would be well to prospect the lead further. Some of the ore is leached badly. The samples were not tested for gold.

Aluminum Silicate.

LORDSBURG, March 11.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Inclosed please find a specimen from a ledge in the foothills of La Verne. Please tell me in your valued columns what it is and its value, if any,

Obliging F. C. E.

Refractory Ores.

HALLECK, Mar. 13.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Please tell us the name of the two accompanying samples of ore. No. 1 has been called lead, galena, tungsten, and molybdenite. It is from near Oro Grande. No. 2 is from Mineral King, Tulare county. Is it plain sulphate of iron? Thanking you in advance, I am yours truly, E. W. D.

Answer. Both samples are smelting and partly concentrating ores. No. 2 is white iron contaminated with arsenic.

Greenwater Oxides of Iron.

LOS ANGELES, Mar. 16.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Inclosed please find sample of ore from a location near Greenwater. If it was Colorado ore it would carry gold and copper. Please give me a pointer on this ore and give me your opinion as to its value. I am always pleased to read your "In the Earth" and judge you to be like myself—a Colorado miner. Yours truly, H. W.

Answer. Glad to hear from you. For five years the writer lived partly in the earth, in many of Colorado's biggest mines.

Your sample is "shy" on copper values. It was not tested for gold and silver, but lead is present to a small per cent.

Tetrahedrite and Iron Oxide.

LOS ANGELES, Mar. 17.—[To the Editor of The Times:] If you will tell me at your earliest convenience what the sample is that I have mailed you today, I will consider it a great favor. Yours truly, S.

Answer. The sample resembles a telluride at sight. By very careful testing we find it to be a siliceous mixture of iron oxides with very low per cent. tetrahedrite (gray copper ore.) The specimen was not tested for gold or silver.

No Tungstic Acid.

VISTA, March 12.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Under separate cover, I send by mail four samples. Nos. 1 and 2 are from a large vein. I was told the vein carried tungsten values.

No. 3 is from a lead, and 4 is out of a wash. All come from the hills, twelve miles north of Escondido. If there are any values, please state what.

Yours truly, E. T.

ANSWER: Sample 1 is porphyritic rock. No. 2 hornblendic quartz. No. 3 impure aluminum silicate. No. 4 quartz. Not tested for precious metal values. The specimens are very poor metallurgical samples.

Magnetic Iron Ore.

SAN DIEGO, March 18.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I am mailing you with this letter a peculiar rock. Some of my friends assert that it is wolframite. It is from San Diego county. Please note that it breaks off with a sort of crystallized appearance.

Yours truly, W. B. F.

ANSWER: The ore is lifted in small chunks, with a magnet. Part of the specimen is in a state of polarity, so to speak, and, in turn—this portion of the mineral—lifts needles.

Horse Flesh Ore.

WICKENBURG (Ariz.) March 15.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I am a prospector. On one of my claims, twelve miles from the Santa Fé Railroad, I have a good lead of copper ore. At the breast of my incline 22 feet in I have a four-inch stringer of the sample I am sending you.

Will you please inform me through your "In the Earth" if this is a copper ore, or iron ore? How can a prospector tell the difference? Yours truly, H. C. F.

ANSWER: The sample "goes" over 50 per cent. copper. It is red copper ore. Try the following prospector's test: Provide yourself with a small vial of nitric acid with glass stopper, and, say, twenty eight-penny, bright, clean, wire nails. Powder a little of the suspected ore and place it in a saucer. Pour a little of the nitric acid over the powdered ore and let it rest for half an hour. Now place the head of a wire nail into the solution; if copper is present the nail will be quickly plated with the metal.

Fluor Spar.

NEEDLES, March 13.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I send you a specimen of what I call green gypsum, from a claim near the Colorado River. Please advise me if I have named the rock correctly.

Yours truly, W. H.

Rock Meal.

CORONA, March 19.—[To the Editor of The Times:] This sand sample I send you from a prospect near Riverside. Will you state in your paper what the material is? Is it glass sand?

Yours respectfully, P. B. D.

ANSWER: The material is not glass sand. It is a variety of calcite (lime carbonate.)

Hematite.

SILVER LAKE, March 10.—[To the Editor of The Times:] In this tobacco sack please find some ore which I believe to be lead ore, or, perhaps, silver ore. It might be graphite. Please set me right, and oblige, T. McG.

ANSWER: The specimen is a beautiful variety of hematite (iron peroxide) and is micaceous iron ore. It is pure enough for wall paper uses and will be useful where spangle-like effects are desired. It is also a good iron ore.

Horn Silver.

LOS ANGELES, March 19.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I leave you two samples of ore, one dark and the other a kind of whitish in color and heavy. They are from San Bernardino county. I will thank you to state in your "In the Earth" just what they are, Yours truly, C. A.

ANSWER.—The gray brown specimen is chloritic, carrying iron oxides, traces of lead, and silver, the last named as horn-silver. The gray white sample is (mineralogically) cerussite (carbonate of lead) with interspersed specks of horn-silver.

A Doubtful Prospect.

HIGHLAND, March 18.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Specimens of ore from East Riverside county, from a limestone strata fifty feet thick, running through granite. Near the middle of the limestone are a number of holes about twelve inches in diameter, with dip to south—same as limestone. Around and between the holes is the ore. No. 1 is nearest the opening. I think this is iron garnets. We call No. 2 galena, and it assays eleven ounces silver and 25 per cent. lead. No. 3 is some of the material with which some of the holes are filled. Would it, in your opinion, pay to sink a shaft on that kind of a showing? Please name No. 4. It may be magnesite.

I wish to thank you for some very valuable information I have derived from your department of The Times.

Yours truly, J. K.

ANSWER. It is understood that your assay of lead and silver is per ton ore.

Sample No. 1 is garnetiferous iron ore, with second sample spathic iron ore. No. 2 is galenite, with micaceous iron carrying 7 per cent. lead and, approximately, two ounces of silver per ton ore. No. 3, impure limonite, and No. 4 is dolomitic limestone.

Low-Grade Gold Quartz.

SAN DIEGO, March 7.—[To the Editor of The Times:] The sample is from northern San Diego county. To settle a "mix-up," please state what it is.

Yours truly, D. T.

Siderite.

LOS ANGELES, March 17.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Herewith please find a sample of ore from the New York Mountains. Is it an ore of tungsten? Will you please give me a test in your "In the Earth" showing how iron can be detected with the blow-pipe. Thanking you in advance for any information, Yours truly, W. E. B.

ANSWER.—The sample you submit is iron carbonate with not a trace of tungstic acid present. Many ores of iron are received by The Times as "tungsten ores." Siderite dissolves quickly, and with effervescence in hot hydrochloric acid; it is also known as spathic iron and is "characterized by rhombohedral form and cleavage."

Minerals containing iron—even, in small amount—"yield a magnetic mass" when heated in the reducing flame of the blow-pipe.

SILVER LAKE RICHES HUB.

SPOKES POINT TO WEALTH IN EVERY DIRECTION.

Greatest Deposits of Salt and Soda in the World—Silver in Shadow and Silurian Ranges—Colorado Company May Work Iron Fields. Most Unique Fields in Country.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SILVER LAKE, April 8.—Very much on the map is the new but growing town of Silver Lake, in San Bernardino county, on the Tonopah and Tidewater Railroad. On the sloping edge of a lake bed, where the waters of the Mojave River sometimes form a gigantic mirror when the melting Sierra Madre snows push the floods over the usual sink and on toward the thirsty sands of Death Valley, lies this newest candidate for the commercial supremacy of the desert. No boom has struck it, for which its friends are glad, but a steady growth has marked its progress from the hour of its christening, and each succeeding day adds to the realization that here must be a great trade center. Of course there is a reason for this. Towns do not grow on the desert without a compelling force, and this force is not far to seek. The universal opinion is that Silver Lake is the natural center or hub of an extensive mineral country. The spokes of this giant wheel, radiating for twenty miles in every direction, mark out and point to such varied deposits of natural wealth as to be almost unrealizable to the newcomer until close observation and daily familiarity with conditions compel belief. In the limits of a newspaper column it is impossible to even enumerate, with any degree of particularity or identifying description, the varied resources and individual properties of splendid promise. Only a few can be mentioned at this time.

BIGGEST IN WORLD.

Twenty miles to the south is the center of the vast deposits of soda and salt, lavishly spread by nature over thousands of level acres, where the Pacific Salt and Soda Company and the Pacific Coast Soda Company have erected costly plants to gather and refine these two articles of wide consumption. Swinging eastward and northerly past great buttes where Salt Lake and Nevada experts have located promising copper showings, one comes to Seventeen-Mile Point, a landmark on the old government trail from the Coast via Old Camp Cady to the East. Here a half dozen quiet men, who know well the Rockies, the Sierra Nevadas, the Cascades and the rigors of Alaskan snow slopes, have settled down to develop attractive free-milling gold properties, which have anchored them as no other regions have. Northward the circling felloe of the great wheel carries the observer to the Huyten Mountains, where the glitter of yellow metal still shows plainly in many outcroppings and in moderate depth workings.

SILVER TO NORTH.

A few miles northward the predominating deposits change somewhat in character as the Shadow and Silurian ranges (the latter better known to old timers as the Riggs Mountains) are entered. Here almost fabulous values through the silver gamut—native, horn, ruby, wire, argentite, etc.—have been found, with ores so rich as almost to defy the drill and the blasted slabs hanging and swinging like unlatched doors. Associated with these are high percentage lead veins, as is generally the case. A few of the prominent properties lying in this rich region are those belonging to the Cambria Mining Company, Frank Riggs (to whom must be given the credit for the first discoveries,) J. M. Best, G. E. Rowland, Thomas Cunningham, A. Stevenson, J. G. Williams and the Cora K. Mining Company.

IN THE AVAWATZ.

While the western end of the Silurian range drops away near the sight of the last named company's workings and a dim valley succeeds, which is the lower gateway to Death Valley, this phenomenal silver-lead belt is apparently not cut off, as it outcrops again in the Avawatz range to the westward. Here the Avawatz Crown Mining Company has quietly pushed development to a depth of 300 feet, with lateral work of equal extent in galena which can be cut with a knife like talc. No stock in this company is to be had, so little news of the extent and value of the development has been obtained from the reticent but competent management without reportorial probing and inquisition.

IRON THERE, TOO.

Leaving for a time other properties of great promise in the Avawatz, and circling west and south with the rim of the wheel, a black blanket, several hundred acres in extent, comes into view. It is, in many ways, the most unique iron deposit in the country. While not so extensive in area as some others, its richness is unsurpassed, averaging fully 54 per cent. in iron and carrying very little phosphorous. It is a great mass of hematite and magnetite, estimated to contain at least 10,000,000 tons of ore, and so easily worked as to seem to be a steam-shovel proposition. Merely supposing the removal of 500 tons per day, with 300 working days in a year, nearly seventy years would be consumed in disposing of this mass of the world's most useful metal. Old Vulcan himself could find no better site for a forge. The Colorado Fuel and Iron Company acquired for $45,000, five years ago, seven patented claims of this deposit and has held them against the time when its demands would justify working. That time seems to have nearly arrived, as its engineers within the past thirty days have reconnoitered a proposed route for a railway from the property to a point on the Tonopah and Tidewater near Silver Lake, and it is within the probabilities that much activity will be seen here within a year.

CRACKERJACK BONANZA.

In a region of such richness it is only natural some pioneers are necessary to prove the value of the country by the expenditure of time and money, in making a mine out of a prospect and in giving impetus to the industry. These are found in the personnel of the Crackerjack Bonanza Gold Mining Company, whose faith has been justified by results. The estate lies some six miles west and south of the big iron deposit, and about twelve miles west of Silver Lake, in a spur of the noble Five Points range. Outcropping almost continuously for several miles, a noble ledge, many feet wide, traverses the claims of this company, in which are a number of veins of greater enrichment. At a promising point a solidly-timbered shaft has been sunk to a depth of 160 feet, with laterals and other workings of greater extent. Shipping ore has been taken out in much more than mere mill-run tests, the returns being well over $50, while the amount to be seen that will average half that value much more than justifies the contract for a mill on the ground, which has been signed. So far as human judgment can size up the unseeable, justified by what is plainly in sight and thoroughly tested, free milling gold ore in enormous quantity and dividend-paying quality is there for the working. This great property is situated in California, which does not make it intrinsically richer or poorer, but were it located in some parts of Nevada, "where the enterprising boomer loves to boom," its owners could accept tomorrow a large sum for it without doing any injustice to the purchasers. Very much depends on the way. The Nevada "way" very often means more money to the promoter and lower dividends to the stock owner. The Crackerjack Bonanza property is well equipped for doing business. A fine gasoline steel cable hoist is in operation; blacksmith shop, bunkhouse, mess hall and kitchen, superintendent's house and office are all there, while excellent water in sufficient quantity for domestic and mill uses has been developed a mile from the main works.

FIVE POINTS GALENA.

To complete the circle of the great wheel, one more swing carries the observer southeasterly through the Five Points range, where the Amos brothers have a well-developed galena property, as well as good gold prospects, on through the Soda Lake range, where the pioneer of this region, Frank Riggs, who now makes his home in the Silurian range, owns the Victor group of claims, on which he has spent much time and money in blocking out a splendid body of fluxing ores against the time when a smelter shall need and make them valuable.

The circle of the revolving wheel is thus complete, but justice is less than half done, because many excellent properties have received no mention and are yet as worthy of record, doubtless, as those here enumerated.

Returning to the hub of the wheel, simply to add a touch of variety to the schedule of riches, Silver Lake has at her western threshold, almost within a stone throw of the railroad, a fine body of white and variegated marble, which one of her enterprising citizens is preparing to work. Besides adorning many far-away buildings, this fine stone will, ere many years have passed, embellish the walls of many structures which will arise in the busiest desert city.

MORNING.

PIOCHE NOW FULLY AWAKE.

IMPORTANT DEVELOPMENTS MARK END OF LONG SLEEP.

Las Vegas as a Smelting Site. Water Service of Pioche to Be Improved—Remarkable Drill Discoveries Reported from Nevada-Des-Moines.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

PIOCHE (Nev.) April 8.—On my return from Los Angeles, I stopped off one day at Las Vegas. The town is gradually growing. Every building on the main street for considerable distance from the depot is constructed of cement. They are of neat design, well built and substantial, and testify to the faith of the citizens in what is inevitably to be the metropolis of Southwestern Nevada.

The town lies in a huge basin of many thousand acres. The soil is extremely fertile and intensely productive under irrigation. I was told of some small fraction of an acre which yielded, last year, over $1600 from onions. As I walked up the main street. I passed an excavation just made for the cellar of a building. At the depth of ten feet I noticed standing water, and was assured by men whose reliability is beyond question that water can always be reached at about this depth all through the valley. Recently three artesian wells have been sunk, each of which, at a depth of about 400 feet from the surface, struck a most excellent quality of water, which now flows over the tops of the casings. Each well will irrigate a large acreage. I did not have the time to go into close details on this water question, but it was clear to me that the valley is bound to sustain a large agricultural population, and that the products will find the most profitable of all markets in the mining camps of the region.

AS SMELTER SITE.

As a location for a smelter, it is almost ideal. Some years ago Marvin Hughitt, the president of the Northwestern system, visited Deadwood and spent two days inspecting the Homestake and other mines of that rich section. Before he left they had a little banquet in honor of their guest. In the speech he made in response to some toast, he said: "The section 100 miles square, of which this town is practically the center, is in its mineral wealth the richest 100 miles square in the United States." This statement passed into a proverb, which is today the choicest possession of those worthy people in South Dakota. I venture the prediction that in twenty years from today each 100 miles square which corners at Las Vegas will be demonstrated to contain more mineral wealth than the 100 miles square which contain the world-famous Homestake and Golden Reward and Ragged Top and scores of other rich properties about Deadwood. It is indeed a marvelous region. Before the railroad came, it was a "terra incognita," but under the stimulus of transportation facilities the gates of this treasure house of nature are being rapidly unlocked. No more logical point for a smelter exists in the United States today, yet few of the people of Las Vegas have awakened to what it would mean. In fact, they are almost as obtuse on the subject as the people of Los Angeles have been about the importance of mining to that city.

PIOCHE IS BUSY.

The awakening of Pioche during the nine weeks since I left it is phenomenal. The absolutely new developments alone which have been made in this section during that period would of themselves be sufficient to insure a thriving camp. Only a brief reference to some of the doings and conditions here today can be made in this letter.

The Nevada Utah has increased its force at Jack Rabbit, and has lately encountered some new bodies of ore of much higher grade than the average in that great property. The Nevada Utah Mines and Smelters Corporation is extremely fortunate in having its mining operations conducted now by thoroughly competent mining men, who appear to have the confidence of the management and a freer hand than any of their predecessors. Their narrow-gauge railroad to Jack Rabbit has been much improved; they have just received a new engine, with a capacity more than double that of the tea kettle which has been their reliance hitherto, not to mention an anatomy unimpaired by the strains and vicissitudes of many years. At present they are shipping about 500 tons a week, but this output will soon be doubled.

The company is running a tunnel through the mountain to the Bristol side, which is designed to furnish an outlet for the rich copper and silver ores of the Bristol district.

BETTER WATER SERVICE.

In Pioche, arrangements are being perfected to rejuvenate the water system, which is owned jointly by the Nevada Utah and Ohio Kentucky. Not only the town of Pioche, but every enterprise for miles around, is dependent upon this water system. During the period of decay, this water system languished, in sympathy with everything else, from people down. Its restoration to effective utility is one of the most important features of the renaissance.

A gentleman who has just returned from New York, where he was in conference with the powers about the throne of Nevada-Utah, tells me that as soon as negotiations now pending are concluded, the old hill which made "Pioche in '72" the most famous mining legend of those days is again to be thrown wide open.

SUSAN DUSTER.

The Ohio Kentucky is steadily developing the Susan Duster and has been experiencing the usual extraordinary discoveries. A new Ohio Kentucky Mining company has recently been incorporated under Nevada laws to succeed the old company, which was incorporated under the Utah law. The new company has 600,000 shares of $5 par value each. Samuel Newhouse is president of the new company, as he was of the old; E. L. Godbe is vice-president, A. H. Godbe secretary and treasurer, and James L. Hackett and Edward Thomarson complete the board of directors. The company has 150,000 shares in the treasury, besides a goodly wad of ready money.

Several new strikes of controlling importance have been made in the Prince. Some of the new ore runs over a thousand ounces to the ton. This has hitherto always been regarded as essentially an enormous low-grade proposition, and these strikes of high-grade ore are calculated to make the management do a lot of thinking, and speculating upon the phenomena of second enrichment, etc. Ernest Godbe, who has been brough up in an atmosphere of mining almost ever since he was weaned, and who from a child was an important factor in the second (Godbe) period of Pioche, a man who means to be rational, told me today that the Prince would produce half a million tons of ore from every level, and every ton would yield a profit. He is the manager of this property, and it has been under the family eye ever since his late father came to this country on his first visit, exclusively to see it, nearly thirty years ago.

The Pioche Demi-John has recently come into the limelight, and the reports about it would sound incredible anywhere outside of Nevada.

DRILL DISCOVERIES.

Those who still believe that the days of miracles have not passed are much encouraged in that belief by what they say was disclosed by the diamond drill in the Nevada Des Moines. The management having sunk a shaft about 250 feet through the wash into the limestone, imported a diamond drill with which they made about 1100 feet of core. That this core should be in places impregnated with free gold and sylvanite, and such is a statement which seems to belong more properly to the domain of necromancy than fact, but people reputed to be sane, and who are without interest or prejudice, assurt that the statement is true. It isn't the habit of Pioche to go crazy. For nearly forty years this community has been accustomed to take what God sends and to ask no questions. We shall see what we shall see, and that before very long, for the company has ordered a forty-horse-power gasoline plant for hoisting and air compression, and some of them have ruptured their bank accounts in their strenuous exertions to gather in all the loose stock accessible.

The Lyndon Mines Company is to start up this week. E. F. Freudenthal, general manager, goes to Los Angeles tomorrow to purchase a gasoline hoist, and the first wagon which comes in with supplies will take out ore to the railroad.

CHURICH LOSES.

E. Greenwood prevailed in his controversy with March Church and secured from him the famous old Page and Panaca property. After the bond had been given Church took a tumble to himself, and too late tried desperately to break the bond, but the jury did him up, and his interest in the property is no more. Greenwood has started work again and is working three shifts, retimbering the old shaft, already finished to a depth of 450 feet. Greenwood says that the old days of Page and Panaca are about to come again, and is now incorporating a company to be known as the Nevada Pioche Mines Company.

The Lincoln Nevada is to resume in a few weeks with E. Greenwood for general manager. This mine already has a fifteen-horse-power gasoline plant at the Daly East. A new forty-horse-power gasoline hoist and compressor is to be erected over one of their other shafts, and the operating facilities enormously increased.

The Nevada-Pioche, Pioche X-Ray, Boston and Pioche, Ely Valley and at least a score of other properties are either now working or soon to be started.

For a camp in the doldrums three months ago, Pioche has "sure got a move on."

GREENE-CANANEA MAKES CHANGES

PLANT HAS BEEN WELL OVERHAULED AND IMPROVED.

Other Smelters Busy With Enlargements and Betterments—Hachita District Placers Show Permanence. Miami Copper Company Buys at Globe—A Cheap Bonanza.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

PHOENIX (Ariz.) April 3.—According to the report of General Manager L. D. Ricketts of the Greene-Cananea Copper Company, the works of that corporation are about twice as efficient as they were a year or so ago. The eight old furnaces of the smelter have been thrown into the scrap heap, seven new furnaces have been installed and an eighth will be ready in a few days. Two new converter stands have been erected and three more will be put in. Seven small settlers have been thrown away and replaced by four very large settlers. The slag track system has been changed and in all, the improvements are expected to result in half as many men serving to smelt twice as much ore as was handled before. The blower capacity has been increased by 30,000 cubic feet a minute and by a mere change in the piping 160-horse-power heretofore lost in friction has been saved. The results of the operation of the reverberatory furnace have not been fully satisfactory, owing to poor fuel. New shops have been built and much new railroad work done. The average cost of mining is declared to have been cut down 25 per cent. since 1906 and cent. Since 1905 and Dr. Ric pects to reduce this 25 per cent. He is especially studying the ing of profitable fluxes.

QUEEN ENLARGES.

The work of improvement is progressing at the smelters at D las. At the Queen smelter an tion of 125 feet is being made to west end of the smelter build accommodate two additional furnaces, an addition which raise the smelting capacity of plant to 6000 tons a day. The C & Arizona, which has five 20-ton naces, is rebuilding them to have pacity for 500 tons each and will two more 500-ton jackets. These provements alone will raise the capacity at Douglas to 9000 day, to which will be added the Superior smelter.

At the Belen mine, south of zari, thirty tons of $25 copper being daily reduced to matte and eral carloads of high-grade ore being shipped each week.

The new Nacozari converter is ing completion and one unit to be ready for operation couple of weeks. This new have capacity for nearly 200 ore a day. The concentrates to the Copper Queen smelter at las.

Late reports from the Hachita field indicate that a permanent district has been added to the west. Farming by Irrigation.

EXAMPLES OF WHAT MAY BE EXPECTED FROM CULTIVATION OF THE IMMENSELY RICH IMPERIAL ACRES.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

IRRIGATION versus natural rainfall means simply, put water when and where you need it, as opposed to water when rain pleases to fall, in quantities too small or too great. Without resorting to theory, proof may be given that large areas may be farmed profitably, provided the management be intelligent and up to date, even without irrigation.

One of the most interesting and successful farmers of large acreage is Col. James M. Smith of Oglethorpe county, Georgia. A detailed account of this gentleman's successful operations is given in one of the current magazines. Col. Smith has made a fortune from the soil, beginning after the War of Secession, with but sixty-five unprofitable acres, he now makes [illegible] a year from 23,000 acres. He began to grow corn and cotton directly after the war. The result of his first year's work was a loss of [illegible]; now his net earnings are more than [illegible] per year. His first year's planting of sixty-five acres resulted in a yield of two bales of cotton and [illegible] bushels of corn. Though cotton [illegible] cents a pound and corn $2 a bushel, his miserable crop of 1866, from depleted soil and drouth, was a decided failure. Many farmers in the county did not try to harvest. Drouth did even more damage than depleted soil. It was one of the most hopeless and utterly discouraging situations to be thought of. Crops crying for water and no rain.

Nature can only afford to be generous and yield a bountiful harvest, when with proper culture, heat and moisture come at the critical time. Col. Smith was a good general. Losses the first year did not discourage him; he determined to wrest prosperity from [illegible]. His crop from 23,000 acres [illegible] year:

[illegible] bales of cotton (1,500,000 lbs.)
[illegible] bushels of corn.
[illegible] bushels of wheat.
[illegible] bushels of oats.
[illegible] bushels of cowpeas.
[illegible] bushels of sweet potatoes.
[illegible] bushels of turnips.
[illegible] tons of hay.

One bale of cotton to every two [illegible] was an average crop. In Upper Egypt irrigated lands watered with the rich waters of the Nile, are said [illegible] Frank Carpenter, in The Times, to yield four bales to one acre.

Col. Smith has a fertilizing plant, making 200 tons of fertilizer per [illegible] all of which he uses on the [illegible]. His blacksmith shop, equipped at a cost of $5000 and run by steam, is kept busy all the time. He has 500 hogs on the plantation; also an electric lighting plant, a wood-working shop, a corn mill, a cotton seed mill, a [illegible] mill, in fact, everything necessary to operate so large an establishment.

Col. Smith keeps a careful account of the expense of caring for the crops from the time of planting until the harvest. On his farm he grew upon 200 [illegible]:

[illegible] wheat at $1......	$ 4,800
[illegible] cotton at $50......	10,000
	$14,800

After deducting all the expenses, his net profit was a little more than $51 per acre.

It is not my purpose to quote in detail the interesting experiences of this southern farmer, but rather to show that if by good farming, in a State where the soil is none too good, the rainfall an uncertain quantity, the climate not a summer resort, Col. Smith could make a fortune annually from 23,000 acres—what is the possible limit of profit on an Imperial irrigated farm where the soil is richer than any other known soil on earth, where the greatest irrigation system of the Pacific Coast supplies water in proper quantities at the proper time, where the sun ever shines and blighting frosts never come?

I will give a few more illustrations [illegible] farming of large acreage [illegible] nothing is more stimulating than true stories of success in any [illegible] line.

David Rankin of Tarkio, Mo., was in [illegible] the largest corn-grower and cattle feeder in the world. He operated [illegible] ranches, with a total of 25,000 acres. The following is a summary of his farming operations for the year [illegible]:

[illegible] of cattle fed........	6,060
[illegible] proceeds..................	$149,562.64
[illegible] proceeds per head........	$24.67
[illegible] of hogs fed	7,190
[illegible] proceeds	$111,439.02

Expense per acre, in the way of labor, materials, etc., not including interest on the value of the land, horses and tools, was $5.10. Corn bought, [illegible] bushels, in addition to what [illegible] raised on his fourteen ranches. Mr. Rankin employed in the neighborhood of 200 men, at the rate of $25 [illegible] board the year around, or $35 and [illegible] during the farming season. In the height of the season he has 150 [illegible] corn cultivators at work.

From the illustration on the C.-M. [illegible] C. Co. ranch near Calexico, I [illegible] that corn planted at the proper [illegible] will yield prodigiously of ma[illegible]. Gathered and fed as they [illegible] the corn belt of the Middle West, [illegible] hogs running after the cattle, it will bring equal if not greater results than in Missouri.

The Times of January 25, says that [illegible] the population of Los Angeles [illegible] required each day 500 beeves [illegible] sheep. Where, I ask, can [illegible] cattle, hogs and sheep be [illegible] in large numbers within reasonable shipping distance from Los Angeles so successfully and economically as in the Imperial Valley region?

The example set by the C.-M. Co. [illegible] the improvement of all stock [illegible] in Imperial Valley, and it would [illegible] be surprising to have the valley [illegible] become the breeding ground [illegible] the market place for the highest [illegible] stock on the Pacific Coast.

Fruit of many kinds will doubtless [illegible] grown with profit, but there is a [illegible] always connected with growing and marketing grapes and melons, [illegible] the fruit product of Imperial Valley will undoubtedly be immense, stock raising bids fair to be the [illegible] business.

[illegible] the United States boundary [illegible] cotton should become one of the [illegible] crops. The climate, the soil [illegible] prevailing conditions invite the in[illegible] cotton grower. Cheap labor [illegible] the most important item, [illegible] is assured in Mexico, where [illegible] no restrictions as to immigration. Cotton is grown upon but [illegible] the area of the United States, yet it stands second in value [illegible] agricultural crops. The [illegible] grown on earth is the [illegible] used only for high-priced [illegible]. Think of a crop valued at [illegible] which was the value of the [illegible] States cotton crop of 1903 and [illegible] this crop was produced chiefly [illegible] impoverished lands, yielding [illegible] one-half bale to the acre, on [illegible].

[illegible] because of the fertility of the [illegible] flooded annually with the silt [illegible] by the waters of the Nile, [illegible] of irrigation of the crop [illegible] moment, produces [illegible] to Frank Carpenter) along the Upper Nile, where the land is yet virgin, four bales to the acre—2000 pounds of the most important fiber the world knows anything about.

Grown under conditions far more trying than elsewhere in the world, with serious transportation problems and high freight rates, the lands are held at $200, gold, per acre.

Japan needs just such cotton as can be grown in the Colorado delta, and will need more and more as her textile factories are developed. The Orient never will produce the cotton they require. Five hundred millions of people, wearing chiefly cotton garments, will sooner or later be principally supplied by Japan. The superior excellence of the cotton fiber that will be produced in the Colorado delta will assure its market in competition with the cotton from the Southern States, even after the Panama Canal has been opened to commerce. With the completion of the railroad now being built from San Diego to Yuma, tide water will be within economical distance.

Will it pay?

In the Southern States, with shiftless negro help, refractory soil, no irrigation, it pays. Take one instance. In 1903 a planter in Alabama owning 450 acres, had 334 acres devoted to cotton, producing an average of 215 pounds to the acre (less than a half-bale.) The average price for the crop was 12 cents per pound; the 143 and fraction bales sold for $8617.20. He had 62½ tons of cotton seed, which sold for $859.

His net cash profit was $2500, very nearly $7.50 per acre. Suppose his crop had been four bales per acre instead of half a bale. The same fertilizer, the same quantity of seed, the same harrowing and general care, would have produced eight times the crop, making due allowance for increased cost of picking the larger crop, the net profit would have been $50 per acre, or $16,700. I would like to see 50,000 acres of Egyptian cotton growing on the virgin lands on the north side of Volcano Lake.

Let me estimate the result, always presuming good culture: Forty thousand acres, three bales per acre, 120,000 bales. Profits per bale, based upon the prices and experience of the southern planter, $17.25; 120,000 bales, giving a profit of $1,070,000. Upon 40,000 acres, 60,000,000 pounds of cotton would be produced, with 80,000,000 pounds of cotton seed. About 6000 acres of alfalfa and grain would be used to supply animals and laborers with sustenance. A city of at least 15,000 people would spring up on the boundary line, presumably Calexico. To me this appeals as the most attractive large farming proposition in the West, and that, of course, means in the United States.

who talks on the subject of holding a job.

GETTING A JOB, HOLDING IT.

PERSONALITY COUNTS WITH THE FUTURE EMPLOYER.

Only Those Men Hold Positions Who Make Good, and Show a Disposition to Work for Their Employer's Interest—Personal Habits Are Also a Factor.

BY JAMES J. HILL.

It is one thing to get a position; it is another thing to keep it. Getting a position requires tact, forcefulness and perspecuity; keeping a position is an art. Getting positions is accomplished by a large number of men and women, but the number of those who can keep positions is but small.

When one starts to look for a position he must possess the qualities of cleanliness, clearness and perspicuity. So much depends upon the first impression. Lax methods, unkempt hair, soiled fingers, a necktie awry and confused speech are some of the faults that destroy the chances of an applicant. When a man who is conducting a successful business advertises for a janitor or a private secretary, he goes to his office and finds several dozen applicants awaiting him. He hears them, one by one, and notices that this young man has failed to polish his shoes, that that young woman talks with a discordant slang, that so-and-so is carrying the end of a cigarette in his yellow, nicotined fingers, or that Miss This-and-That is over-adorned with cheap jewelry. He finds that one young man is utterly incapable of expressing himself clearly, and that another has a newspaper, with a chart of the horse races sticking from his pocket. Each applicant is denied a chance because his outward appearance arouses suspicion; and the merchant, sick, disheartened and disgusted with humanity, goes home, or to his club, to forget his unpleasant half-day. These statements may seem exaggerated, but they are the plain, unvarnished experiences that business men encounter every day. Frequently employers are obliged to engage slovenly, untidy men and women whom they dislike, because the advances of their business demand more workers and the right kind is not to be had; but you may be assured that, when business slackens, such employés are the first to go.

In all matters it is best to speak plainly. Clear, concise, transparent expressions are the ones that carry the most weight. Speech is a wonderful indicator of character. The art of speaking plainly and clearly is as necessary a part of one's education as are the rudiments of arithmetic, and, if I were a school teacher, I should institute regular lessons in conversation and expression. A man who can talk without making his listener wonder if he were reared in the domain of incomprehensibility is the man who will have the first chance. An employer wants a man who can explain himself, and whose conversation shows that its foundation is a clear, clean mind. We like a touch of vigor in one's speech, but we loathe a hint of egotism or a molecule of self-praise. We like the man who can say: "I will try," with the firm conviction that he will try, but we dislike the man who says: "Why, this is easy," and arrives at a conclusion of his worth before he knows what he is going to do.

The steady-growing business concerns, the great mercantile houses, and the commercial consolidations of the United States have discovered that the man who will conduct the affairs of the future are the men who have been trained for that purpose. The man who will have worked his way from the lowest rung will be the man who will ultimately determine the destiny of the business concern. Our vast business enterprises are becoming larger every year. No man can be trusted with the management of one who does not know every fractional part of the working of that concern with which he is connected, and who has not been a part of that working. Hence the importance of giving work to men and women who will keep the best interests of their employers at heart and blend them with their own.

SHOW WHAT YOU ARE.

If you seek employment as a stenographer, let your appearance tell that you are a stenographer; if you seek employment as a coal heaver, let your appearance show that you are a coal heaver. I do not mean that the stenographer shall be gay with cheap jewelry or redolent with the lingo of the typewriter, nor do I mean that the coal heaver shall be black, grimy and unwashed. But I do mean that you must aim straight at your point; that you must show, first of all, by clear expression, by ready answers, by a polite, gentle, yet vigorous, manner, that you are ready to fill the place to the best of your ability.

Our country is full of old men who are still looking for positions because they have failed to master this important factor of application. Be positive that you can do the work you seek. Never take a place simply to have something to do, for you will only waste your time, and, in a few years, you will be forced out of your position on the charge of incompetency. Be sure that you are willing to do what your employer wants you to do. When you approach a business man to apply for a position, do so in a manner that will make a pleasant impression on him; and, whether you apply for a position as an office boy or cashier, let him know that you are going to work for his interests. Show him clean hands and clear eyes, and that you are ambitious and can prove your character. Do not make promises which you know you may not be able to carry out. Argue the point of salary as little as possible, unless you are asked to accept a starvation figure, and I do not believe that the American lives who does not consider the laborer worthy of his hire. Be firm in your convictions. Never whine or complain. Never tell why you did not succeed in your last place, unless your new employer demands such an explanation; then make it briefly and tell the truth.

Having secured your position, how shall you keep it? First, and always, by being absolutely and strictly honest, for honor and character are man's greatest promoters. They stimulate energy and promote confidence. Who can deny the great power of energy and confidence? After an employer finds out he has an energetic clerk, in whom he can place absolute confidence, that clerk's future is a very promising one.

Go to work with slow, steady, determined effort. Don't grab your pen or shovel as if you knew just what you are expected to do without explanation. Don't give your employer the impression that he has secured a man who is using his brains simply to figure out how far his weekly wage will go—if it will pay only the rent and buy the food, or if it will go so far as to permit of two theater tickets and a new collar for the dog. Perhaps, you think your employer cannot detect such thoughts. He is, perhaps a keen man, probably has employed scores before you, and has had much practice in reading the expressions of men.

When luncheon or closing time is approaching, don't begin to prepare for leaving twenty minutes beforehand. I know a young man who stopped work regularly at 11:40 o'clock a.m. and at 5:10 o'clock p.m. in order to have plenty of time to "wash up," arrange his cuffs and tie, and brush his hair, so that he could leave promptly at 12 o'clock for luncheon and at 5:30 o'clock p.m., when the store closed. It was some years ago. That man is still looking for a "good job." He has had more than a dozen. He knew how to get them, but he never acquired the art of keeping them.

Don't be afraid of trying to do more than is expected of you. This has been the cause of many a man's failure. The book-keeper who gives up a theater party or an evening social in order to try and complete a balance sheet does not escape his employer's notice. He has shown willingness and has given the "boss" good evidence that he regards his interest before his own pleasure. You may make mistakes; but, if you do, say so, and make your amends by trying to correct them. Never lie about a mistake, for such a course adds cowardice to an already unpleasant condition.

PERSONALITY ACQUIRED.

Always remember that, next to honor, the quality that counts the most is personality. While many will tell you that personality is a gift just as surely as is the art of composing music, let me assure you that nothing else can be acquired as easily as personality, if one has the mind and the inclination to acquire it. A bad temper, a sour disposition—becoming cross and petulant when denied your way, speaking with sharpness when a kind word can just as easily be uttered, and letting anger have its sway—are faults that may be overcome if one earnestly and persistently tries to do so. They hinder the acquirement of a desirable personality, and so lessens one's advancement, and, more than all besides, they shorten life. Personality is nothing if it is not the companion of politeness. No man wants to keep a person in his employ who is not polite. Never let a harsh or impolite personality be the weak link in the chain of your qualities. If it is, you can rest assured that it is the easiest link to strengthen. I do not mean to infer that one should be maudlin and puttylike in order to produce personality, or that he should assume politeness. Such a condition or attempt never exalts a man; it simply makes him appear false in the eyes of his employer. Nature made all of us to act naturally. A bad temper can be expurgated, the same as any other vice. Don't confound anger and firmness. We admire a man who can assert his rights and stand by them, and we more than respect a man who can say "No" with vigor and purpose when "No" should be said; but we rightly despite a person who scolds and vociferates.

Always keep your promises. Your employer will never ask you to do more than is possible. Remember that an unfulfilled promise is as bad as a downright untruth. Live within your means. Never let a month pass that you do not put something in the bank. Dress neatly and plainly, for an employer marks a man as a fool who apparels himself with extravagance and glaring colors. Never try to win the favor of your employer by slandering your fellow-workers. Slander always sticks. Resolve slowly and act quickly. Remember, it is better to be alone than in bad company; that you cannot give your employer or yourself full value if you try to work after a night of dissipation; that silence, like cleanliness, is akin to godliness; that a clear conscience gives sound sleep and good digestion, and clothes one in an impregnable coat of mail.

Last, but not least, remember that out of business hours your home deserves most of your attention. The employer feels an immediate confidence in a man or woman whose home is free from extravagance, enmity, contempt, wrath, strife, envy and opposition. Keep happiness in your home, and you will create strength and efficiency for your work.

Industrial Independence.

THE FEDERATION OF LABOR A DISTINCTLY UNAMERICAN INSTITUTION, AS PROVEN BY IT S DEMANDS.

THE EFFRONTERY of Samuel Gompers in threatening the members of Congress if they do not yield to the demands for special labor immunity for boycotting and other illegal practices, makes the following statement by the New York Journal of Commerce interesting:

"It has been the boast of this country ever since its independent government was established that here all men stand equal before the law. There are no class distinctions, no special privileges or immunities. The workingman of today may be the employer of tomorrow, the man starting in life with only energy, capacity and ambition may rise to position among the foremost capitalists of his generation if he has it in him. He is to have an equal chance with others. The law must show him no favor and put no obstacle in his way, grant him no privilege or exemption, that is not applied to others and is not intended to conserve the liberty and protect the rights of all on a footing of equality. This is the American theory of government, the foundation principle of the republic. In time past there has been in a legal sense no working class in this country. All are supposed to work in their various capacities and according to their several abilities in such callings as they may choose or their circumstances and opportunities may prescribe, and all are citizens with equal rights and claims before the law and under the government.

"This is the true American doctrine and time was when the American workingman would scorn to ask for special consideration, for rights, for protection, for privileges or immunities, not accorded to all his fellow-citizens regardless of occupation or differences of wealth or social position. He did not wish to belong to a class specially dependent upon a paternal government and favored on the theory that he needed to be specially cared for. In the rapid inflow of population from other countries in the last two generations many alien ideas have been introduced, old-world traditions regarding the relations of the people to the governing power, which seem to be undermining the cherished principle of democracy. These have become especially dominant in the organization of labor unions, which have been mostly formed and directed by workingmen of foreign birth or extraction, who have not freed themselves from inherited traditions and prejudices, but look upon government as a power apart from the people, which must recognize different classes and conditions and bestow favor or protection according to various needs. Labor organization, as it has developed in the federation of which Samuel Gompers is the head, is a distinctly un-American institution, and is in conflict with the fundamental principles of the government of the United States.

"It is demanding that the law of conspiracy as it is framed for others shall not apply to men who work for wages if they organize and use their power to interfere with the right of others to work or to employ labor or carry on business. It is claiming immunity for combinations of workingmen to deprive others of liberty and property in the promotion of their own ends, when it would not be allowed to any other kind of combination. It is pleading for special exemption from the law against combinations in restraint of trade among the several States, however injurious that restraint may be to the business and the industries of the country, while that law shall continue to apply to combinations of capital. The anti-trust law needs to be amended so as to distinguish between injurious restraint and that which may be beneficial, but there should be no distinction in the treatment of those who may by the power of organized combination exercise the restraint. It is the wrong and the injury that should be prevented without distinction among those who perpetrate it. These same "leaders" of labor demand that judicial process shall discriminate between one class of citizens or subjects of law and another and that organized workingmen shall not be enjoined from acts which others are and should be forbidden to commit against the rights of person and property. A protection intended for all alike must be suspended when the attack comes from the favored 'class' of wage workers.

"There is nothing more hostile to our institutions or more calculated to undermine and subvert them than a recognition in legislation, in adjudication, or in the administration of law, of a class distinction among citizens, a distinction between wage earners and salary earners or traders, or manufacturers or professional men, so far as the fundamental rights and immunities of citizenship are involved. It is a mistake for intelligent and patriotic men in an organization like the Civic Federation or in official station to encourage the demand for any such distinction in framing or administering the laws of the land. They should rather cherish and inculcate the principles of freedom and equality before the law, the equal claim to protection and the equal obligation to respect the rights of others. Any departure from this principle is inconsistent with the very theory of our government and a menace to its integrity and perpetuity."

Unionism and Violence.

The intensity of feeling that follows the development of unionism demoralizes respect for the law and the common privileges of other workingmen who may prefer to remain their own masters, or to belong to rival organizations. Let a strike occur, and in ninety-nine cases out of 100 there will be violence precipitated by the unionites, who had refused to work under the conditions imposed by their employers. Recently at Phillipsburg, N. J., an electric car containing a numbers of persons who had taken the places of strikers in a silk mill was started down a hill by strikers pulling the trolley from the wire, and at the bottom of the incline the car was set on fire, and when firemen attempted to extinguish the flames, some one cut the hose, and the car was consumed, while a number of the passengers narrowly escaped very serious injury. The strikers then scattered.

At St. Louis, when organizers of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters attempted to form a local union of their organization, they were set upon by members of the United Teamsters of America, shots were fired, and bricks and rocks thrown, the organizers of the International Brotherhood being badly injured.

At New Orleans a couple of weeks ago, forty or more shots were fired and one man was wounded in a street riot between members of rival teamsters' unions.

Unionism is anything but the gathering into a brotherhood of the competent members of a craft, but it is proved by results to be an organization for rule or ruin. Personal rights and legal responsibilities are cast to one side. The only right an employer who yields to the demands of a union has left is the right to get together the weekly pay roll, if he can. Unionism promotes no industry, and adds no prosperity to a community, while it does throttle industrial enterprises by depriving them of the ability to compete successfully with more favored establishments, operated on the open-shop plan.

Eight-Hour Law Unfair.

The eight-hour bill now pending in Congress, restricting the hours of labor on contract work for the government, is unanimously denounced by the Manufacturers' Association of New York. The subject came before the meeting in the form of a communication from a member. According to the member, it will be absolutely impossible for contractors doing government work to comply with the requirements of the proposed law. "This law makes it impossible," says the letter, "to do any work for the government. The measure is flagrant class legislation. It will cost the government anywhere from 25 to 50 per cent. for a favored class of mechanics. Further than this, such a measure is clearly unconstitutional."

This is one of the demands union labor is making of Congress. Having secured eight hours as a day's employment on government work, they propose that men doing government work under contract must maintain the same hours, regardless of the fact that such contract work may constitute only a small proportion of the work being done in such establishments.

Why Railroads Reduce Help.

Capital has handled the labor situation adroitly in face of discouraging odds. Certain industries, notably cotton and woolen, have been able to readjust wages without bringing on strikes, but among workers where trade unionism has run riot it has not yet been possible to induce employés to accept a remission of even part of last year's advances. However, the railroads and other large organizations are meeting the case in another way—they are economizing in their pay rolls by reducing numbers. By and by labor may become alive to the fact that it cannot wring from employers more money than business will stand. When this elementary truth is grasped, perhaps the workmen who are in and those who are out will both come to the conclusion that it were better to have a larger percentage share in the amount available for wages. Investors have already in many cases had their incomes reduced, and they have certainly seen their holdings shrink in market value; the truth is that almost every stock is today quoted in the market from 1 to 2 per cent. below the present dividend basis. Is labor alone, therefore, to be immune from the fruits of the panic? Indeed, if "prosperity wages" be enjoyed in times of depression the laboring classes will actually be better off than before, inasmuch as the purchasing value of the dollar will continue to increase as commodities fall in price. Perhaps labor, having been taught to regard privileges as its birthright (in a Presidential election year) will see nothing incongruous in this. A party that has the effrontery to claim exemption from the decrees of the supreme judicial tribunal of the land may be expected to indulge in other practices not conducive to the general welfare. Labor, the spoiled boy of the politicians, threatens to use the rod on its benefactors, and the sooner this arrogance is effectively corrected the better for the nation. The defiance thrown out by labor last week should open the eyes of the public and the politicians to the dangerous pass we have arrived at.—[Journal of Commerce.

Unionites Want Free Beer.

Free beer in unlimited quantity, with the services of a man to distribute it, was among the demands which the brewery workers have presented for the indorsement of the Chicago Federation of Labor. Incidentally, they are asking an increase of $2 a week in wages, but that feature was overlooked by the delegates in their haste to indorse the other demands.

President Fitzpatrick is a Prohibitionist. When the clause in the proposed agreement relative to free beer was read he looked inquiringly at Secretary Nockels and asked that the clause be read again. It provided that a man must be employed at $2 a day to "keep watch and distribute beer."

"As I understand it," said Nockels, "this man is to keep watch on the brewery workers, and when he discovers symptoms of thirst it is his duty to apply a remedy. I presume these fellows know what they want."

Delegate John Mangan, who is a prominent officer in the Knights of Father Matthew, objected to the agreement on the grounds that "it included too much." The delegates refused to see it in that light, and it was promptly ratified and support was pledged to the brewery workers in the enforcement of the contract.—[Chicago Record-Herald.

DOG FARM HAND.

Intelligence of a Setter, Who Takes the Place of a Man in Some Farm Operations.

Joe Smith is a dog that works. He is a setter, and lives on a farm five miles southeast of Ottawa, Kan., says the Kansas City Star. Joe carries a tin cup each morning from the house to the barn to be filled with fresh milk for breakfast. He has a quart water pail that he considers his own, and has been known to carry it half filled with water to the hay field twelve times a day.

The dog has been trained to carry berry boxes. When a picker runs out of boxes and calls: "Joe, bring me a box," he goes to the crate, picks out an empty box, and takes it to the picker who called.

If any member of the family goes to the door and says: "Joe, do you see any hawks today?" he will make a large circle around the house and chicken yard, scanning the sky, and perhaps go tearing down the field under a blackbird or a song bird that happens to be passing. He does not like cows, but will go to the end of the pasture, three-quarters of a mile from the house, and bring the cows home, walking quietly behind the herd.

One day last summer Mr. Smith was mowing at the far end of his farm when his machine oil gave out. He happened to have a small paddle in his pocket on which he wrote: "Send me some oil by Joe." He gave the paddle to Joe and started Joe home. In a short time Joe came back, an oil can tied around his neck. He had received a piece of bread and butter at the house as pay for his work.

But the dog's best work is with the pigs. As Mr. Smith goes to the trough, with a pail in each hand and Joe at his heels, you might hear this talk: "Joe, there's those pigs in that trough again." With no further words Joe clears the fence with a bound and begins scattering the pigs right and left. He lines the pigs up in a circle about the trough, where he keeps them until Mr. Smith sweeps and cleans the trough. Then he says: "That will do, Joe," and Joe jumps the fence again and walks quietly back at his master's side.

The family had all petted and babied the dog ever since he was a little wobbly pup. They have always talked to him and never whipped him. They never fail to pay him in some way for work well done. He was never trained. He just learned.

The principal advantage of this Rotary over others is in its simplicity and consequent easy mastery by the inexperienced operator. It is a machine for the PEOPLE, not for EXPERTS, as is the case with other machines of the same type of construction of head. Has all modern improvements and full set highest grade steel foot attachments.

Classified real estate advertisements for insertion in THE SUNDAY TIMES must be in the office not later than 10:30 o'clock Saturday nights. Other "want" advertisements for Sunday insertion will be taken over the counter until 11:30 p.m.
The great volume of liners printed in The Sunday Times, numbering regularly over 5000 separate announcements, makes this regulation absolutely necessary in order to get the big Sunday issue out on time.

BY PUBLIC REQUEST, SPECIAL READINGS THIS WEEK,

To receive the 50c reading you must cut this ad. out and bring it with you.
WITHOUT ASKING ONE QUESTION, BEFORE YOU UTTER A WORD.
Karma gives you names, dates, facts and figures.
Tells you of loved ones, living or dead, YOUR SECRET TROUBLES, the cause and remedy—in fact, tells everything. Locates absent ones, overcomes your rivals and enemies. Gives infallible advice on all affairs of life, including business, law, health, changes, travel, patents and financial troubles.
It may be of vital interest to you to know the outcome of your present distress.
The happiness of your future life may depend upon the right solution and proper advice.
There are no mistakes in the predictions made by the great and wonderful psychic, Karma.
You may wish to know if it advisable to make a change in business, in love, in marriage.
"Shall I succeed in my new undertaking?"
"Can I obtain my hopes, my wishes, my ambitions?"
"Shall I ever enjoy the luxuries of wealth?"
"Can I trust my friends?"
"Have I enemies?"
"When shall I marry?"
"How often shall I marry?"
"Shall I ever be divorced?"
"Does another share the love that rightfully belongs to me?"
"If so, who?"
"Am I loved in return?"
"Is there any rival in my love?"
"When shall my love affairs terminate in marriage?"
"When shall my domestic troubles end?"
"How can I make my life and home happy?"
"When shall my absent friends return?"
"Why do I not receive a letter?"
Strangely fascinating are the words that come from the cultivated lips of tis most interest woman, whose journey of life has already taken her through all the renowned psychic schools of Egypt, India and Europe. It seems, indeed, as if her knowledge must come from that mysterious world of which we all would know, yet, longing, cannot know. She looks far away into the dim, mysterious future—the great beyond—across the dark chasm which separates the human body from the flitting soul—and that which is to be is told. The separated are bought together, foes are made friends, lost property is recovered, the mist is brushed away from business ventures, the hand is so guided that failures are averted, the earth's surface is explored, its treasures laid bare to her mysteriously perceptive mind, and while she gives names, dates, facts and figures, her visitor sits dumfounded at the revelations she makes to him. She is surely a woman of the passing time.
KARMA IS NOT A PSYCHIC FROM CHOICE, BUT BECAUSE FATE HAS SO DECREED IT. HER ANCESTORS WERE POWERFUL MEDIUMS AND HAVE FOR AGES HANDED DOWN THEIR WONDERFUL POWER OR GIFT FROM GENERATION TO GENERATION, SO SHE HAS RECEIVED THE RICH INHERITANCE TOGETHER WITH COMBINED KNOWLEDGE AND PRICELESS EXPERIENCE OF GENERATIONS. NO MATTER WHAT YOUR PRESENT TROUBLE MAY BE OR WHAT YOUR PAST EXPERIENCE HAS BEEN, YOU WILL SAVE TIME AND AVOID DISAPPOINTMENT BY AT ONCE CONSULTING KARMA.

PERSONAL—
PROF. C. IRVIN ALTHOUSE,
305½ S. SPRING ST., near Third.
THE CELEBRATED RELIABLE PALMIST AND ASTROLOGER.
A resident of Los Angeles for 24 years, and whose work is known throughout this entire land, having made a life study of PALMISTRY AND ASTROLOGY, has convinced hundreds of the best intellects and persons in all walks of life that his remarkable readings and PREDICTIONS FOR FUTURE EVENTS in their lives are unparalleled.
THE PALM shows diseases, love, marriage, divorce, deaths, money, investments, changes, talents, travels, etc., etc., and many other things which cannot be mentioned here.
WITH EACH PALM READING THERE IS ALSO AN ASTROLOGICAL READING.
PROF. ALTHOUSE stands at the very head of the profession, having read more celebrated people than any other reader. His readings, too, must in no wise be classed with those of any other reader now operating in this part of the country, and his skilled work has no comparison with theirs whatsoever."
MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK says: "I was greatly surprised to find how many of your warnings were well founded, and having been prepared for the same, I was not taken unawares. YOUR WARNING regarding an oncoming illness also PROVED A FACT, as not more than ten days later I was at home with a severe attack of la grippe. YOUR READING WAS MOST MARVELOUS."
PAPINTA, actress, writes and says: "Everything has turned out just as you predicted when reading my hand and horoscope. YOU ARE WONDERFUL, and I cannot express myself of what I think about your WONDERFUL TRUE READINGS."
DR. ALEX. J. M'IVOR-TYNDALL, says: "Your work along the lines of Astrology and Palmistry is highly spoken of on all sides."
FREDERICK WARDE says: "Your reading was most satisfactory. Your knowledge and skill in palmistry is REMARKABLE and gave me a much more exalted idea of that science than I have hitherto entertained."
LOUIS JAMES, actor, says: "I wish to say that your reading was ENTIRELY SATISFACTORY." PAUL GILMORE, actor, says: "I want to express to you my keen appreciation of your reading. It is by far the most scientific I have ever had." JULIET CROSBY, actress, says: "Prof. Althouse has given me a most helpful, complete and satisfactory reading." Prof. Althouse also read E. H. Sothern, Admiral Schley, Senator Clark, ex-Gov. Pardee, David Starr Jordan, Gen. Chaffee, Baron Rothschild, Joaquin Miller, Ysaye, Sousa, Edison, Capt. Hobson, Caruso, Josef Hofmann, Harold Bauer, Huntington, Lilian Nordica, Calve, Julia Marlowe, Modjeska, Sembrich, Gadski, Jefferson, Lillian Russell, Nat Goodwin, Maxine Elliott, Fritzi Scheff, Fritz Kreisler, Mary Shaw, Mary Mannering and hundreds of others. These names of NOTED people are merely given because they are PUBLIC persons. It indicates the class of people being read by PROF. ALTHOUSE, together with hundreds of the very best people of Los Angeles—WITH WHOM ALL HIS BUSINESS IS STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL IN EVERY PARTICULAR.
There are certain mental processes in the art of ratiocination, arising from a rare poise of the reasoning powers, which an immense number of untrained minds find it impossible to follow. These individuals would, of course, be incapable of appreciating the difficult mental work—calculations, trained judgment, etc.—required in these grand, but difficult, sciences and the thorough readings given by Prof. Althouse. He therefore solicits an intelligent, HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE.
ASTROLOGY AND THE HOROSCOPE.
PROF. ALTHOUSE is also an experienced practitioner in the science of Modern ASTROLOGY, by which he has made many REMARKABLE PREDICTIONS. The HOROSCOPE IS DECIDEDLY A GUIDE IN LIFE, showing remarkable things when properly cast for YOU INDIVIDUALLY, from the position of the planets at YOUR BIRTH. It indicates the condition of health, or disease; tells all about love—whom to marry and when—describing the marriage partner; shows deaths, divorce; tells about children, speculation, the best time to invest or to push affairs and when to hold on to what has been gained; your talents; your environment; when and where to travel; what to seek and what to avoid; when one will be in danger, of illness, accidents, death, losses, troubles; also of your good periods, coming—giving dates of these events for the future; IN FACT, TELLS EVERYTHING ABOUT ONE'S SELF WORTH KNOWING, being in truth, one of the best investments the world offers. YOUR HOROSCOPE is also a key to the character of OTHERS, and in this respect can be of the utmost use to you.
Beware, however, of HUMBUG READERS.
PROF. ALTHOUSE'S wonderful proficiency in hand reading and casting of horoscopes has brought him a large and successful practice. The most private confidences are reposed in him, and his advice is sought in the most difficult and critical circumstances.

PERSONAL—
MRS. MASSON,
the noted palmist of London, Eng., may be consulted at 322 S. SPRING ST. (Suite 17.)
by those desiring CAREFUL, CONSCIENTIOUS AND SCIENTIFIC HAND-READINGS FROM ONE OF THE FOREMOST PALMISTS OF THE DAY.
The earnest student and thinker will soon learn, in his investigations along psychological lines, that that which pertains to occult phenomena proper can readily be distinguished from crude and oft-exposed SLEIGHT-OF-HAND TRICKS, the most common of which is the telling of the subject's name, age, etc. AFTER HE HAS HIMSELF WRITTEN THAT INFORMATION.
PALMISTRY, HONESTLY PRACTICED, WILL NOT tell you your name, but it WILL give you information of considerably greater value in everyday life.
Your vocation, your present line of work, matters of health, marriage and domestic life, financial conditions and ways and means of climbing out of a rut of ill luck into wide paths of success and prosperity, can all be told you through scientific palmistry, WITHOUT A SINGLE QUESTION, WRITTEN OR VERBAL.
MRS. MASSON DOES NOT APPEAL TO IGNORANT SUPERSTITION, BUT TO THE FINEST INTELLIGENCE.
HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE SOLICITED.

FOR SALE—YES "SUCCESS" INCUBATORS sell themselves. Try one and you will always buy more. Mr. McLean tried one 612 size, came back and bought another 612 and a 340, as a starter, ranch at end of E. 9th st. car line.

Harry Klassen, Fullerton tried one 612 and ordered two more 612 egg size, says they run themselves. Mrs. Obear of the Whittier Hatchery uses a 612 and says it runs like a clock. Carl Matson of Inglewood, has just bought a 612 and after investigating all other machines. Mr. Nau, employee Staube shoe store, bought a 130 and then a 360, says they can't be beat. Better try one—we sell them on a trial offer of satisfaction or money back. Most dealers don't even do that.

Last Monday you saw the 612 egg size hatching the Reds here in the store—you noticed how big and strong the chicks were and that nearly all of the eggs hatched didn't you? Monday two more 612 egg size are hatching here—better take a look. Did you see any other dealer asking you to come and see the work they do—hardly.

Prices less than any other high-class machine. 130 egg size, $15; 240 egg size, $20; 340 egg size, $36, and the 612 egg size $48.

We pay freight. Send for new catalog, just out, contains the best chick lectures ever written. Articles by Mrs. Basley, Mr. Schofield and Frank Thomas, mailed free. E. E. McCLANAHAN, 711 S. Main. 12

FOR SALE—
Free Baby Chick Show Monday at Baby Chick Headquarters—we will have on sale the largest number of baby chicks EVER shown by us at one time and four times as many as ever shown by any other dealer in this city.

You have seen chicks before here in several thousand lots, but just come Monday. Same old prices 10c and up. We ship everywhere.

We are landing chicks safe in all towns in Nevada and Arizona and all California points within forty-eight hours—send for price list of chicks and eggs. Prices lower than any other dealers—no competition on baby chicks still we do not raise the prices. Get your hatching eggs here, better stock and lower prices than you get at most places.

Come Monday anyway and take a look. Note the crowds here, did you see them in any other "large" poultry supply store? Yes, they are always here—buy where you can get the best goods and the best prices.

FOR SALE—MORE OF THOSE "QUALITY" BABY CHICKS.
How much easier and more sensible it is as well as economical to step in and buy the required number of chicks to give you a good start than to bother with the generally unreliable hen and uncertain fertility of the eggs. The number of chicks that are sold in this town is increasing daily, which goes to prove that it is the modern way.

Next week we will have on sale—
Barred Rocks, White Rocks,
Rhode Island Reds, Black Minorcas,
White Wyandottes, White Leghorns,
Brown Leghorns, Buff Orpingtons,
Black Langshans, Cornish Indian Games,
Light Brahmas, Pekin Ducks.

Remember these are all strictly thoroughbred and from reliable strains, hatched from eggs furnished by specialty breeders. The stock we sell you you can depend upon being true to name, vigorous and full of stamina. At this time of the year when the weather is warm chicks can be brooded with a minimum of risk and expense, and there is practically no loss.

Remember, we carry a full line of chick feed, poultry remedies and insecticides. We also handle Glendale Incubators and brooders and there are none better made. If you do not believe it, come in and let us prove it to you.

We have one of the best buys on the market, car slightly used as a demonstrating car. This car is fully equipped, at $1000 less than factory price. If you are looking for a high-power car at a bargain this is your chance. This is one of the celebrated four-cylinder Knox touring cars. This car must be moved before the first day of April to close up the affairs of the agency for this car.

For sale—A Maxwell touring car in perfect condition; has 5 lamps and generator. A reliable car and a bargain buy. Get our price.

For Sale—One of those large Pullman 7-passenger White steamer touring cars, fully equipped; top, glass front, speedometer, 5 lamps and generator. With a new engine and new 1908 axles. We consider this the best buy of any big 1907 car in the city. The car is in first-class condition, and at the price at which we are offering it any one can own a White steamer. The car must be sold, and that at once.

We have just had sent to us by the former agent of the Queen Touring Car Co. for Southern California, a fine 4-cylinder Queen car, fully equipped, in elegant condition, that we are offering at greatly reduced prices in order to move at once. For parties that are looking at high powered cars for very little money, this is their opportunity to get a good car.

Ask your neighbor where he got his car, and the chances are that he will say "down to Perkins', opposite the postoffice," for we are certainly selling more cars than all the rest of them put together. If you want to buy a car right, come in and we will show you the finest lot in the city to select from, and for prices that will make you stop and take notice. If you have a car to sell and really want to sell it quick, bring it here and get results. Let the man that is doing the business, do business for you. We sell cars for cash.

This car is a brand new car, having only been driven a few times to demonstrate. This car must be sold in the next 10 days at some price. Come and make us an offer.

Take notice—That of all the cars that we are offering for sale we are not like other dealers, who list a large number of cars that they offer to trade for real estate or any old thing, but when you go to see the car they haven't got it, but will offer you something else instead. We are not in that line of business. Everything we advertise we have on our floor and they are for sale for cash and cash only, and that is why we can give you bargains, for money is what talks. We are the largest dealers in slightly used cars this side of New York, and have the goods to show you, and all cars are guaranteed as represented.

EARL OF DUDLEY, NEW GOVERNOR OF AUSTRALIA.

Noted Statesman of Great Britain, who has been appointed to the Governorship of the Commonwealth of Australia. He was born in 1867 and succeeded his father as second Earl in 1885. His barony goes back to 1643 and the viscountcy and earldom to 1860. Lord Dudley began his state career as parliamentary secretary to the Board of Trade in 1895, holding it until 1902, when he became Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. Like many Englishmen who have examined the Irish question on the spot, Lord Dudley has changed his views and quite lately he has adopted liberalism. His wife, nee Rachel Gurney, is the daughter of Charles Gurney, the well-known banker. He has four sons and three daughters, twin sons having been born recently.

RAISE "BOOZE" CRY.

Alleged False Alarm in City Election Fight at Sierra Madre. Boy Hurt.

SIERRA MADRE, April 11.—The citizens of this place sat up and gasped when they received in their mail a circular from the Civic League with the word "Booze" printed therein. It was a slam at the present Trustees, who are up for reëlection, and a boost for the Civic League candidates, the president of which is one. There is indignation because of the league blossoming out as a political machine. There is no liquor issue here. There never has been. The Civic League claims to have saved the town from being a "booze town." People are wondering when this was. Beyond the question of granting a restaurant license to the hotel here, the question of "booze" never arose. It is established that every one of the present city officers is for a "dry" town. It is alleged that this circular letter of the league's is to catch the voter who has not studied the conditions, and a number of the members of the league do not approve of it. The town is now "dry," and will probably remain so, and the more conservative league members think a serious blunder has been made in this agitation.

STREET BETTERMENT.

The bumps and gullies that were a source of annoyance to the drivers of vehicles on Mountain Trail and Central avenues will soon be a thing of the past. Grading gangs have started on their initial work on these thoroughfares, and the first work of street improvement in this city is now being rapidly pushed. Many other streets are to be improved, and soon the city will be equal in this respect to other cities of this class.

BOY HURT BY CAR.

Ariel Hoegee, a boy about 10 years of age, while racing his burro along the electric car track on Central avenue, was struck by the incoming 8 o'clock car this morning. Young Hoegee was riding alongside the track when a dog ran out and caused his burro to shy back sideways, onto the track, and, although Motorman Mullholland endeavored to check the impetus of the car, he was unable to do so until after the car had struck young Hoegee's burro. The youngster was thrown violently to the ground, and the burro was pushed to one side. A tin can that the boy was carrying at the time caused him to receive several ugly cuts on the face, and it was found on picking the child up that he had lost several teeth and received other painful but not serious bruises on the head. He was carried to the office of Dr. Mackerries, opposite whose residence the accident occurred. No blame is attached to the motorman, as he did everything possible to avoid the collision.

SEA MONSTERS FIGHT DUEL.

Big Shark and Swordfish Have Fatal Encounter in Deep Water Off Venice Harbor.

VENICE, April 11.—Fishermen who went to the banks several miles offshore returned this evening with a six-ton shark of the steel-nose variety. The big inhabitant of the deep drink is about thirty-five feet in length. It was towed into the Venice harbor, and an effort was made to raise it upon the pier, but the weight of the fish snapped the hawsers, and darkness coming on before stouter ropes could be secured, the curiosity from the sea was anchored near the pier, and tomorrow will be pulled onto the sandy beach to be inspected by the Sunday visitors.

The fishermen who brought in the prize say they were attracted by the lashing of the waters within a few rods of their launch. Occasionally they would see a shark leap almost out of the water, and upon descending there would again be a commotion. Finally the splashing ceased, and a coating as of blood upon the surface of the sea told the watchers that the battle of marine monsters had terminated disastrously for at least one of the combatants. A few minutes later the dead body of the shark rose to the surface.

An examination of the carcass showed that its antagonist had been a sword fish. Gaping wounds told the story. The shark was made fast with a rope and brought into the harbor.

SIX JURORS IN RUEF CASE.

Judge Dooling Makes New Order to Expedite Examination of the Veniremen.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, April 11.—Six jurors now occupy the box in the Ruef Parkside bribery trial before Superior Judge Dooling. Paul Barbien, a retired merchant, who has been identified with many public movements during the forty years he has resided in San Francisco, was the last talesman to qualify, after three hours of rigorous and searching examination by Henry Ach, attorney for the defendant.

Judge Dooling has adopted a new method to expedite the examination of talesmen, and not hold those who are disqualified in court while the legal jargon is going on. The jury box is kept filled and the District Attorney ascertains if any have opinions that make them ineligible. If they state that they have, they are dismissed without cross-examination, and other talesmen are drawn to fill their places. A venire of fifty new names was drawn this morning.

Judge Lawlor today continued the cases of Tirey L. Ford, Patrick Calhoun, William M. Abbott and Abraham Ruef for accepting a bribe until April 18. The case of George F. Duffy, charged with having accepted a bribe, was continued until the same date.

Must You Reduce Your Fat?

If you have gotten to the point, my dear madam or good sir, where the excess fat must positively come off—don't worry. No need to peer in the gymnasium door with a despairing glance or sniff dubiously at the soapy savoriness of a bowl of impoverished gruel. You can keep on eating what you please if you will but ask your druggist for ½ ounce Marmola, ½ ounce Fluid Extract Cascara Aromatic, and 3½ ounces Syrup Simplex. Get the Marmola sealed. Mix it at home and take a teaspoonful after meals and at bedtime, for a few weeks. Good health and firm, smooth flesh reduced quickly to an amount natural to your build will reward you. Too simple, you say. Fortunately simple, I say. The simplest things are the best.

FACT AND COMMENT.

GOOD deal of light may be had n the real estate market as on ny special subject by judicial parison of one city with another. eapolis Journal, in an issue some weeks ago, devoted a liberal sec of this particular day to the sub of real estate. The motif for this a meeting of the real estate as tion of that city, at which a lawyer who had traveled over ountry pretty extensively told of he had found about values of estate in some half dozen cities e West. To this speech the Fact Comment man is indebted for the following:

—o—

city of Spokane, the metropolis hat is known as the Inland Em was first taken up, with the re that the last figures of popula for that city gave it 75,000 inhabi It appears that the highest price paid there for a piece of real e was a corner 60x140 feet, im d with a two-story brick build This piece of property brought 0, or a valuation of a little over a front foot. The real estate men pokane held unimproved prop f the best class to be a good bar at from $2000 to $3000 a front Another lot sold there recently, feet, improved with an old-style ory building, brought $375,000, ents bring in an income of 6 per a year on the investment. Resi property in Spokane in the sec of the city where flat buildings eing erected sells for $50 a front and second-class business prop at $800 a front foot, corners $1000. One piece of this last type perty sold on a recent date un ved at $1200 a front foot. It was ner.

s in Minneapolis.

dentally the speaker compared ices of real estate in Minneapolis those ruling in Spokane. Second ird-class business property in the city on the Mississippi is sal t from $2000 a front foot up to One piece, fronting forty-four n a principal street, improved a four-story building, sold for 0 in a recent transaction. The estate, stripped of the improve was estimated to have gone 0 a front foot.

essive Seattle.

ttle has been engaged in three undertakings influencing inti y real estate values. Railroads built an immense new station on eights above the city; a magnifi hotel, the Washington, has been d, and the Moore Theater is the of these great undertakings. In le first-class business property for $600 a front foot to $6000 a for corners, and at these prices lass of property is firmly held in orthern city. There are some ex y notable structures on Second Seattle, the Alaska building the bank which owns it about Two years ago 120 feet on avenue, Seattle, which is coming front very rapidly, practically roved, sold for $112,000; a year is sold for $350,000 and is held at esent time higher. The lowest on the street at the time is $2700 t foot. One steel structure is now up at a cost of $800,000. FACT AND COMMENT.

A GOOD deal of light may be had on the real estate market as on any special subject by judicial comparison of one city with another. The Minneapolis Journal, in an issue some three weeks ago, devoted a liberal section of this particular day to the subject of real estate. The motif for this was a meeting of the real estate association of that city, at which a [illegible] lawyer who had traveled over the country pretty extensively told of what he had found about values of real estate in some half dozen cities of the West. To this speech the Fact and Comment man is indebted for the items following:

Values in Spokane.

The city of Spokane, the metropolis of what is known as the Inland Empire, was first taken up, with the remark that the last figures of population for that city gave it 75,000 inhabitants. It appears that the highest price paid there for a piece of real estate was a corner 60x140 feet, improved with a two-story brick building. This piece of property brought [illegible], or a valuation of a little over [illegible] a front foot. The real estate men of Spokane held unimproved property of the best class to be a good bargain at from $2000 to $3000 a front foot. Another lot sold there recently, [illegible] feet, improved with an old-style [illegible] story building, brought $375,000. [illegible] rents bring in an income of 6 per cent. a year on the investment. Residence property in Spokane in the section of the city where flat buildings are being erected sells for $50 a front foot, and second-class business property at $500 a front foot, corners at $1000. One piece of this last type of property sold on a recent date unimproved at $1200 a front foot. It was a corner.

—o—

Values in Minneapolis.

Incidentally the speaker compared prices of real estate in Minneapolis with those ruling in Spokane. Second and third-class business property in the city on the Mississippi is salable at from $2000 a front foot up to [illegible] for one piece, fronting forty-four feet on a principal street, improved with a four-story building, sold for [illegible] in a recent transaction. The land alone, stripped of the improvements, was estimated to have gone at [illegible] a front foot.

—o—

Values in Seattle.

Seattle has been engaged in three great undertakings influencing intimately real estate values. Railroads have built an immense new station on the edge of the city; a magnificent hotel, the Washington, has been erected, and the Moore Theater is the third of the great undertakings. In the best business property [illegible] a front foot to $6000 a front foot on corners, and at these prices the best of property is firmly held in the business city. There are some exceedingly notable structures on Second avenue, Seattle, the Alaska building and the bank which owns it about [illegible]. Two years ago 120 feet on [illegible] avenue, Seattle, which is coming to the front very rapidly, practically unimproved, sold for $112,000; a year later it sold for $350,000 and is held at [illegible] time higher. The lowest price on the street at the time is $2700 a front foot. One steel structure is now going up at a cost of $800,000. The corner opposite this has been sold for $4000 a front foot, and they say that now property within five blocks of it can not be bought for less than $5000 a front foot. On Fourth avenue, with a grade too steep for traffic, 160 feet two years ago brought $146,000, or $900 a front foot, and a year later, in May, 1907, this sold for $235,000, or an increase of $100,000 in a year. Put it otherwise, an increase of $1500 a front foot. Another sale which marks the rapid rise of property was a plot bought in 1906 on top of one of the Seattle hills for $3600, offered a little later for $4500, then withdrawn from the market and sold a little while later for $15,000, and resold within two weeks for $20,000. All this was within one year.

—o—

Portland on Willamette.

Portland is 125 miles from the mouth of the Columbia River, about twenty-five from the confluence of the Willametter with the Columbia. Ships of about 1500 tons dead weight are able to reach the city, load wheat at the docks and go straight to sea for Europe. Those of greater draft must lighter part of their cargo down to the mouth of the Columbia. The population of Portland the speaker gave at 135,000 inhabitants, compared with Minneapolis's 300,000. Eight blocks back from the river on Washington street, the principal retail street of Portland, a block of land 200 feet square, the size of all blocks in Portland, was recently leased for 100 years' term at $30,000 a year for the first ten years, advancing to $36,000 a year for the next ten years, and gradually advancing further to the end of the 100 years in ten-year periods. Estimated on a 5 per cent. basis for the present rental, this means $3000 a front foot as the price of the real estate. On the second best retail street, eight blocks back from the river, a similar block was recently rented at $18,000 valuation a year, valuation of $1800 a front foot. Cheap building lots in Portland as far out as eight or ten miles reached by street cars are selling for from $500 to $600 a lot. The highest priced property in Portland is not included in this review. It would probably be about $4000 to $5000 a front foot. Lots in Portland are usually 100x100 feet, or four lots to the block, this being usually subdivided into two lots 50x100 feet.

Rebuilt San Francisco.

The Minneapolis lawyer was very naturally much surprised at the rapidity with which San Francisco has been rebuilt. He found that at the time of his visit, some few months ago, $100,000,000 had been spent in new steel and concrete buildings. No other style of building is to be found within the business limits of the new city. The visitor lacked energy or curiosity as to the values of real estate in San Francisco. A piece on Market street before the fire occurred, a little way south of the old Palace Hotel, brought $8000 a front foot. That is about the highest price recorded before the fire. San Francisco real estate in the business center is worth now more than it was in April two years ago, before the city was almost swept off of the face of the earth. Undoubtedly there is considerable business real estate in the city which could not be had for $10,000 a front foot. Residence property on Pacific Heights is held for about $600 to $800 a front foot. Some of it could not be purchased at any price. There is very little of it at all for sale, and but little of it in existence.

What the Tourist Found Here.

The Minneapolis man quite gushed in his enthusiasm over Los Angeles, which he calls the tourist's Mecca. He mentions its magnificent hotels, the Alexandria, the Angelus, the Hayward, the Van Nuys, the Lankershim and the Westminster, all come in for his praise. Of the Alexandria he says, "Its service is unexcelled by any hotel in the country." He is quite as enthusiastic about the beauty of its finish, the quality of the table and every detail of the hotel. He thinks we have "over-boomed" the city, and says, "Its retail buildings have been overdone. Its business property and rentals are too high." The observer is quite right about the rentals. Business rentals are too high here, but of course the inconsistency commends itself to a child's notice in the tourist's remarks. If the retail section of the business center has been over-built, rents cannot be too high. It is because of the pressing demand for stores that the rents are too high. He notices the sale at the highest price ever recorded in this city, Broadway and Seventh, for practically $6000 a foot. Further notice taken of the rise in property on Broadway, between Eighth and Ninth, from $800 or $1000 a front foot to $3000 or $4000. As an incident of the building of the Hamburger department store and the Hamburger Theater. Property where the Angelus Hotel is he reports as appraised at $7000 a foot, and Fifth and Spring at $6000. On any cross street between Eighth and Thirteenth property ranges from $1000 to $1500. This may be true along some of the principal business streets in the new business center, but it requires qualification. A little ways away from the business center it is worth much less. For example, the corner of Sixth and Hope is held at only $1000 a front foot, and that is right in business. Another error in the recital of matters here is that the entire country plotted into residence lots between Los Angeles and the sea, such lots are held at from $1000 to $3000. There are some thousands of them that can be bought for one-tenth the sum quoted.

Conditions Influencing Los Angeles.

In making comparisons between Los Angeles and other cities of this Coast, as the Fact and Comment department of The Times has pointed out very frequently, we must not overlook the important fact that Seattle, Portland and San Francisco are built on territory hemmed in by water or hills while we have a broad level plain stretching twenty miles in all directions, a territory into which population may spread uninterruptedly. On the contrary, in making comparison between this city and Minneapolis, for example, we must not forget the progress of development in and around the Minnesota city as compared with our own. Minnesota is a tolerably well-developed State. It is and always must depend mostly upon its agriculture, but these resources are pretty well developed. Its lumber resources are about exhausted. There will be large manufacturing growth in Minnesota, but it will not all concentrate in Minneapolis, but will spread to various centers where electric power may be developed. We are only really at the beginning of our development here in Los Angeles. The Minneapolis speaker referred to there being room in and around Los Angeles for a population of 2,000,000. The 2,000,000 people will come more rapidly in growth than will take place anywhere near a city like Minneapolis. By weighing these conditions one against the other we get a pretty clear view of the future of Los Angeles real estate. We need not expect to see residence property reach the top price of Pacific Heights in San Francisco in any length of time that is of interest to the present generation. But with the possibility of a million inhabitants inside of the city of Los Angeles within another quarter of a century and of possibly 2,000,000 in the county in that time, we may expect to see as great fortunes made in real estate in the next twenty-five years as in the past. It will take more money to turn the tricks from now on than in the past. Twenty-five years ago property about the corner of Second and Spring could be bought for $300 a front foot and property along Bunker Hill avenue from First to the Normal School for $300 for a sixty-foot lot, or $5 a foot. It was easy to buy a lot up on Grand avenue twenty-five years ago as compared with today, but it is not improbable that twenty-five years from today, with a population of a million in the city of Los Angeles, the lots on Olive Heights, as it is called, which now are worth about $200 a foot, will be worth as many thousand, and choice residence property now to be had for $100 a foot will be worth two or three times that figure, perhaps as much as $1000 where they will be useful for high-class apartment houses and family hotels.

RETIRED BANKER SELLS HOME.

Handsome Braly Residence on Arapahoe Street Changes Hands for Thirty-five Thousand.

Ninety thousand dollars worth of residence property passed through the hands of Althouse Bros., last week, according to the reports from that hustling real estate firm. The sales includes several handsome dwellings in the west and southwestern parts of the city, and at the prices reported to have been paid, it is quite evident there is no slump, or decline in values in Los Angeles residence property. In addition to the following reported, sales this firm says there are several others of smaller houses, made, and more pending.

Althouse Bros. have sold for J. H. Braly, to a local investor, the handsome fourteen-room, two-story reinforced concrete dwelling at No. 1025 Arapahoe street, on lot 110x150 feet. The house is one of the most modern in the city. The living-room is 25x25, finished in white enamel, with a fifteen-foot open fireplace, and a Gruby tile mantel. There are many large windows, built-in bookcases and window seats. Adjoining the living-room is a spacious den, in oak, with beamed ceilings. The halls are hung with tapestries. A pergola with palms and flowers opens off the den. Dining-room is 22x25 feet, and is finished in oak, with beamed ceilings. The walls are covered with genuine calfskin. The electric fixtures throughout were especially designed for the house. There are six large bed-chambers, the smallest one being 18x22 feet, and several private baths. The servants' quarters are separate from house. In the cellar are a laundry, furnace, storerooms, wine cellar, cooling-room and trunk room. The large grounds are improved, and there is a spacious garage in keeping with house.

Nellie S. Bird has sold to Martha J. Braly, the handsome eight-room, two-story frame house, with all modern conveniences, on lot 62½x135 feet, at No. 618 Benton boulevard, overlooking Sunset Park, for consideration of $12,000.

Martha J. Braly has sold to Harrison Albright, the architect, the same property for a consideration of $13,000, showing a profit of $1000 in a few days.

Small Farms Yielding Big Profits at Corcoran

Fertile District Fairly Humming With Activity

BY. C. R. STUART.

Probably no other agricultural section of the State is attracting so much attention at the present time as the Corcoran District. Big things are being accomplished here. Millions of dollars have been expended and are being expended in development work, and settlers are pouring in as a nat[illegible]

Although Corcoran already has a substantial bank with a paid-up capital of $50,000, and surplus and undivided profits of $12,500, a Savings Bank is now being organized. This is evidence of the great financial prosperity of the district.

The development of natural gas for light, heat, fuel and power, the building of a million-dollar sugar factory, a [illegible] depot, and the cultivation of thousands of fertile acres, have had much to do with the activity at Corcoran. Lands are being offered at $45 to $125 per acre, and are being taken up rapidly.

A FEW FACTS AND FIGURES.

[illegible] Little, assistant cashier of the State Bank of Corcoran, owns [illegible] acres in the town. Chickens alone paid his entire living expenses last year and they required very little attention. He expects peach trees on [illegible] acres of this land to net him [illegible] next year. Melons from a half acre netted him $180 the first season. Mr. Little purchased his property only two years ago this March.

[illegible] W. Gilberson says that his income from chickens and garden on a small piece of land more than pays the living expenses of his large family.

George A. Smith cleared $350 from [illegible] acres of potatoes. He found the soil fertile enough to produce two crops on the same ground in the same year. He also secured enough [illegible] for two years' planting.

Alfalfa seed netted J. R. Charles [illegible] last year. He also receives [illegible] to $1000 per month from the creamery for his milk.

A. V. Taylor clears about $600 per [illegible] from milk alone. W. H. Ginn's monthly milk check averages $300, [illegible] of other alfalfa ranches are [illegible] fat bank accounts for their [illegible]

Chickens and turkeys roam about, [illegible] their own feed to a great extent, and require practically no attention. Turkeys sell readily at $3.75 to $5.00 each. Chickens bring high prices and eggs average 25c a dozen the year round. Hogs are a by-product of the dairy. Skimmed milk and alfalfa make the choicest pork. Corcoran hogs command the highest prices in San Francisco and Los Angeles markets.

AN INCOME IN SIX MONTHS.

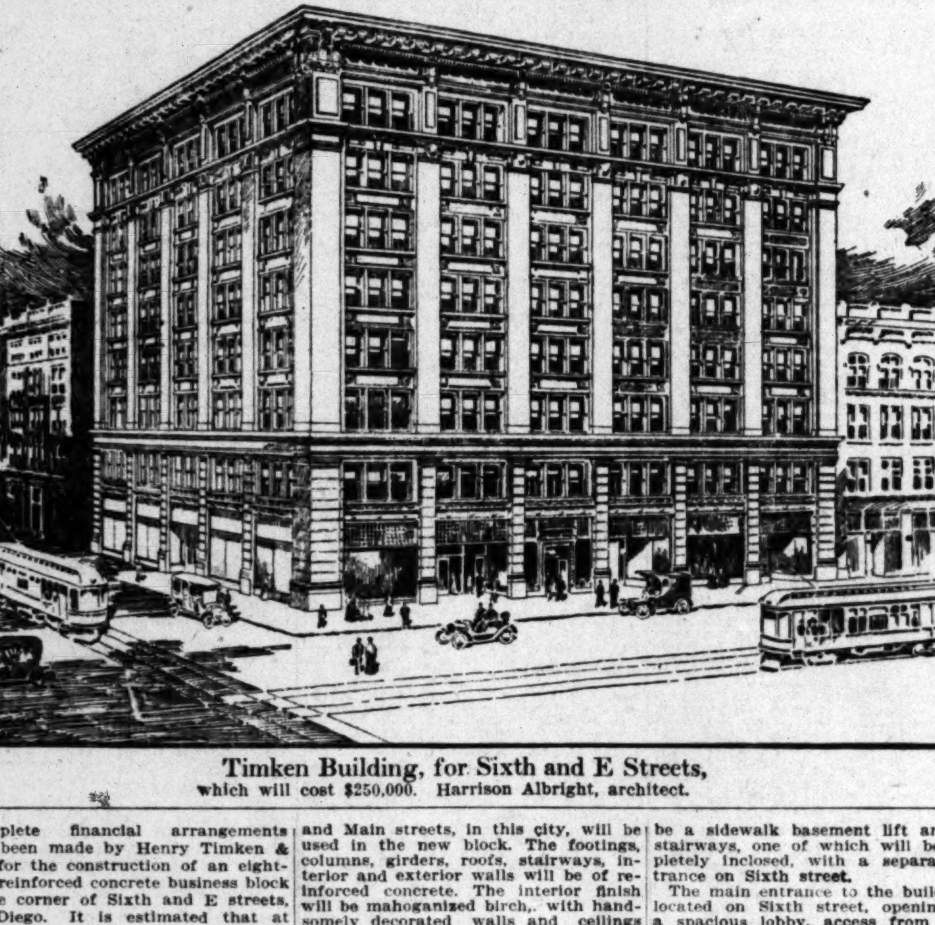
A prominent ranch owner told the writer that those who are buying now can make their land produce an income within six months, if they develop water. Flowing water and gas wells can be easily developed at an average cost of $150 to $200, which will supply irrigation for 10 to 15 acres and gas for heat, light and fuel sufficient for the home. It is possible to actually pay for land at the prices at which it is now being offered at Corcoran in a reasonably short time out of the profits of the soil, and to make a good living besides.

The man who invests in Corcoran land today is conservative and aggressive. Money can be invested in this class of property with a feeling of iron-clad surety. There is a national confidence in wealth-producing acreage that can never be disturbed by panics.

The company behind Corcoran makes a liberal rebate to settlers who build permanent improvements. Every buyer who establishes improvements of a permanent character is given a rebate on the purchase price of his land to the extent of approximately 50 per cent. of the cost of his improvements. It is safe to state that this is undoubtedly one of the broadest concessions ever made by a land company.

Newport and Milner, general agents for Security Land & Loan Co., offices at 357 South Spring street at Fourth, are in charge of Wednesday excursions to Corcoran, leaving in the evening. These personally conducted trips are highly pleasureable and interesting. Corcoran is reached the next morning at about 10 o'clock. From that hour until 5 p. m. of the next day the greater part of the rich Corcoran district is covered in carriages. Leaving Corcoran at 5:40 p. m., the party arrives in Los Angeles the next morning in time for breakfast.

CONCRETE BUSINESS BLOCK FOR SAN DIEGO.



Timken Building, for Sixth and E Streets, which will cost $250,000. Harrison Albright, architect.

Complete financial arrangements have been made by Henry Timken & Sons for the construction of an eight-story reinforced concrete business block on the corner of Sixth and E streets, San Diego. It is estimated that at least $250,000 will be invested in this magnificent improvement in the business center of the southern city. Harrison Albright of this city, who is the architect of the U. S. Grant Hotel, the Union building, Coronado library and numerous other structures at San Diego, is also the designer of the Timken building.

The building, an illustration of which from an exclusive drawing, appears on this page, will have a frontage of 125 feet on both Sixth and E streets. The architect states that the same method of construction as was used in building the Grant Hotel and the Union building in San Diego, and the Citizens' National Bank building at Third and Main streets, in this city, will be used in the new block. The footings, columns, girders, roofs, stairways, interior and exterior walls will be of reinforced concrete. The interior finish will be mahoganized birch,. with handsomely decorated walls and ceilings throughout.

There will be several large stores on the main floor, and 200 intercommunicating offices on the upper floors, with all conveniences, such as toilets, for both sexes on each floor, etc. Each office, in addition to being intercommunicating, will open direct upon the corridor, and each will be fitted up with clothes closets, lavatory, radiator, electric light fixtures and sockets for telephone and desk lamps. Every room will have two or three windows. The building will be heated by steam, lighted by electricity and cleaned by the vacuum air suction system.

Three high-speed passenger plunger elevators will operate between basement and eighth story, and there will be a sidewalk basement lift and two stairways, one of which will be completely inclosed, with a separate entrance on Sixth street.

The main entrance to the building is located on Sixth street, opening into a spacious lobby, access from which can be had from the basement, stores and offices by means of stairs and elevators.

The lobby will be finished with marble walls and mosaic tile floors. The stairways leading fro mthe lobby to the basement and to the second floor will also be marble.

The arrangements for the necessary financial aid are said to have been made in the East through the efforts of the Timken Sons. The achitect has called for bids on the huge structure, and work will be pushed with all possible speed. The late financial flurry is said to have caused the temporary suspension of the plan to build, as the designs were completed several months ago.

SAN DIEGO.

BOND ISSUE HELP TO CITY.

MUNICIPAL IMPROVEMENTS ARE NOW ASSURED.

Seventy-five Thousand Dollars Is Available for Boulevards and Roads. La Jolla Sewer System Will Be Installed—Four Million Increase in Taxable Property in Year.

SAN DIEGO, April 10.—Outside the announcement by Henry Timkin that he will soon begin erecting an eight-story reinforced office building at the southwest corner of Sixth and E streets, to cost a quarter of a million, the best news in realty circles is that the city has finally come into possession of $111,000 of the bond money, which will be used for public improvements this summer and fall.

Of the total, $34,000 will be devoted to the installation of a sewer system at La Jolla, and $75,000 will be for roads and boulevards. Although the ordinance provides for advertising for bids, it is expected an arrangement will be made to have the boulevard work done under the direction of prominent citizens, including George W. Marston, E. W. Scripps, A. G. Spaulding and William Clayton. Steps will also be taken for readvertising the balance of the bond issue, which has been declared legal by the Supreme Court.

The rolls turned over to the city Board of Equalization by the City Assessor show an increase in the valuation of real and personal property of $4,000,000 over last year. The Assessor states that he based his values on conditions as they existed at the first day of the year. Had he assessed the property before the financial flurry he would have added $2,000,000 more. The realty valuation is $26,500,000 and the personal, $1,200,000, a total of $27,700,000, compared with $23,740,000 last year. Very few changes will result through the Board of Equalization. The tax rate last year was $1.35, and a slight raise is expected this year, in view of the large expenditures demanded.

Louis Fritz has awarded the contract for a three-story brick building on the west side of Fifth street, between F and G streets, on a lot 25x100 feet, for $20,000. The Pacific Building Company has awarded contracts for the erection of three cottages, one on D street, between Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth, one on Center, between Robinson and Vermont, and the third at the corner of University and Tenth streets.

H. Bierfuss has bought from G. A. Bailey for $2500, two lots on First street, between Hawthorne and Ivy streets, for $2500. He will build a modern flat building costing between $7000 and $8000.

Howard Bailey has bought a lot with a fifty feet frontage on Third street, between Thorne and Upas streets, for $2000. Ex-Mayor E. M. Capps has bought a lot on the west side of Fourth street, between Ivy and Juniper streets, upon which he is erecting a home. H. L. Moody will build a $2000 cottage on a lot on Second street, between Washington and Lewis, which he bought for $1250.

The Bascom place at El Cajon has been sold for $2400 to Thomas E. Magwigan. The ranch consists of eighteen and one-half acres.

F. C. Spaulding will build three cottages at the corner of North avenue and Monroe street, which will cost $6000. C. B. Mann has sold to Margaret Coleman a five-room cottage on Brookes avenue, near Park boulevard, for $2500.

Jagger & Preston have bought an eighty-acre ranch in Highland Valley, eighteen miles northeast of the city, near San Pasqual.

Since January 1, 326 building permits have been issued, representing an aggregate of $525,125. During the first nine days of April, thirty-three permits were issued for $36,725, as compared with twenty-nine permits aggregating $61,920 for the corresponding time last month.

NON-RESIDENTS BUYING.

Demand for Alfalfa Land in Perris Valley—Sales of Orange Groves Also Reported.

The Western Realty and Investment Company reports an active demand for alfalfa land and orange groves. Quite a number of sales have been made to non-residents within the last few weeks, and the inquiry for properties is increasing.

E. E. Stewart of Ethenae, Riverside county, has sold to W. A. Freemore, a retired capitalist of Minneapolis, a 160-acre tract of land near that town in the fertile Perris Valley, for a consideration of $40 an acre. The newcomer will plant the land with alfalfa. He also purchased, through the same agency, a lot with an eighty-foot frontage on Euclid avenue, Ontario, and expects to improve with a handsome residence at once. He sold his residence in Minneapolis for $7800, and will move here.

Another tract of 160 acres near Ethenae was sold by Corliss Stewart to S. L. Shank, of St. Paul, for $40 an acre. The buyer will plant with alfalfa. Eighty acres in the same section also were sold by A. M. Crabb to H. L. Neel, Jr., for $4000.

The same company also reports that, notwithstanding the fact that the crop has been harvested in most of the navel orange groves, and they are, therefore, not so attractive to eastern buyers, there is still a big demand for such properties. In the last week this firm sold a ten-acre grove at the northwest corner of Euclid avenue and Sixteenth street, Ontario, for J. C. Fraser to Louis Hammil for $13,500. The buyer is from Indianapolis, and will make his home here.

BUYS INTEREST IN IRON WORKS.

F. J. Nutting has sold his half interest in the Los Angeles Ornamental Iron Works to M. C. Mason for a consideration said to be about $10,000. The buyer gave, as part payment, the property at Nos. 1407-09 West Eleventh street, consisting of a lot 58x128 feet, extending through the street in the rear, and improved with a two story double house, valued at $6500. The remainder was paid in cash. The new owner in the iron works states that arrangements have been made to double the capacity of the plant, and that the capitalization of the company has been increased several thousand dollars.

THE NEW $700

STEGER PLAYER PIANO

IS THE WORLD'S BEST

We are daily demonstrating the paramount excellence of this superb piano. It is the one combination piano, that really combines the merits of all the others without their faults. The mechanism is perfect. The tone is pure. The touch is natural. The style is elegant. It bears no outward appearance of its concealed mechanism. It can be played just the same as any other piano, yet is instantly adapted to produce its own music. The merest novice may use it, without lessons or training, producing the music as well as the most expert player. It is the right piano for the home.

WE ARE ORGANIZING A

and will save them $175 each on its purchase. Come in at once and satisfy yourself on the quality of the piano and the saving we can effect for you in its purchase.

They comprise many of the very finest makes. We sell them as low as $125, $145, $165, $175 and $185. This week will witness unusual bargains.

FOR SALE—SWELL ADAMS HTS. HOME. We are now offering for sale one of the swellest 8-room homes in the city for only $5750. It is worth today $6750. The location is in the cream of the southwest, on the high ground, not far from Berkeley Square. Has every modern convenience; hardwood floors, beam and cove ceilings, built-in bookcases, French windows opening on veranda, buffet, elegant lightning fixtures and furnace, etc. The rooms are exceptionally large, well arranged and sunny. Large halls up and downstairs. The lot is full sized, 50x150 to alley and easily worth $1500. The house actually cost $5000, not counting the garage in the rear, making a total actual cost of $6500. The owner being a contractor built this house himself for a home, thereby eliminating the builders' profit. We have been offering this place for the very reasonable price of $6750, but a few days ago we were authorized to sell it for $5750. Such chances as this do not come often. For further information see SEWARD, with G. M. GIFFIN, 111-112 Merchants' Trust Bldg., 207 S. Broadway. A1569. M. 2110. Member L.A.R.B. 12

BLACK BROS.' MARKET LETTER.

We have a word of advice to offer to our many clients, and to the investing public.

This is distinctly a buyer's market. It is inevitable that present conditions should favor the strong as against the weak, but the advantages which the former enjoy over the latter are diminishing every day.

If you have idle money which ought to be profitably employed, do not waste any further time waiting for the phantom chance of buying real estate for next to nothing. Real estate can be purchased at this time at prices and upon terms which probably will never be duplicated again in the history of Los Angeles. Nobody is giving away real estate. If the owners of real estae have been able to hold on throughout the entire recent panic without being obliged to throw their holdings on the market at sacrifice prices, it stands to reason that they are in a much better position to continue doing so now and henceforth under the easier financial conditions prevailing.

It must be significant to the most casual observer that there have been no foreclosures in this city even during the worst periods of financial stress. There is a sound economic reason for this. Land is the basis of all wealth. Every other form of investment and security has suffered in value during the last twelve months except the basic form, real estate.

Real estate in a rapidly growing city like Los Angeles cannot depreciate in value.

Money has been offered on the Los Angeles Stock Exchange this week at 7 per cent. on time loans without takers. This demonstrates that a good deal of idle money is accumulating in this city in the hands of people who are looking for opportunities to purchase real estate from owners afraid of foreclosure possibilities.

Our advice to investors is to make the most of the extraordinary opportunities now legitimately open to them. The present conditions are very strongly in favor of the man who can afford to pay interest for the time being in the carrying of real estate investments. Shrewd real estate investors recognize these conditions and are trading in their less desirable classes of real estat as part payment upon more desirable and better located inside properties. In many instances favorable trades of this nature are made without involving the payment of cash in the transaction. For instance, if you own acreage or residence lots or similar real estate in a district where there is litle activity at present, it would, in the long run, be enormously in your favor to exchange this real estate as part payment upon property situated in the business or semi-business district of Los Angeles, giving or assuming a mortgage for the difference in value, provided you are able to pay interest on such mortgage for a year or more.

We are in an advantageous position to be of service to both parties in such a transaction, and will be glad to negotiate any trades offered to us, provided both parties to the trade are willing to do business upon the basis of cash values. We do not handle exchanges in which the value of the real estate is inflated for trading purposes.

We are in a position to handle transactions of any size, from the smallest to the largest.

FOR SALE—
PECKHAM'S TIPS.

I wonder how many men have learned a lesson during the late panic. Most men have been cutting down their expenses. In other words, men who have been in the habit of buying a suit of clothes every two or three months are trying to get along with one suit, and are making that last as long as possible. And it's the same in almost everything else except eating. All men have to eat to live, and I have yet to meet the man who will not eat every time the best he can afford.

So I want to know if there is any better business on earth than that of supplying Los Angeles and San Francisco with things they want to eat, for if there is any sure thing on earth it's furnishing food to the whole people. On my Corcoran lands you can raise anything you want to raise, and you can make money faster doing it than by any other business I know of. People want chickens, they want ham, they want garden truck, they want butter, milk and a host of other things, just the same as you do, and they are willing to pay for them just the same as you are.

This being so, don't you think it a mighty wise move to be the man that is supplying these things, instead of the man that is buying? And the best of it all is, on my Corcoran lands you can raise almost anything and raise it profitably. Space in this ad will not allow me to go into details, but if you want to make $2000 a year or better, call in and see me. Let me explain how you can do it. It's your move now, and what do you say?

Call, write or phone for my magazine, Profitable Realty, which gives you full details.

Free Stereopticon Lectures
In our own lecture room, 544 South Broadway, illustrated by beautiful colors, slides, giving the camera's story of the most prosperous, fastest growing and incomparably superior agricultural district in Southern California, where 5 acres means independence and where the homeseeker, health seeker, business man or farmer makes money from the start, surrounded by churches, schools and modern conveniences. Our settlers do no pioneering or work for posterity—they get results from the moment the plow is stuck in the ground. More can be accomplished on 5 acres at Beaumont than on a large ranch in some places, because the soil is stronger and richer and produces products that yield more for the labor done and area tilled.

HERMOSA.

FOR SALE—
When you go to Redondo to see the battleships stop an hour at Hermosa and see what a beautiful beach we have and note how cheap property is compared with other resorts. You can get an elevated lot, near the strand, from which the ocean view could never be cut off, with water, electric lights, gas and sewer, for $500; a soil lot, 50x125, 6 blocks from the strand for $250, or an ocean double front lot for $1350, on very easy terms. There is only a little strip of really good beach property near Los Angeles, and a good lot will be hard to get before many seasons have past. Investigate and ascertain the truth of this yourself. RICE & HUGHES CO., 409 Grosse Bldg., cor. Sixth and Spring. Home F1236. 12

FOR SALE—OCEAN VIEW ACREAGE ADjoining Hermosa Beach, with water, close to new railroad, only $400 per acre. The wonderful fertility of the soil is making this section famous. It is a rich, sandy loam, which will produce vegetables, flowers and small fruits the year around. It is practically frostless, easily cultivated and requires very little irrigation. One acre, properly cultivated, will insure a good living for a large family. There are but 6 acre lots left in this tract, and these are held at original prices. The lands adjoining are held at $1000 per acre. RICE & HUGHES CO., 409 Grosse Bldg., corner Sixth and Spring. Home E1236. 12

FOR SALE—CORNER LOT ON 19TH ST. and Hermosa ave. for $425 cash; this is worth $1000; now is the time to buy and build. A cottage at Hermosa will pay 15 to 20 per cent. as an investment. It is worth 1000 per cent. as a health proposition; Hermosa has gone through her crucial period. There will never be a chance to get in as cheap as now. RICE & HUGHES CO., 409 Grosse Bldg., cor. Sixth and Spring. Home F1236. 12

We have just received NOTICE from FIGHTING "BOB" EVANS not to attempt to run THE BIG TULARE-FRESNO-CO.'S EXCURSION during FLEET WEEK, as advertised for April 17th, while we tried to SHOW him that our attraction was FAR the better of the two, he could not see it, and intimated that should WE proceed as advertised, he would be compelled to turn the BUSINESS END of those fighting irons into the San Joaquin Valley, and as that is the greatest farmers and fruit growers district in the State, it would be a shame to spoil it. There were TWO reasons reasons why we finally consented to change the date to FRIDAY, APRIL, the 24th; they were BOB'S Reputation and OUR DESIRE to be peaceable citizens.

R. C. P. SMITH CO.
WEEKLY MARKET NOTES.

While there has been the predicted advance in the price of the Goldfield leaders during the past week, the feature of the local stock market has been Johnnie Consolidated. This stock during the week has simply monopolized the attention of the brokers and traders on both exchanges, and as it is the one stock that is now in the limelight, our clients will probably be willing to have these notes this week particularly directed toward this stock. The question is heard everywhere: "Is Johnnie a buy?" Our answer is emphatically "Yes." The only qualification we put on this is to buy with the knowledge that the stock may be driven still lower. Remember we say MAY BE DRIVEN LOWER. It has reached 5 cents during the past week and that price brought such an avalanche of buying orders into the market that the rebound from the low point was almost immediate. Therefore, while we are anxious to put our clients in as near the bottom as possible, we believe that it is a mistake to wait for lower prices for this stock. The price at present is simply absurd from the standpoint of the mine, and property values, and intending purchasers would do well to consider some of the following statements concerning this property.

1. Johnnie Consolidated at 5 cents per share represents a total valuation for the entire property of $150,000. This would just about cover the cost of the machinery, without taking the value of the mine, water system, buildings, or other property into consideration.

2. Many reputable and hard-headed mining men and experts have examined and sampled this mine, and their reports have all agreed that there was an abundance of ore carrying satisfactory values. They could not all be mistaken.

3. The mill on the property is new, modern and up to date, in every way, and it will handle the ore and save the values. The new president has had twenty-five years' experience in mining and his estimate of ore in sight is about two million dollars, or ten times the amount of the present selling price.

4. The party that has been the heavy seller of Johnnie Consolidated during the past few days could have sold his entire holdings for more than double the present selling price. This point is worthy of considerable thought on the part of investors. It is teeming with eloquence.

5. When insiders attempt to "get out from under" a worthless propositon they are careful to disguise their tracks and to conceal the real source of the selling orders. The opposite has been the case in the present manipulation of Johnnie Con.

To sum up the entire Johnnie situation we believe Johnnie is a buy, because it is stock in a real mine with a first class plant in operation, selling at half the price of many of the poorest prospects, because it is intrinsically worth more than its present selling price, because we believe the present price is due entirely to manipulation, because we have great faith in the new management and for several other reasons which we will be glad to explain to clients who are interested. In conclusion our advice to the public is not to take too seriously the bear arguments against the stock. There never was a bear raid in the world that was not accompanied by the most disconcerting rumors. Don't be influenced too much by the results of the next clean-up from the mill. Mill runs and stock prices sometimes travel in double harness. If you are already a Johnnie Consolidated stockholder, don't sell your stock. Don't be shaken out. On the other hand, add a little to your present holdings. Remember your experience in Bonnie Claire a few months ago. If you haven't any Johnnie take on a block at as low a price as you can get it, and we believe you will be rewarded by a most handsome profit before many weeks have flown.

Special attention to out-of-town accounts.

AN UNUSUAL OPPORTUNITY.
FOR CONSERVATIVE INVESTORS.

In fact, the best proposition ever offered to the public. An absolutely safe and paying business, the control of which will be in the hands of stockholders.

THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA DISTILLERIES COMPANY.

Will establish a plant in Colton, Cal., to manufacture brandies, wines, etc., from grapes, deciduous fruits and oranges. Only absolutely pure liquors, standing the highest government analysis are manufactured by this company's process. An unlimited field for an unlimited market, with every assurance, from past experience, that semi-annual dividends of 10 to 20 per cent. will be paid. To any one familiar with the distilling business, it is unnecessary to state what the probable profits will be from such an industry, established in the center of the greatest fruit district in the world. The incorporation carries with it the exclusive right to distill liquors by the celebrated "Watts' Process" in the six southern counties, where we are assured of enough fruit to guarantee operations double the period of any distillery on the coast. This is a strictly business proposition, not a "stock-jobbng" deal, but one that will stand every investigation. There is no promotion stock offered and only enough treasury stock will be sold to establish the necesary plant, which will be in operation within 60 days after the necessary amount has been subscribed. We have subscription contracts for $35,000 worth of the stock, which is all we can offer, the other half being pledged by the company to growers in the district. This block of stock should be fully subscribed for in one day. Liquor on exhibition and further information at office of JOHNSTON & LYON, 207-8 Lissner Bldg. 524 S. Spring st. F3792. 12

Well, what did I tell you about 29 Palms? It has proved itself; $15,000 per ton gold sounds good, and it is a fact; 29 Palms is a world beater. I based my reputation as a miner on the camp and as usual I have won out. Los Angeles has a camp only 160 miles due east of here that compares with any camp ever discovered. Great veins are in sight everywhere and they contain the gold. Among the best companies who have now producing ore are the:

Mohawk Herald ....30c per share
Gold Park Con......................30c per share
Italie Mining Co.

I have for sale a limited amount of two of these companies for sale. Buy, and buy quick, for these companies are the cream of the new district. I warn people who are going in to the new gold fields, to take their own bedding and enough provisions to last them two weeks; by that time stores will have supplies on hand to accommodate them. There is room for all, good water; the nearest R.R. point is Indio on the S. P. 29 Palms is 25 miles north of Indio; this road is only good for light teams; heavy freighting should go by way of Beaumont; rigs can be hired from the livery men of these two towns. If you want information, come and see me.

AERIAL CRAFT SAIL SMARTLY.

Kite Tournament of Schools Is Novel Display.

Sailors in the Air Reflect Credit on Makers.

Japan Subtly Conveys Its Regards to U. S.

Hundreds of adults, as well as school children, from all over the city attended the second annual kite tournament at Sixth and Jasmine streets yesterday afternoon, when 500 kites of all sizes and shapes were let loose in the air from a five-acre lot.

The spectacle was remarkable. There were all manner of flyers, from the little star kites that looked like specks when they rose fifty yards, to the big ten-foot giants, made by Willard and Paul Kemp of the Breed-street school, and Dana Wiley of Union school.

Conditions were just right for the contest. A stiff breeze swept across the field, and the boys had no difficulty in raising their kites. Every school in the city had at least one entry, and some had as many as fifteen. The boys made their kites themselves, and many of the aërial sailors reflected great credit on their builders, for the ingenuity and skill exhibited.

Of course, there were mishaps. With so many kites flying in so small an area, it was inevitable that strings got tangled up, kites butted into one another, some were dashed to the ground and smashed, sticks broke, paper tore, while some kites even failed to go up.

The competitors were divided into three divisions: Class A included the quarter-mile dash, highest flyer, yacht race, strongest puller, wireless operations and streamer exhibitions; class B, decorated kites, animal kites, dragon kites, kite flying for girls, sound-producing kites, parachute displays; class C, tetrahedral kites, kite inventions, model airships, photographs from kites.

JAPANESE COMPLIMENT.

The tournament opened with a display of all the kites for the selection of the most artistic creation. The kites constructed by two Japanese boys were among the prettiest. Yako Masouka of Washington school brought out an American eagle kite that soared majestically, and was one of the strongest pullers. Kigo Katayama of Boyd school had a great, square kite, five feet across, skillfully decorated with naval pictures and labelled "Welcome Fleet."

One of the most artistic flyers was a star kite, made by Percy Murray of Euclid school. It had a tail of five smaller stars, and floated beautifully.

Willard and Paul Kemp of Breed-street school had a novel kite, shaped like an arrowhead, and floating numerous streamers. It was ten feet high, and registered a pull of nearly thirty pounds. Dana Wiley of Union school also had a ten-foot kite.

A huge fish, six feet long, invented and made by 9-year-old Louis Wolf of McKinley school, was the most novel exhibit of the tournament. It soared beautifully, and was very realistic.

The Breed-street school boys had some yachts that traveled up the kite strings rapidly, and automatically discharging themselves when they reached the kite, descended at a fast clip.

The double-tail kite of Arthur Hoak of the Sixteenth-street school, was very artistic. It was made of blue paper and decorated with silver stars and crescents.

Frank Hetzel of the Thirtieth-street school, had on exhibition a small airship which he has invented and expects to fly soon. He did not attempt to send it up yesterday.

THE PRIZE WINNERS.

Prizes were awarded as follows:

1. Most artistic kite—First, Percy Murray; second, Thomas Broan.

2. (a.) Quarter-mile dash—Hiram Hamer; (2) decorated kite, first, Leroy Cleveland; second, Kizo Katajama; (c) reels, first, Frank Lee; second, Elgy McNary.

3. (a) Highest flyer—First, Newton Kendall; second, H. Vibor; (b) animal kite, fist, Louis Wolf; bird, Masuoka Naoichi, man, Walter Mosher; cannibal, Harry Warwick.

4. (a) Dragon kites—First, Taichi Isono; second, Leo Tilley; (b) box kites, first, Paul Swinson; second, Will Cort.

5. Kite invention, Lewis Wolt.

6. Model airship, Frank Hetzel.

7. (a) Streamer exhibition—First, Nat Stockwell; second, Beatrice Tearce; (b) parachute display, Arthur Dorfmeier.

The judges were Melville Dozier, Miss Hunt, and Theodore Fulton, class A.; F. A. Bouelle, N. C. Bettinger, Mrs. W. Rogers, Miss Clark, class B.; C. J. Fox, F. F. Bunker, Mrs. Freeman, E. J. Lickley, class C. Charles M. Miller and C. A. Kuno were the managers of the tournament.

HANDY AND HELPFUL.

A souvenir programme of the visit of the fleet to Los Angeles, a handy and helpful guide to citizens, tourists and visiting naval men, has been published by Lynch & McDougall. It is a creditable piece of work, from the maritime cover in blue adorned with triple photographs in red of Admiral Evans, President Roosevelt and Gov. Gillett, to the final pages giving details of the careers of admirals and captains. In between is a mass of information about the city and a copy of the unofficial programme. No official document will be issued, but this may be said to fill the bill.

A San Francisco Print Shop Opportunity

A most complete plant—everything new—equipped about a year ago at an outlay of $24,000.00; consisting of Miehlie Cylinders, Colt's Armory, Universal, Golding Jobbers, Bronzing Machine, Cutters, Numbering Machines, Stitchers, Perforator, Punches and Dies. All machines have individual motor power.

New type in the best stands and cases obtainable—complete racks of furniture and 3 perfect imposing stones, complete stock department, composing, press, bindery and office rooms all on one spacious ground floor. This shop has paid $1200 net profits a month; the owner ceased operating this plant, now devoting his time professionally.

Everything in the plant is new and will be sold outright or to a man or men with printing sense an arrangement can be made for operating, which will assure a profitable investment. Business conditions in San Francisco are now better than they have ever been in the history of the city.

CHURCH BOYS DO GOOD WORK.

EXCITING TRACK MEET WON BY VERNON CLASS.

Finishes With Thirty-three Points to Twenty-nine for Team from the First Congregational—Lillard Runs Hundred Yards in Fast Time. Eight Teams Are Entered.

Muscular Christianity had its chance yesterday, when the Baraca class from Vernon Congregational Church took first place among eight contestants in the first annual track meet of the Baraca League, held on Occidental campus. The eight churches entered finished with the following scores: Vernon Congregational, 33; First Congregational, 29; Immanuel Presbyterian, 24; University M. E., 16; Central Baptist, 8; Third Presbyterian, 7; First Methodist, 0; St. James M. E., 0.

The squads entered were mostly from picked-up teams, and the showings made were not startling. Carter of the University M. E. Church showed himself a good all-round athlete, taking firsts in the 220 dash and the broad jump, and a third in the 100-yard dash. Lillard of Vernon won the final heat of the century event in 10 2-5s., after having finished his trial heat in 10 3-5. "Micky" McClure of the First Congregational, who has already established a record on the Los Angeles High School track team, won the 440 dash in the fair time of 55 4-5s.

The high hurdles proved to be little more than a loafing contest, Clapp of the Central Baptist finally rambling across the finish in 18 3-5s. Huntsberger and Clark finished in the order named.

The 100-yard dash was a snap for Lillard, who led through the whole distance and finished yards ahead of a scattered field.

Holmes of the University M. E. Church had an equally easy time in the mile, the real fight being between Wallace and Fuller, for second place, the former finally winning by a scant margin.

Additional excitement was lent to the relay race by the fact that the final score was to be decided by it, the preliminary standing being Vernon 28, First Congregational 26, Immanuel 23. Vernon succeeded in maintaining her supremacy, however, Atkins winning in a neck-and-neck finish from Olmstead of the First Congregational. Immanuel Presbyterian took third.

The field events were uninteresting. Lane of Immanuel made 106 feet with the hammer in practice, but was prevented by a conflict of entries from taking part in the official event, first place going to Wood, with a mediocre throw of a trifle over seventy-eight feet.

At the close of the meet ribbons were distributed to the winners.

The Baraca League is composed of twenty-five Baraca Bible classes from among the various churches of the city. These classes are composed of young men of from 16 to 25 years, and are organized as an adjunct to the regular Sunday-schools of the churches.

The officers of the league are as fololws: E. H. Barrett, president; W. L. Cammerrer, vice-president; C. L. Atkins, recording secretary; W. Cooper, corresponding secretary; G. Taylor, treasurer. William Cooper is manager of the athletic department. The results:

The 120-yard high hurdles: Won by Clapp (Cent. Bap.;) Huntsberger (Im. Presb.) second; Clark (First Con.,) third; time, 18 3-5s.

The 100-yard dash: Won by Lillard (Vernon Con.;) Stanleigh (Im. Pres.,) second; Carter (Univ. M. E.,) third; time, 10 2-5s.

THE FURNISHED ROOMS YOU WANT ADVERTISED DAILY
IN—
The Los Angeles Times
THE BEST DAILY NEWSPAPER
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISEMENTS.

IT is such a waste of time to walk up one street and down another looking for a sign announcing a room to rent.

Turn to the classified pages of this paper any day and you will find the kind of a room you want at the price you care to pay.

The better class of people--and they are the kind with whom you want to live--do not put signs in their windows or on their front door. They do not want to parade their private business to their neighbors. Refined people put a small Want Ad in The Times--they are sure that it will be seen by an intelligent young man or woman--that they will rent their rooms without their neighbors knowing all about their affairs.

Only the best rooms and apartments are advertised. You are always sure to see them in the columns of The Times, either Daily or Sunday.

COOKING CONTEST.

FINAL BREAD BATCH GOES INTO OVEN.

Waffles, Rolls, Muffins and Other Dainties in the Same Baking—Way Now Clear for the Great Symposium of Spanish Dishes.

AWARD of prizes for recipes printed last Sunday:

First, $5—Mrs. A. R. Fernald, Orange, Cal.; Parker House rolls.

Second, $3—Alice Reynolds, Long Beach, Cal.; white bread.

Third, $1—Mina Kitching, Oceanside, Cal.; waffles.

Popular beyond all expectation, the bread and rolls contest, which includes many other good things, comes to an end with the publication of the accompanying generous installment. It has taken five weeks, with a liberal allotment of space each Sunday, to print all the contributions that have been sent to The Times Chef, and in addition there were many that could not be used because of late arrival, failure of contributors to sign their names, and the oversight of many in writing on both sides of the paper. No other contest of this kind ever brought forth so many excellent formulas for all sorts of dishes, and already it is certain that the forthcoming Times Cookbook No. 2 will be at least double the size of the one published three years ago. The last book contained about 1000 recipes of various kinds; the next one promises to contain more than 2000.

Now that bread and rolls are out of the way, the Spanish dishes will be taken up at once. About 150 of these are in course of preparation for publication and the first installment will appear next Sunday. From the inquiries that have been received and from the contributions that have come in, the popularity and success of this department are assured from the start. There is a great treat in store for all housewives in this collection of recipes for dishes with a distinctively Southwestern flavor, and they are bound to be especially interesting to newcomers and to the thousands of sojourners here from the East.

In connection with the Spanish recipes there will be printed coupons on which the public will have an opportunity to register its verdict as to the respective merits of the various contributions, the three contestants receiving the largest number of votes to have the prize awards each week.

In the morning add salt and flour enough to make a moderately stiff dough, and again set to rise in a warm place; when light, knead down and set to rise once more. Finally, knead down again and place in a large stone crock or bowl, cover tightly to prevent the surface from drying and set away in a cool place. When needed, turn out on a moulding board, cut off the quantity required, place the remainder back in the crock or bowl and set away as before; roll out and cut the dough on the board the same as for soda biscuit and bake at once.

In each circle of the dough put 1 teaspoon of this prune paste. Pinch the edges of the dough together over the paste and place this side down, in baking tin. When light, bake. Instead of bread sponge, Parker House roll mixture may be used. Recipe: One pint milk, into which put 3 tablespoons butter, 1 tablespoon sugar, 1 teaspoon salt; let come to a boil. When cool, add 1 cake compressed yeast, which has been dissolved in 1 cup water. Add about 2 quarts flour. Knead 15 minutes. Let rise.

HARLEQUIN SANDWICH.—(Miss Emilia Lundberg, Coronado.) Bake white bread in one round lard pail and entire wheat in another of the same size. Put this on top of the brown and prepare another brown one simply buttered for the top slice. $5.50 for My $11.50, $12, $13 Waists
$6.75 for My $15, $16, $16.50 Waists
Others Up to $25.00

It goes without saying that such a collection of exquisite waists was never before exhibited in this city. There are over 1000, no two alike, every one hand-made and hand-embroidered. Plain tailor-made, others elaborately trimmed. Prices average about 25c on the dollar.

I shall also sell out a sample line of hand-embroidered table linen, doilies, center-pieces, etc., at about one-quarter retail price.

NOTE—The store-room which I have rented is at 547 So. Broadway—just about opposite Mercantile Place. I expect the sale to last only a short time. You will find this an opportunity to buy the loveliest high grade waists on the market at a small portion of their worth.

Is Our Second Birthday

—in other words, two years ago on that day we published the first advertisement of the sale of Glendale Valley View Tract lots. Our success has been phenomenal. We sold twenty and thirty lots each day until the San Francisco disaster put a temporary stop to things.

We Will Celebrate

Tuesday, April 14th, in a unique manner. We had 763 lots to sell two years ago. Today we have less than 100. We had no houses built two years ago—today there are over 126. We had no improvements in two years ago—today over $35,000 are in and paid for.

By Giving Away a Lot of money, we will celebrate the two-year anniversary in a manner that will always be remembered by the fortunate recipients. This is how we're going to do it—every purchaser of a lot on that day will receive a credit on his purchase. This credit will be determined in the order in which the purchase is made. First purchasers will have the largest credits.

Come Early and Get Yours

Prices will not be changed—nor will terms. We are selling the best lots in Glendale for the least money, and on the easiest terms—$10 down and $10 per month; no interest or taxes. Big lots for $325 and up. Lots with cement walks and curbs, $400 and up. All streets graded, water piped, electricity wired. Every improvement in and paid for. Close to car line. Splendid schools, churches, stores—in fact, all that one could ask for for a home site.

Office open all day Sunday. Make your selection today.

THE MARKETS.

LOCAL PRODUCE MARKET.

Last week was uneventful in local markets. Green vegetables showed slight increases yesterday. Citrus fruits of all kinds were plentiful and in demand. Other fruits sold slowly. Blackberries have become so plentiful that prices yesterday dropped to 15 cents a basket. Raspberries are scarcer and stay at 25 cents. Straws sold down to 4 cents and as high as 6 cents per basket.

Eggs advanced 2 cents for candled selects, being quoted at 21 cents, while the others stayed at 19. The reasons are two, primarily smaller receipts, and, second, the movement into storage. Street sales have been heavy right along and on 'change there have been some good trades. Fifty-five cases of locals and 25 of northerns were sold yesterday and receipts were 847 cases.

Butter was exceedingly weak, owing to the heaviest receipts of that commodity in many months. These totaled 27,409 pounds and offerings were large on both creamery extras and firsts. Cooking butter moved freely throughout the week.

Heavy cheese arrivals had little effect on prices and offerings were only ordinary. Northern full cream sold in small quantities and receipts, which totaled 7726 pounds, were composed chiefly of that variety.

Potato arrivals were only 238 sacks and firmness was noticeable in all grades. Heavy wagon arrivals from fields in the immediate vicinity of the city have helped materially in stopping an advance. New potatoes of all varieties are rather small, owing to lack of rain.

Onion receipts were only 47 sacks yesterday. The big arrivals of the week brought a reduction in all but first-grade Red Globes from Colorado. Bermudas are selling at an even $2.50 a crate. Pinks were the only beans offered heavily, and arrivals were but six sacks. Sweet potato receipts were 51 sacks and the yellow variety was the best seller. Red sweets are plentiful.

The meat advance has been regular and hams and bacon went up 2 cents, wholesale, during the past week. Fish good sellers and plentiful in nearly all lines. Poultry moves better and heavier receipts have been the rule.

LOS ANGELES STOCK EXCHANGE.

JOHNNIE STILL HOLDS FLOOR.

SHARES DUMPED ON MARKET BY HUNDRED THOUSAND.

Broker With Seemingly Limitless Order to Sell Meets Another With Apparently as Large Instructions to Buy—General List Entirely Neglected—Few Price Changes.

More than 300,000 shares of Johnnie Consolidated were dumped on the Los Angeles Stock Exchange yesterday during the mining call. Prices fluctuated between 5¼ and 5¾, closing at 5¾. One broker seemed to have a limitless order to sell all the market would take at the best possible price. Another appeared to have almost as large an order to buy, and the transactions of the two represented the greater part of the day's business.

Outside Johnnie there was no business. The remainder of the mining share list was inactive, with prices at about previous levels.

The general list was absolutely neglected during the early call, as every trader was anxiously awaiting the opening of the mining call.

Associated Oil closed at 27.00@27.75, unchanged. Central and Columbia were unchanged also. The bid for Fullerton Oil was up to 42½, with none offered. Globe was bid up to 13 and offered at 15. Rice Ranch closed at 79 bid, with none in the market, the quotation showing a decline of 2 points. Union was at 207.25@209.00, up a fraction on the bid. United Petroleum was at 245.00@270.00, down 5 points on the bid. The close on Western Union was at 85.00@110.00.

Home Preferred was quoted at 46.87½@47.75, a rise of ⅛ in the bid, while the asked was unchanged. Seven dollars was offered for Common, which was held at 10.00. United States Long Distance was offered down to 46.50 and bid at 41.00.

LOS ANGELES-NEVADA EXCHANGE.

MARKET SHOWS FIRMER TONE.

RAWHIDE SHARES FIRM FEATURE OF TRADING.

Aside from Johnnie Consolidated Stocks Keep Their Level and Brokers Look for an Active Week—Over Half-Million Shares Sold in Past Six Days.

Johnnie Consolidated led off on the Los Angeles-Nevada Mining Exchange yesterday, and sales were 79,000 shares, bringing the total trade of the day on both exchanges to 425,000 shares. Prices wavered from 5¼ to 5⅞, with buyer-thirty sales at 6. The close was at 5½@6.

Aside from Johnnie, the market showed a rather favorable tone, and many predictions were made than an active week is ahead of the brokers.

Attempts to deal in Consolidated failed as the bidding was weak and far below the market, as reflected by the San Francisco quotations. The close was without a bid, and an offering at 6.00. Daisy was fairly firm, sales being at 1.37 cash, with the close at 1.36 bid—and none in the market.

Florence was fractionally firmer, closing at 4.27½@4.35, a 2½-point rise on the bid and a 5-point gain in the asked price. Sales were registered at 4.27½. Combination Fraction failed to again make any advance, although the stock was firm at previous prices. Sales totaled 300 shares at 68. The close was at 67@68, off 1 point in the asked. Jumbo Extension closed at 34@35, an advance of 3 points for the bid and 2 for the holding price. Sales were made at 33@34, 300 shares changing hands.

Among the Tonopahs, Montana was active, selling at 1.85, and closing at 1.77½@1.90, off 2½ for the bid and unchanged from the preceding close in the asked price. Belmont remained strong, but was not handled, closing at 1.35@1.45.

Balloon Hill Fraction, one of the Rawhide stocks, was another firm feature of the list, 3000 shares being handled at 4, an advance of ¼. The close was particularly firm at 3¾@4¼. Rawhide Catnip, another from the new camp, was handled at 10¼@11, and closed at 11@11¼, a rise of ½ and ¾ respectively, compared with the preceding close.

There was light trading in several other issues. Eureka sold at 1, and Black Butte Extension at 2. Triangle was handled at 7, with Bonnie Claire selling at 18, and closing at 17½@19½. Nevada Hills was firm, 200 shares being sold at 2.65. The close was strong at 2.65@2.70. Milltown Fraction sold at 1¾. Others were sluggish.

Last week was an active one on the exchange. Following are the total sales for the six days.

COURT DECISION HELPS MARKET.

INTEREST IN STOCKS CENTERS IN TRACTION AND GAS.

General List, However, Is Inclined to Sag, Failing to Receive Sympathetic Support from the Condition of Securities of the Public Utilities Corporations.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, April 11.—Active interest in stocks today narrowed to the group of securities of the public utilities corporations supplying New York City. The professed reason for the volatile rise in that group was the advantage to accrue to the traction companies by absolution through judicial decision from the obligation to supply transfers between the Third avenue and old Metropolitan Street Railway lines. Consolidated gas was brought into the movement by the action on the part of the company to obtain release of the fund tied up in the hands of the court out of the charges in excess of the 80 cent rate, the enforcement of which has been successfully contested in the courts. The bonds of the companies shared with the stocks in the advance. This movement had failed of sympathetic effect on the general list, which was inclined to sag. The selling was moderate but there was no important demand to offset it. Copper securities suffered from some positive depression to account for the continued decline in the price of the metal. A special explanation advanced today for that decline was the resale from China of some speculative holdings of copper bought previously. Discouragement was perceptible over the iron and steel outlook and rumors were reiterated of an intended cut in prices as soon as financial conditions promise resources to the railroads to renew purchases of materials. The announcement of an increased sale of $30,000,000 out of a $50,000,000 issue of bonds to be authorized by the stockholders of the Delaware and Hudson to fund other indebtedness was regarded as an expression of confidence in the early improvement of the investment situation. The accumulation of the banking surplus explains the increasing ease of the money market and a further advance in sterling exchange rates today showed the rising tendency to remit to foreign money markets. The March agricultural exports fell over $17,000,000 below the value of those of March last year, owing to heavy shrinkage in cotton exports in each month since last fall's financial crisis sent forward our commodities to market with a rush. Explanation of the rising tendency of foreign exchange rates is found in this showing. Some of the speculative bond issues made buoyant advances but the bond division otherwise was dull and steady. Total sales, par value, $2,560,000. U. S. 2's registered have declined 1-8 per cent. on call during the week.

To The Investing Public:

You want to make money. I want to help you. The best thing in oil stocks in California today, at anything under $40.00 per share, is Associated. This Company is doing a safe and conservative business. It is adding to its oil territory, its production and the volume of its business, and is paying its debts, instead of paying monthly dividends, which is more than many dividend paying oil companies can say. Its net gain for the year 1907 was $1,602,702.14. This stock is bound to go to par, or better, as soon as it is on a permanent dividend paying basis, which time must come soon, under its present business policy. Put some of your savings into this stock; let it lay, and you will reap a harvest.

Yours truly,

MAY DELIVERY SHOWS GREATEST STRENGTH IN MARKET.

Bull Leaders and Shorts Are Active Bidders Forcing Prices Skyward, but Reaction of About One Cent Is Caused by Liberal Realizing Sales Toward Close.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

CHICAGO, April 11.—The wheat market was strong all day, the May delivery showing the greatest strength owing to the apparently congested condition of that option.

The principal bullish influence was the dry weather in the Southwest. The smallness of the primary movement, however, was an important factor.

Bull leaders and shorts were active bidders for wheat the greater part of the day. This demand forced prices 1 1-8 to 2 3-4 above the lowest point. A reaction of about one cent occurred during the final half hour's business because of liberal realizing sales, but the market closed firm.

May opened 1-4@3-8 to 1@1 1-8 higher at 91¾ to 92 1-4, advanced to 93 1-4 and closed at 92 1-4.

Small receipts and the sharp advance in wheat brought a brisk demand for corn, which resulted in material gain in the price of all deliveries. The close was strong. May closed at 67 7-8@68. Oats displayed considerable firmness. May closed at 53 3-8.

Provisions were firm because of strength of grain and because of a 5-cent advance in live hogs, trade was off small proportions. At the close, May pork was up 7½; lard was 2½ higher, and ribs were 2½@5.

Cash quotations were as follows: Flour was steady; winter patents, 4.25@4.75; straights, 3.90@4.30; spring patents, 4.90@5.10; straights, 4.00@4.50; bakers, 3.10@4.10; No. 2 spring wheat, 94@1.04; No. 2 red, 91½@92½; No. 2 corn, 67½@68; No. 2 yellow, 68@68½; No. 2 oats, 52½@53; No. 2 white, 54; No. 3 white, 50½@53½; No. 2 rye, 76@78; fair to choice malting barley, 73@83; No. 1 northwestern flaxseed, 1.18; prime timothy seed, 4.50; short ribs, sides (loose), 6.62½@7.12½; mess pork, per bbl., 12.37½@12.50; lard, per 100 lbs., 8.25; whisky, basis of high wines, 1.30.

CHANNEL PEAK MINING COMPANY

Why is the Channel Peak Mining Company's stock a safe investment for people of moderate means, as well as the capitalist?

1. Because it is not a gambling stock listed on the exchanges to be bulled and beared by stock manipulators. It is selling now at twenty-five cents for a short time only. If there is ever any more treasury stock put on the market, it will be after the first of next August, and will not be sold for less than two dollars and fifty cents per share.

2. Because the officers, directors and many of the stockholders are some of the most prominent business men of Fresno county, whose reputations for business honesty and integrity is unimpeachable. Therefore every one, no matter how small their investment may be, will get a square deal.

3. The development work being nearly completed, so that the company will begin to extract its rich gravels by the middle of next July, they can reasonably expect to pay a 5 to 10 per cent. dividend on the par value of their stock by next December, as a Christmas gift to every man, woman and child who is lucky enough to own a few shares of this stock.

During the next year the company expects to pay quarterly dividends and the stock will continue to grow more and more valuable as the work advances, so that more men can be employed to extract the gravels which contain the rich deposits of gold, thus increasing the size of the quarterly dividends.

4. If you want a block of this stock and are short of money to take the number of shares you want, you can make a small payment down and arrange to pay the balance at a later date; the stock to be placed in escrow until that date. We can do this, for we don't need the money now. We don't owe anybody a dollar and have money in the bank. But we will need the money later on and you must get the stock now or you may never get it at the present price.

My room is now No. 234, Hollenbeck Hotel.

Mrs. Daniels is here with me and we would be pleased to have the ladies, as well as the gentlemen, who are seeking a safe investment for their savings, call any time most convenient to you, to ask for any information you wish.

P. S.—If more convenient for you, call on the Los Angeles representative, Mr. F. R. Dunlap, No. 1021 Albany street.

YOU lost money all last week if you were not in touch with us.

You would have made money if you were.

Our instantaneous PRIVATE WIRE SERVICE with the San Francisco Exchange and New York Curb is the key to the situation. How do you expect to know ALL that's doing from the San Francisco Exchange to the New York Curb, unless you do business with brokers having a private wire and who get the news as it happens and long before the average trader hears of it, and put it all at the disposal of their clients.

In our daily market letter of Monday we said that Belmont was in good position for a bulge. It was then $1.07½. We did not dream this, we got it straight from the Philadelphia brokerage house that is "inside" on Belmont. It sold Friday at $1.47½; $400 profit on every thousand shares to those who took advantage of our information.

We told our people Tuesday that Goldfield Con. was getting scarce in San Francisco and to buy it quick at $5⅜. It touched $6 Friday, and our New York correspondent says it's good for $7 in two weeks.

We told our traders that Sandstorm was being manipulated and that it was good for more money. Watch it and see if we know what is going on.

We were as right as a "golden guinea" on Great Bend all last week. Did you get in on the 45 point play?

To be out of quick touch with San Francisco and New York where the quotations are made is to be out of the market.

For the benefit of our customers who cannot come to our office every day, we are issuing a FREE DAILY MARKET LETTER, which is mailed every night after the close. In this letter we give the opening, high, low, and closing bid prices on all the active stocks of each day's trading, besides the NEWS about the market, with the reasons why.

The second story will be taken up with the theater balcony, ladies' parlor, smoking-room and five studios, each studio consisting of one large room and a small anteroom. The third, fourth and fifth floors will be divided into assembly rooms of various sizes. The sixth floor will be devoted to twenty-four studios, The building will be heated by steam and an electric elevator system installed. It will have pressed brick front and an entrance of marble and tile. The plans are by Theodore A. Eisen.

J. D. Thompson has the contract to build a three-story "Class C" store and apartment building on the southeast corner of Sixth street and Towne avenue, for C. H. Edwards. WHO'S RESPONSIBLE?

BURDEN RESTS ON THE VOTERS.

FORMER SENATOR BULLA ON THE ETHICS OF POLITICS.

In Talk at City Club He Exposes Fallacies of Bosses and Would-be Reformers—Urges Importance of Affiliation With and Active Support of Political Organization.

Former State Senator Robert N. Bulla, president of the Union League, delivered a stirring address before the City Club at its noon luncheon yesterday on "The Ethics of Politics."

Speaking from the point of view of the business man in politics, Mr. Bulla exposed a number of fallacies of both bosses and would-be reformers. For years Mr. Bulla has waged a consistent warfare against bossism in California politics. Through the light of experience, he said that the English language is not adequate to express his contempt for a man who, after declaring his allegiance to a political party and participating in its caucuses, passes the word down the line to vote for the nominee of another party.

Mr. Bulla said that every voter must determine in accordance with his own judgment whether he can do more for the best interests of the community by participating in a non-partisan movement than by working for the same objects with the party organization. But the president of the Union League has only contempt for the man who, after once placing his hand to the plow, turns back.

Mr. Bulla spoke in part as follows:

"I have no hesitation in saying that the supreme—the very highest duty—of good citizenship is to assist by all honorable efforts and means in the nomination and election of honest, upright, competent men to official position.

"We can no more have good government administered by corrupt, evil-minded and incompetent officials than can the prince of evil discharge the duties of the angel of light.

"I would far rather live under the worst form of government, conducted by able, high-minded men than under the most perfect system, directed by those who are incapable of or unwilling to perform the duties and functions devolving upon them.

"If, then, this necessity for the election of good men exists, there must be some available means of accomplishing such a result.

"How can this purpose be achieved?

"In the first place, it is the duty of every voter to connect himself with some political organization; not simply to accept passively the platforms or principles of a political party, but openly to declare his adherence to that party which most enarly coincides with his individual views; and to give as liberally as he can of his time, his effort and his substance to the upholding and the strengthening of the objects and tenets of that party.

"In certain branches of our government, notably in the administration of our municipal affairs, it is certainly desirable to disregard partisan affiliations along political lines. It can make but little difference whether the Mayor of a city be a protectionist or a free-trader, while it is of the utmost importance that he be an honest, level-headed man of sound morals and good executive ability.

"There never was a city, county or State disgraced with corrupt or incompetent officials which could not throw off the burden by combined effort of those who deplore and generally bewail such conditions. And every individual, blessed with the privilege of the elective franchise, owes it as a sacred and inviolable duty to himself, his family, his country and his God to do what within him lies to prevent political fraud and corruption and to assist in the selection of honest and competent officials, and the everlasting destruction and annihilation of every apology for a man who sets himself up as a political dictator, either great or small.

"It necessarily follows that it is the duty of good men not only to assist in the selection of proper officials, but to become the candidates for office, and to use all honorable and upright means to accomplish their aspirations."

"Once, in the prosecution of my business, I found it necessary to apply for a reduction of freight rates between certain points in Southern California, and, after prosecuting my efforts for a time, was informed frankly by the railroad officials that the only way to accomplish my purpose was to pay the freight according to schedule, and accept a rebate from the railroad company. Perhaps many of you, perhaps all of you, will be surprised to hear that I declined to accept the company's proposition, and, upon informing a friend of mine, high in church and social circles in this city, of my action, was politely told that I was a well-known kind of fool for what I had done.

"Ever since then when I hear shippers denouncing the railroads for the giving of rebates, which, permit me to say, is the most inexcusable, unjustifiable and wickedly pernicious practice ever tolerated in business, I wonder whether the character of their domiciles is such as to justify the indiscriminate hurling of geological specimens at the railroad corporations."

Kokomo Woman Gives Fortune

To Help Women Who Suffer

In the past few years Mrs. Cora B. Miller has spent $125,000.00 in giving medical treatment to afflicted women.

Sometime ago we announced in the columns of this paper that she would send free treatment to every woman who suffered from female diseases or piles.

More than a million women have accepted this generous offer, and as Mrs. Miller is still receiving requests from thousands of women from all parts of the world, who have not yet used the remedy, she has decided to continue the offer for awhile longer, at least.

This is the simple, mild and harmless preparation that has cured so many women in the privacy of their own homes after doctors and other remedies failed.

It is especially prepared for the speedy and permanent cure of leucorrhoea or whitish discharges, ulceration, displacements or falling of the womb, profuse, scanty or painful periods, uterine or ovarian tumors or growths; also pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing down feelings, nervousness, creeping feeling up the spine, melancholy, desire to cry, hot flashes, weariness and piles from any cause, or no matter of how long standing.

Every woman sufferer, unable to find relief, who will write Mrs. Miller now without delay, will receive by mail free of charge, a 50-cent box of this simple home remedy, also a book with explanatory illustrations showing why women suffer and how they can easily cure themselves at home without the aid of a physician.

Don't suffer another day, but write at once to Mrs. Cora B. Miller, 5714 Miller Building, Kokomo, Indiana.

FOR PIMPLES, TOO.

New Discovery Cures Eczema and Eradicates Minor Skin Troubles Over Night.

A few months ago the dispensers of poslam, the new discovery for the cure of eczema, decided to allow the druggists of the country to handle it. Previous to that time it could only be obtained direct from the laboratories.

Since this change in the method of distribution, poslam has met with the most phenomenal success of anything introduced to the drug trade in the last 30 years. All leading druggists, including the Owl Drug Co. in Los Angeles, are now carrying the special 50-cent size recently adopted, also the $2 jar.

This great success is not surprising when it is remembered that, in eczema cases, poslam stops the itching with first application, proceeds to heal immediately, and cures chronic cases in a few weeks. In minor skin troubles, such as pimples, blackheads, acne, herpes, blotches, rash, etc., results show after an overnight application. Experimental samples of poslam are sent to any one by mail free of charge, by the Emergency Laboratories, 32 West Twenty-fifth street, New York City.

Photograph of a giant artesian well on the Big Field Ranch, sufficient to irrigate a section of land. The Big Field Ranch lies in the heart of the artesian belt. Artesian water means no pumping plants, no water litigation, no water stock to buy, no yearly tax for water.

No Dry Years---Inexhaustible Water

Big Field Ranch

California's Richest Soil $25 Acre

More Than Three-quarters of the Ranch Already Sold

The farmer who looks at the above photograph will appreciate what such a water supply means.

The farmer who depends on rain, is a gambler.

He never knows whether his crop will be a total loss, partial loss or a success.

If you have an artesian well, you can get rain by opening the valve. You can get dry weather by shutting the valve. You can get all the water you want, whenever you want it, at no cost whatever.

During a dry season, the farmer who has irrigated land actually makes more money than ever on account of high prices.

No water system can compare with artesian wells. They never fail, never give out.

Call at our office for booklets, maps, etc., which give full information of this wonderfully fertile land in the San Joaquin Valley. It is undoubtedly the greatest land bargain offered in 20 years. Over 18,000 acres sold. Less than one-quarter remains. Land is absolutely level, no grading necessary. Ideal soil for grapes, alfalfa, sugar beets, peaches, barley and everything except citrus fruits. One crop will pay for it. Price $25 per acre, ¼ cash, balance in 3 years.

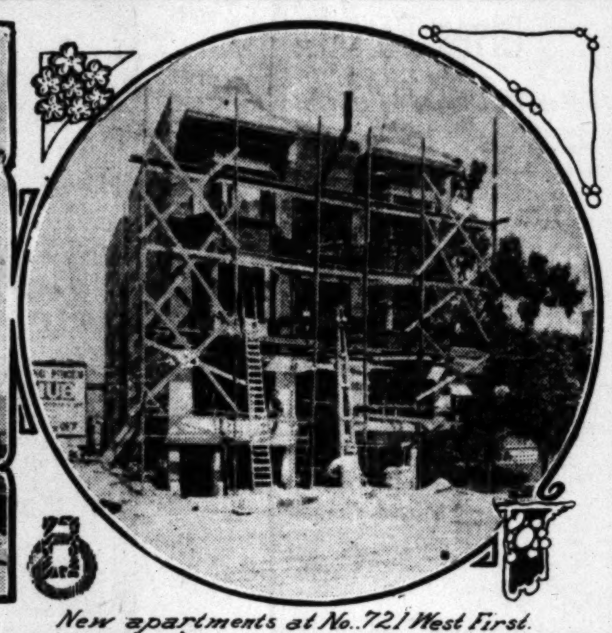
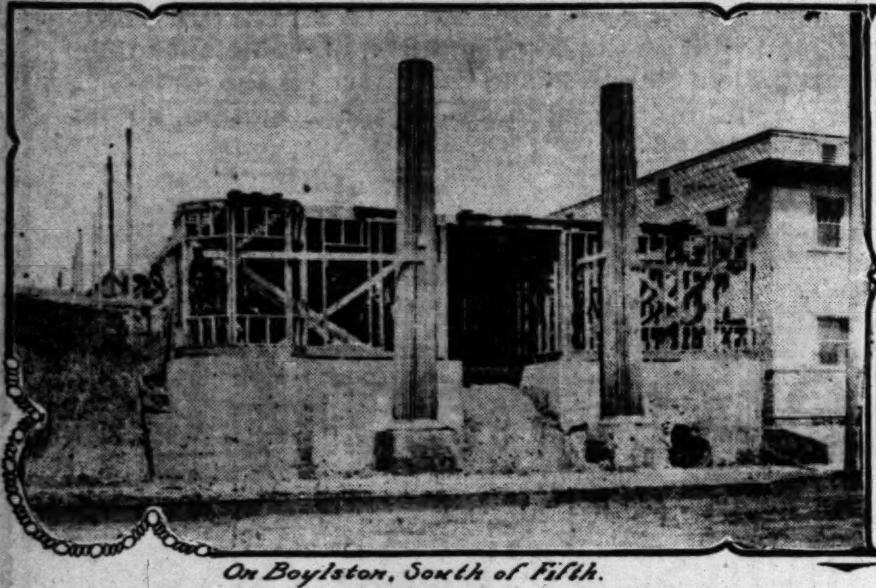
Houses, Lots and Lands—Review of Building and Development Continue

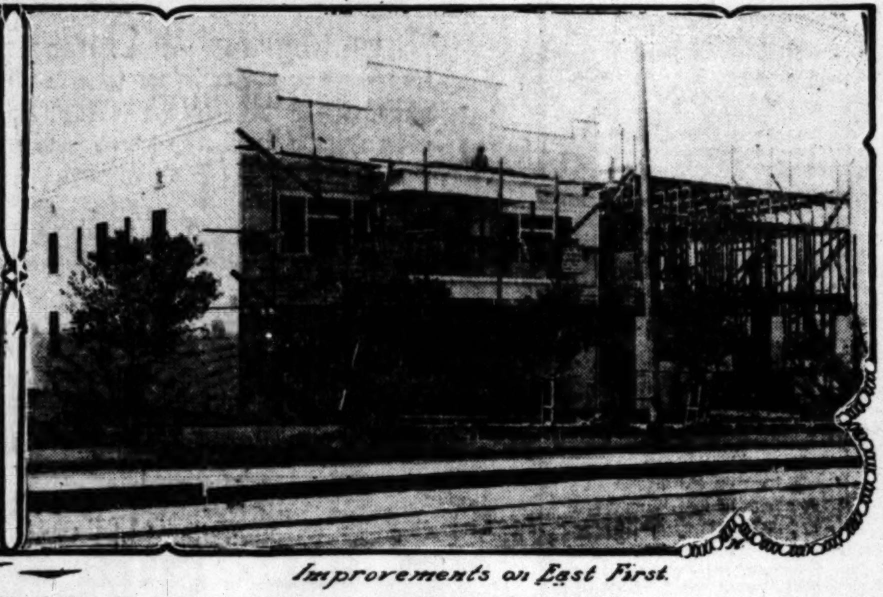
Brick apartment building at Sixth and Loomis.



New apartments at No. 721 West First.



On Boylston, South of Fifth.



Improvements on East First.

Building apartments in many sections, showing growth of Los Angeles to accommodate increased population.

CITY'S GROWTH.

BUILDING IN MANY PARTS.

FLATS AND APARTMENTS ARE MEETING DEMAND.

Modern Conveniences Near Business Center Needed — Development Apparent in All Dorections. Sections Adjacent to City's Heart Offer Numerous Sites.

The demand for modern flats and apartments is causing a considerable building activity in a dozen different sections in Los Angeles. West and east, and to the south, the two and three-story buildings of either frame or brick construction are rising, to meet the growing demand of the workers who find employment in the busy heart of the city, who must live within easy walking or short riding distance of the places where they are employed.

On the hills west of Hill street, as far as Westlake Park, especially, is the activity apparent. New houses of substantial construction are being built here, and the region from Temple street as far south as Pico can no longer be termed a residence portion, but an apartment-house and flat-building section, in which there are numerous growing business centers, supplying the wants of the dwellers in the near-by structures.

At No. 721 West First street, G. W. Lincoln is building a three-story and basement building, containing six spacious flats and two store rooms. There are four large rooms in each flat, in addition to the pantry, bathroom and numerous closets. Excellent workmanship and the best materials have made the building a model of this class of construction. The interior will be finished in hard woods, and there will be modern features, such as wall beds, telephones, etc. A fine view can be obtained from the roof, and easy access to this is assured bv a stair to the roof level, opening into a light and airy pergola. The building will cost about $15,000.

The northeast corner of Sixth and Loomis streets, or, to be exact, Sixth and Sixth streets, is being improved with a three-story brick building by Joseph H. Call. The building is 44x84½ feet in size, and contains two four-room and four six-room flats. There are two flats to each floor. The building will be finished in slash-grained Oregon pine in the interior, and will have polished floors. It is a Class C structure, and will cost $10,000. Garret & Bixby are the architects.

A. J. Barnes is improving a lot at No. 511 South Boylston street, with a handsome two-story frame apartment. The lot is 50x116 feet, and the building will about cover it. There will be fifty rooms in the structure, divided into two and three-room apartments, with every modern feature installed. There will be seven apartments on each floor. The building will have a plastered exterior, and will cost about $13,000. Adjoining this building is another frame apartment-house just completed. There have been numerous such structures put up in this section within the last few months, and many more are planned.

To the east, on First street, near Pecan street, George B. Upp is completing two frame two-story apartment buildings, at Nos. 1610-12 and 1616-18. The lot has a frontage of 100 feet, and is 150 feet deep. There will be forty-four rooms in each building, divided into two, three and four-room apartments, with every modern convenience. The buildings are two stories in front and three in the rear. Slash-grained Oregon pine will be used in the interior finish, with hardwood floors. The buildings will cost about $20,000.

An improvement which will add much to the value of property on East First street is the paving and asphalting of that thoroughfare from the foot of the viaduct to Chicago street. This is a vast improvement, and one that has been needed for many years. There is talk of putting up ornamental boulevard lights, also, although no definite action has yet been taken in this direction.

SALES OF ORANGE GROVES.

Activity About Monrovia Shows Big Demand for Income Properties, Suitable for Homesites.

MONROVIA, April 9.—Acreage property in Monrovia and vicinity has been unusually active during the past ten days and the sales of highly improved tracts in full-bearing citrus fruit has amounted to more than $35,000. The property transferred has been purchased mainly for income-bearing home sites and is located in the foothill districts.

Bunker and Wade have sold for L. E. Hotchkiss and Bovee Bros., to Mrs. Martha Walsh, a twenty-six-acre tract on North Santa Anita avenue. There are no buildings, but the tract is set to fifteen-year-old Washington navel and Valencia orange trees in good bearing and is further improved with an excellent water system, consisting of a private well, furnishing twelve miner's inches and a proportionate share of water in the Santa Anita Colony. The reported consideration was $18,000.

C. J. Jacobs has sold to Richard Riesen, three acres located on Violet avenue, for $6500. The improvements consist of a modern seven-room bungalow. The land is set to ornamental trees, and ten-year-old Washington navel oranges.

SANTA MONICA CITY WORK.

Plans for New Brick School House. Busy With Concrete Outfall Sewer Pier.

SANTA MONICA, April 11.—The Santa Monica school district during the week voted a $30,000 budget of bonds for the betterment of the city's school facilities. With the money secured from the bonds a new brick school building will be built on the site of the old Washington school. The former building was of frame, and was burned early this year. It was insured for $13,000, part of which will go into the new building.

The work of casting the concrete piles for Santa Monica's new outfall sewer pier was begun last week, and the new $100,000 structure will be rushed to completion. This is the first reinforced concrete pier to be built on the coast, and the second in America. Its construction is being watched with considerable interest by builders, contractors and transportation corporations. The success of a structure of this kind will mean the saving of many thousands of dollars annually to the owners of piers and wharves, as the expense of replacing wooden piles that have been destroyed by the teredo is a heavy item in the maintenance of such structures.

COUNTRY PROPERTY IN DEMAND.

Eastern People Buying Income-Producing Propositions—Orange Groves Sold.

A number of transactions in orange groves and other classes of ranch property have been reported during the week. The demand for good income propositions was never better, and the number of easterners who have given up the hopeless fight against the inclement weather of the States east of Southern California, is increasing. These people are many of them people of means, who have come into this land of sunshine and purchased home places.

Harrison T. Kendall has added another seven and a half acres to the fifteen acres purchased on Allen avenue, above San Pasqual street, Pasadena. The property is said to have cost $13,000, and will be included in the property purchased by Mr. Kendall, making his new home site worth $50,000.

M. M. Phinney of Redlands has purchased from Arthur Gregory a thirty-acre grove of navels and Valencias on San Bernardino avenue, near Tennessee street, Redlands.

W. T. Russell sold to R. L. Lothrop of San Bernardino a fourteen-acre orange grove at Rialto for a consideration of $14,000. Russell bought the grove a few months ago of Starkey Duncan for $12,000. WHERE WAVES RUN HIGH.

New Lighthouse Completed on the Fastnet Rock at an Enormous Expense.

The new lighthouse recently completed on the Fastnet rock, a small islet off the southeast corner of the coast of Ireland, is not only the latest example of lighthouse construction on a wave-washed rock, but the most expensive tower ever erected, having cost no less than £84,000, says the Montreal Standard. It has been built by the Irish lights board, and is one of the most important beacons on the coasts. The rock lies in the direct route for Atlantic shipping passing the south of Ireland, and is thus a danger which it is of the utmost importance to light adequately.

The plans for the lighthouse were drawn up and the work put in hand by William Douglass, engineer to the Irish lights board. He was forced, however, to retire through ill health before it was completed, when his first assistant, C. W. Scott, took over the responsibility and finished the undertaking.

The new lighthouse displaces the old cast-iron tower. This latter was ninety feet high, and stood on the summit of the rock. It was not long, however, before it was discovered that the cast-iron tower was not stable enough to withstand the severe buffetings of the waves to which the rock is subjected. The Fastnet is exposed to the full fury of the Atlantic during south and southwest gales. The waves often break over the top of the lantern, 173 feet above the normal level of the sea. On one occasion a full cup of coffee standing on the table in the top room was thrown to the floor when a heavy sea thundered against the rock and shook the tower. Under this continual pounding, large masses of rock were dislodged from the pinnacle, undermining the tower. From time to time this erosion was repaired, until at last Mr. Douglas decided to replace the structure by a modern one of stone.

The granite of which the lighthouse is built came from the quarries in Cornwall. Altogether 2074 stones were worked into the structure, ranging from one and three-quarters to three tons each in weight, and representing a total weight of 4300 tons. The entrance door to the tower is fifty-seven feet, nine inches above high water mark. To keep out the storm, the keepers can close the heavy teak door and let down over it a heavy gun metal casing.

Sounded Like Unionism.

Speaking of the methods adopted by some of the unions throughout the country in righting their wrongs, Senator Dolliver of Iowa says it reminds him of an Irishman who, upon hearing for the first time the braying of a donkey, remarked, after waiting for the last discordant note to die away, "Faith, you are no doubt in great pain, but I had more sympathy for you before you complained."

Ruptured the Solemnity.

John Lawrence Toole, the most popular low comedian of his day, once gave a supper to eighty of his friends, and wrote a note to each of them privately beforehand, asking him whether he would be so good as to say grace, as no clergyman would be present. It it said that the faces of those eighty men as they rose in a body when Toole tapped on the table, as a signal for grace, was a sight which will never be forgotten.

TOPICS OF THE STAGE.

"Will the days of real light opera ever return? Such days as Gilbert and Sullivan knew, when book, lyrics and music were not machine-made, but were put together along somewhat inspirational lines, and each made a complement for the other?"

I put this question to Edgar Temple at the Auditorium one night last week, as I sat in his stage office turning over the pages of "Florodora," that musical comedy which has a legitimate musical ancestor somewhere in its line of descent.

Temple nodded "Yes," but he added the reservation: "With the growing up of a new generation."

Then he explained:

"But I do not mean that this generation will not live to see a return of the times of real light opera; it will. But that time will be a few years hence, when the youngsters who did not exist in the Gilbert and Sullivan days have become the reigning power among theater-goers. As it is now, the usual theater-goer has not outlived those melodious years, and while we mourn their departure, we bear them treasured in our memories, and when surfeited with 'musical comedy,' and much noisy entertainment that passes as musical, we revert to that glorious epoch and sigh.

"But the oncoming generation does not have such memories, and will demand in lieu of recollection, actuality. And the demand always foreruns the supply, you know, whether it is in pigiron or plays. There will be a new era for comedy-opera creators, and the glories of the past will be dimmed, for history invaribly shows progress."

"There were light operas before Gilbert and Sullivan," I interposed, "but isn't it probable that they will always mark a great epoch in light-opera composition?"

Temple pensively relit his cigar. "Of course—yes!" His remark had an air of finality. "For no writers in our language ever equaled them as creators of that type of theatrical amusement. They were the kings, and we must all bow before them. They worked closely together, their words and music interlaced, as it were, and one carried out the import of the other. A lyric was built by their joint labors; a song ran along to completion quite simultaneously in both minds. Their operas had consistent plots, but the plots were not so complicated that it taxed one's mentality to follow them, and that was one of the great reasons for success in their day. Another was that one could merely listen to the beauties of music and dialogue, and catch the story quite unconsciously—so cleverly was it interwoven in the passing action. These two men worked for days over a lyric, and it was no uncommon thing for Gilbert to spend an entire night perfecting a six-word joke. He had the most perfect command of the English language, and his plays upon words and other clever manipulations of sentences were astonishing. Every speech meant something, every line 'carried,' and when the work was finished you had a mosaic in English and a perfect miniature in melody.

"The Gilbert and Sullivan days were followed by a deterioration; the writers of the following day were not so well educated, nor so naturally clever in words or happy in mirth. Besides, there is a good deal of originality, and there was a wholesomeness about those pioneers that did not descend to their followers, who, consciously or unconsciously, were to a certain extent imitators.

"Another element enters here; the renaissance of variety, or vaudeville, as we commonly call it."

"But what has that to do with comic opera?"

"Just this, that while in former days variety was looked upon as something not quite respectable, the same thing—rechristened 'vaudeville'—assumed an importance in the public eye that it never had before. Suddenly vaudeville became a craze. Everyone wanted it; it bore the same relation to the play that the short story bears to the novel and naturally such music as had been fostered and produced by the flood of light operas went with it. Tunes accompanied every stunt, but the stunts were detached, and bore no real relation to each other.

"Then some wise chap thought of stringing a lot of them together, with music to accompany them, of a generally similar class, and he tried out his idea. It made a great hit, and at once a new form of entertainment was born—the musical comedy. Musical comedy in its best form is simply a string of varieties, with a musical setting, and enough of alleged plot to hold the individual bits together—and sometimes not enough. Musical comedy requires no inventive ingenuity; it takes no great technical skill to construct; it is a makeshift, having no real place in any form of art. But a public which has been kindly undiscriminating, has accepted quantity—an unbelievable quantity—for quality, and the musical-comedy tinkers have made fortunes.

"George Cohan, whose ability to take inordinate financial advantage of a passing whim for superficial flippancy I do not disparage, is a shining example of the melody-smith as he flourishes today. Can any one ever dream of Cohan's turning out a 'Mikado' or an 'Iolanthe?' The craze for trivialities has done much to discourage the real artist."

"But is the true comic opera spirit dead?"

"Never!" Mr. Temple was emphatic and chewed his cigar-end fiercely.

"We are already seeing signs of an awakening, for it only sleeps. Take 'Mlle. Modiste,' for instance; there is a real comic opera, and a very clever one, too. Henry Blossom wrote an exceedingly fine book for that—almost Gilbertesque, it is. And Victor Herbert, who is the best composer of lighter music in America today, has given it a score that is beautiful. Do you remember its success. That indicates very plainly to me that the day in which real comic opera holds the boards is fast returning, and the rising generation will perhaps fare better than the one that is passing. Opera advances, just as everything else. Real comic opera is on the way, and America will produce it. Our own men will write the music, and it will be better than anything we have yet given. Our composers, though working quietly, are really doing some great things. Herbert—I place him at the head—Sousa, Luders and one or two others, are making history. Years from now, they will be regarded as the pioneers in the field of lighter American music.

"Yet I am not damning all musical comedy. It fills its place, just as do the misty reconstruction epochs of material history. Now and then we get a dash of real music with it, and it seems to me that the public is wearying of Cohan's antics, and is demanding something more substantial—such real bits of musical beauty as 'Mlle. Modiste' and 'The Prince of Pilsen.'

"We will have comic opera, and Americans will do it. We will have opera from abroad—Lehar's immensely popular new work is a forerunner. But one waltz makes that; we have yet to obtain an opera that is not made by one number, but which has a consistent and balanced whole. We will not have to wait forever, though, and I believe the most of us will see the real old opera comique, improved, gingered up, if you please, chastened by experience and made more perfect by the fallowness of the present field, winning the day over all competitors, and beating the world for another brand of American products"

Mr. Temple is right, but I might add that the librettist has much to do with the making of the real comic opera, and that perfect book-writers are really as rare as original composers.

The foremost American librettist of today is Frank Pixley, for he combines most happily the librettist's ideal qualities. He is a man thoroughly matured by the combined education of books and experience, he has a delicately original sense of humor, and enough of the true poet's romance to write verse that appeals to heart and mind alike—and what is also very necessary, a keen discrimination in theatrical values.

Mr. Pixley, I believe, has his best work before him, and the Pixley and Luders duo is a very happy combination which, if continued uninterruptedly, will probably make history.

In the making of musical-play books many feel called, but few are chosen by public opinion. The difference between a real and mistaken librettist may be seen by a comparison of Pixley and George Ade. Mr. Pixley produces a work which is rounded out, and finished, in every part of the play. His stage effects, his lyric effects, and his comedy, are all placed at their just rating. Mr. Ade, on the other hand, is merely funny. If you want just fun, follow Ade's footsteps, for he turns out humor that is ludicrously irresistible; but if you desire an artistic product, one which has some enduring value, turn to some creation of the other man. Mr. Ade has had more than the common meed of success. I am not disputing that, but I do believe that such things as he has given for musical settings have been hopelessly ephemeral.

Another point which I did not discuss with Mr. Temple, but which I believe is of great significance, is the influence of the ultra-modern school of grand opera writers upon the future maker of comedy opera. The comic operas of the past have been little counterparts, in musical structure, of the grand operas of the past—strings of arias and recitatives and concerted pieces, all done into the usual form with zealous care.

Now another school of grand opera men has arisen, headed by that marvelous realist Puccini, which has shaken the ties of convention, and, spurning the constricted limits of the old musical forms, has put real melody into flowing, conversational shape. Puccini has given the finest significance to the most everyday matters in his fascinating dialogue. He puts genuine art into such commonplaces as "Have some whisky?" and "Mix me another."

This new sort of music would go easily into comio opera, if the right sort of man put it there. And who will deny that leit-motif, used even in its strictest sense, might be pregnant with the most unutterable fun in comedy situations?

"The Girl of the Golden West" has scored one of the biggest hits of the year here, and that too, in the final Lenten season when theatrical affairs are supposed to be at the lowest ebb

The fine thing about the production is the attention to detail. The perfection of the smaller characters gives a tone and distinction to the piece that few plays here, no matter what the price or pretention, have exhibited.

THE LOCAL WEEK.

"The Girl of the Golden West," at the Belasco, will commence its second week today, with the public interest apparently undiminished.

Oliver Morosco's play, "In South Car'liney," will be revived at the Burbank Theater this afternoon.

The piece is a dialect story of the mountain country, and contains a number of good character parts, which will be allotted to William Desmond, Blanche Hall, John Burton, Byron Beasley H. J. Ginn, Willis Marks, Elsie Esmond, Maude Gilbert, H. S. Duffield and Louise Royce—not forgetting, however, Henry Stockbridge, who has here one of his best opportunities for typical drollery, as Bill Buffins, the derelict.

"The Filibuster" will commence its second week at the Auditorium tomorrow evening. It will be succeeded in another week by "Florodora," for the first time in stock here.

Mlle. Marietta Dormoni will take the principal soprano role this week.

James J. Corbett will bring his new play, "The Burglar and the Lady," to the Mason stage for the last three days of this week.

His press-agent says he was an actor before he won international renown as a fighter, appearing in 1888 in San Francisco, playing in a burlesque on "Camille," in which appeared May Irwin, Willie Collier and others of repute.

Last year he appeared in a Bernard Shaw play. This year's piece was written for Mr. Corbett by Langdon McCormick, and two noted characters are introduced in Ned Danvers, the burglar, and Sherlock Holmes, the detective.

Rose King, formerly an actress at the Burbank Theater here, is Mr. Corbett's leading woman.

For the week following Corbett's engagement Wilton Lackaye will present at the Mason a dramatization of Hall Caine's "The Bondman," in which he has the powerful role of Jason.

The Orpheum bill for the week is headed by the three Sisters Macarte, trio of English strong women, who have an unusual novelty in acrobatic performance. Rosaire and Doreto, heralded as knockabout comedians of the time-honored, uproarious type, present a strenuous sketch which they call "The Captain and the Sailor." Brown and Nevarro are colored entertainers of the popular class. Fred Sosman, a singing comedian, will make his first appearance here.

Loney Haskell, Snyder and Buckley and Clayton White and Marie Stuart will repeat their acts of the present week, and Edwin Stevens has had in preparation a new playlet, entitled "The One Flag."

The return of Gilbert Gardner as director of the Ulrich stock company, after an absence of two years, adds an interest to this week's bill at the Grand.

Mr. Gardner, who was in poor health, severed his connection with the Ulrich company in 1906, and since that time has traveled almost around the world.

The melodrama for today is "The Card King of the Coast," a melodrama of the Klondike, with characters borrowed from Bret Harte.

Herr Fischer's offering for this week will be "The Prince of Budweiser," a comedy by Will Carleton. Its central figure is a worthy German brewer, who has just returned to St. Louis, after having been made "Prince of Budweiser" by the Kaiser, for his brewing accomplishments.

Herb Bell plays the title role, Baron Wurzburger, and other parts are allotted to Bessie Tannehill, Nellie Montgomery, Evan Baldwin and Fred Gamboul.

The Unique musical comedy company has a new burlesque for this week entitled "The Village Feast." Maude Beatty, Kate Carlson, George Reh, Hugh Metcalf and Billy Onslow have varied specialities and character assignments.

The dramatic section of the organization has a new farce by Richard Cummings, in the old-time manner.

Cologne is going to share Frankfort's distinction among German cities as having the courage to produce Debussy's "Pelléas et Mélisande." It will be included in the schedule arranged for the special opera festival in June. Another French work to be given will be Xavier Leroux's "Le Chemineau," and for these productions artists from the Théatre de la Monnaie of Brussels will be engaged. The programme, as tentatively arranged, is as follows: June 11, "Tristan und Isolde;" 14, "Figaro's Hochzit;" 18, "Die Meistersinger;" 21, "Le Chemineau;" 23, "Pelléas et Mélisande;" 28, Verdi's "Falstaff." The directors will be Fritz Steinbach and Otto Lohse, and possibly a French conductor yet to be decided upon.

TRY-OUT.

NEW DRAMA TO BE SEEN.

"A SOCIETY PILOT" WILL BE PRODUCED.

Latest Work of Oliver Morosco and Dr. C. W. Bachmann Scheduled for Presentation About May 1—Novel Theme Treated by These Local Collaborators.

Mr. Morosco's company is at present rehearsing for purposes of musical presentation, Hoyt's "A Trip to Chinatown," and when this is put on the new Morosco-Bachmann play, "A Society Pilot," will go into arduous rehearsal and will be the following piece. The date of production is expected to be about May 1.

The authors say they have a new theme, one of legitimate modern interest. The play tells the story of a young man, who, through circumstances over which he has little control, is placed in the compromising position of a "society pilot."

Ned Singleton, the leader of an exclusive social set, is abroad on a globe-trotting tour, leaving his affairs in the hands of his agents. The financial crisis comes just as he is about to return for America. Not being able to hear from his agents he leaves for home short handed, and is advanced money by an English lordling, who is sailing with him. On arriving, and before he can get his bearings, he is approached by a rich cattle man from Texas, who has doubled his millions in Wall street and now wants to enter New York's social whirl.

The Texan, William Mason, has a daughter and a wife. The daughter is educated and refined, the wife, crude and uneducated. He has big ambitions for his daughter, aiming at an Earl or a Duke. The father has inside information that Ned is financially floored, and approaches him with the offer of a large sum of money to go as sponsor for himself and family in Ned's social set.

Singleton repudiates the proposition and brands it as an insult. Mason shows him the folly of such a refusal in the face of poverty and tries to make Ned believe he cannot afford to turn down so good an opportunity. Still Ned is obdurate and orders Mason from the premises. Just as Mason's daughter and Ned's family and friends enter, who do not yet know of his failure, the Englishman enters, and in a not too civil manner demands the money Ned owes him, denouncing Ned as having gotten money under false pretensions. Mason, seeing his chance to prevent a scene and at the same time make himself strong and cinch Ned for his own uses, steps in and asks the Englishman how much Ned owes him, telling him that Ned is his partner and he will defray any outstanding account of Singleton to the extent of half a million. Ned, not having the courage to acknowledge his bankruptcy, accepts the situation and is at Mason's mercy.

One stipulation made by Mason is that Ned must not fall in love with the daughter, nor let her become enamoured of him. As Ned is already engaged to a girl of his own set there seems no likelihood of his caring for the Texas girl, so she and her family are introduced.

Among the men she meets there is this Englishman. The Hon. Winstanley, second son of an Earl and a fortune hunter. Mason thinks here he has a chance to get a title in the family, so encourages Winstanley's suit, much to the distaste of the daughter, who has also begun to look lovingly on Singleton. Ned, himself, is not unmindful of her charming personality and womanly qualities, though not once even mentioning the fact to her.

Learning that Winstanley is a rake and a gambler, only seeking the girl's fortune, Ned objects strongly to the proposed union.

Here Mason and he clash, almost coming to blows. Mason demands to know Ned's reason for interference, tells him he must keep out of it. Ned refuses, when Mason accuses him of breaking faith with him, of making love to the girl himself. Ned denies that he has ever breathed of love to her. He tells Mason that he does love her, but he despises himself too much for the duplicity he has been compelled to practice toward so pure and guileless a girl to tell her of his love.

His engagement is broken off. Winstanley starts the rumor that Ned is bankrupt and a social pilot. The rumor is fanned into a flame and finally reaches Ned's ears.

Driven to desperation by the taunts of Mason and others, Ned with difficulty scrapes together sufficient money to pay off Mason all moneys advanced him, setting himself free from all obligations to Mason.

He then tells Eleanor of his love and his compact with her father, how he was compelled to introduce her, and to escort her about, not for friendship as she was led to believe, but for financial reason. She is hurt, humiliated, rebukes him, calls him a coward and leaves his presence, wishing never to see him. When all is darkest for Ned, a fortunate turn ends all happily for those who deserve it.

When the drama is produced at the Burbank, William Desmond will play Singleton and Blanche Hall, Eleanor Mason. A. Byron Beasley will play Winstanley, J. W. Burton, Bill Mason, Harry Mestayer, the Baron von Faldner, and H. J. Ginn the confidential and devoted valet.

Dramagraphs.

The German version of J. M. Barrie's "The Little Minister" was produced at the Burg Theater, Vienna, on March 9, and was well received.

Blanche Bates will soon finish her three-year engagement in "The Girl of the Golden West," when the play will be withdrawn.

James H. Doyle has written a sketch for Elita Proctor Otis, and it will soon be produced in vaudeville. In her support will be Mr. Doyle and Mary Davis, a western soprano.

Marie Doro wil go abroad the coming summer to appear under Charles Frohman's management in three plays, one of them her present season's success, "The Morals of Marcus."

Bertha Galland is to emerge from her retirement for a spring tour through Ohio and Pennsylvania. She claims to have a play for next season equally as strong as "The Thief."

Eugene Walter, the author of "Paid in Full," has been asked to accept contracts from many producers. Last Wednesday Mr. Walter arranged with Liebler & Co., to write a play for Viola Allen for next season.

Lulu Glaser, the Merry Widow of Joseph Weber's burlesque company in New York, will leave that organization April 18. Next season she will star in a musical comedy under the management of the Shuberts.

It is reported that Eleanor Robson will make her second professional visit to London at the opening of next season in the Haymarket Theater for eight weeks, beginning in September.

Cecilia Loftus has been consulting for the elaboration of a short vaudeville sketch into a three-act play. It will be arranged so that she can introduce her imitations without breaking the thread of the story.

Owing to the destruction of the stage of the Drury Lane Theater, London, last Wednesday, Anna Held's summer engagement in that city, which was to have begun at the end of her American season, has been canceled.

Following a brief spring tour in "Hamlet," Eddie Foy is to be seen in a musical comedy of the West entitled "The Wild and Woolly Way." Foy will continue under the Shubert management, and the piece will probably have its premiere at one of their New York houses.

Margaret Illington will next season appear as a star in a new play, and hereafter will make annual new productions in New York at the head of her own company. She is now appearing with Kyrle Bellew in "The Thief." Mr. Bellew next year will also have a new play.

Wilton Lackaye, who is on the Pacific Coast, has given out the story that he will retire from W. A. Brady's management at the end of the season. No particular reason is assigned for this act, but as Mr. Lackaye is desirous of using "John Glayde's Honor," which Mr. Brady cannot see as a successful play, the foundation of a dispute may be found.

Dresden has already made sure of the rights to produce Eugen d'Albert's next opera, "Isell," which deals with an Indian legend. The composer, who has made only one appearance this winter as a pianist, has gone to his villa on Lake Maggiore, where he will remain until autumn, completing the new work.

Richard Strauss has announced that he expects to have "Electra" completed by the end of this year. It will then be put in rehearsal without delay for production at the Court Theater in Munich, the city of his birth. The composer has designed the title role for a soprano, that of the Queen for a mezzo-soprano; Orestes for a baritone and Aegisthes for a tenor. The new work, like "Salome," will be in one act.

The successor to "The Merry Widow," "The Man With the Three Wives," which, as given in Vienna, proved a keen disappointment to Lehar's friends and well wishers, has taken a new lease of life with its production in Berlin under the composer's direction. Rudolph Christians, the actor who had the principal role in the premiere, and to whose inadequacy the failure of the work at that time was in part attributed, is not connected with the Berlin production.

Jack Barrymore's friends will soon take him at his word and quit trying to make an actor of him. He failed again in New York. Joseph Coyne had made a success of "Toddles" in London, but that didn't make the play go with Barrymore in the part in New York. Jack has always insisted he would rather be an "artist chap" or a "newspaper fellow," and he may be allowed to pursue his bent. Even the mention he had in connection with the Thaw trial didn't help him.

Emperor William's ambition covers sundry and divers fields not intimately associated with affairs of state. Behind their hands his subjects have been criticizing his art preferences for a long time past; now he has invited more comment favorable or otherwise, by appearing in the role of opera director. That is to say, he personally supervised all the details of the recent revival of "Les Huguenots" at the Berlin Royal Opera, spending from two to three hours a day at the rehearsals during the preceding week, wielding the baton himself and instructing the singers in the interpretations of their roles. We are told he brooked no interference on the part of the regular conductors. As for the singers, they felt like wrung-out wash-cloths after each nerve-racking ordeal. MM. Messager and Broussan, the new directors of the Paris Opéra, were in the audience the night of the performance, as the Kaiser's guests. When requested by their august host to express their opinion, their French tact tided them over an awkward moment by prompting them to dwell upon the mechanical merits of the production and the enthusiasm of the artists, without betraying their conviction that the opera singing of Germans leans heavily toward the robust side, at the expense of the finer phases of the art. The Kaiser was happy, however, which was the principal consideration, after all, and after the performance he made Emmy Destinn and Paul Knupfer "royal court singers." His reception of the artists, in his box, lasted till nearly 1 o'clock. Next morning he was up at 6, making final preparations for his departure four hours later for his Corfu vacation.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

Orchestras and other musical organizations have visited us during the past year; some of them have exerted a good influence upon the artistic life of the community, and others have exerted little influence of any kind; but I doubt if a visit from Walter Damrosch, who has become one of the first apostles of art in these last few years, can do else but raise the general tone of things hereabouts. Mr. Damrosch will bring an orchestra of sixty-five here in May. There will be several soloists, but don't count on them; I've no doubt past history will be repeated as far as they are concerned. Orchestral soloists in the West have not been of Metropolitan Operahouse luster.

The longest series of orchestral concerts ever attempted in New York was brought to a conclusion one week ago today, when the New York Symphony Society, under Damrosch's direction, closed the Beethoven cycle, and the season. The programme included that symphonic pinnacle, the Ninth Symphony, also the Benedictus from the Solemn Mass, and the Lento Assai, from the string quartette in F.

One of the New York musical writers says: "No other orchestra has tried to do in New York what the Symphony Society has done under Mr. Damrosch's guidance. Twenty-eight symphony concerts in a single season seemed an impossible undertaking when first announced—an extraordinary series that has been successfully carried out. The permanent orchestra, meeting daily for rehearsals and being always at the call of the conductor, has given New York a body of men united and working for a single purpose, the cultivation of symphonic music. The 'orchestra from New York' no longer stands dimmed in the shadow of permanent orchestras of other cities."

So this is the organization that is coming here. The soloists may be efficient—we are not decrying them, by any means—but the important part for us is neither soloists nor that chorus talked of, but a real orchestra, an orchestra whose members play together constantly, under the direction of an able and scholarly musician.

The activity of Damrosch's orchestra this year is remarkable. Besides the twenty-eight concerts in the metropolis, a subscription series of five concerts was given in Brooklyn, four in Philadelphia, four in Montclair and four in Orange, N. J. Separate concerts were given in other cities, and the tour extends from Massachusetts to California. On a winter tour the orchestra played in Chicago, Cleveland, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Buffalo, Detroit and Washington, and spent two weeks in Pittsburg before the opening of the New York season.

More than 100 appearances have been made by this orchestra this year—so far—and Mr. Damrosch should present a band of men to Los Angeles that is almost perfection in concerted rendition.

The conductor has offered a large number of new works this season, and some of them will be given here. Mr. Damrosch's last Los Angeles appearance—to the best of my recollection—was at the time he directed a performance of "Lohengrin" for the Grau company at Hazard's Pavilion. In the cast on that occasion were Mr. Dippel, Mme. Schumann-Heink and Mme. Sembrich.

Harriet W. R. Strong has just written, in honor of Admiral Evans and the fleet, a new march for orchestra and band, entitled "Our Navy Rules the Sea." A copy for piano shows good arrangement and considerable thematic invention.

Dr. Eugene E. Davis is working for the organization of a new chorus, rehearsals of which will begin on Monday, May 20, and he states that nearly 200 applications have been received to date.

The object of the work is to promote choral music here, without any attempt at professionalism, and to establish a singing body capable of undertaking oratorios, cantatas and similar compositions.

Prof. Knight has invented a mechanical music-maker of much ingenuity, which he calls "The Electric Emporium Orchestra," combining, as it does, the tone-producing qualities of 250 instruments.

Prof. Knight will demonstrate his invention next Thursday evening at Simpson Auditorium.

Mrs. Suburb: Theh's a knife-sharpener at the door. Do we need anything sharpened, Henry?

Mr. Suburb: No; but tell him to go in next door to Blank's. I want to borrow Blank's lawn mower tomorrow, and I'm sure it must be horribly rusty and dull after the wet winter we've had.

ROW OVER TRAGEDY.

Mascagni and Guglielmi Squabble Over Setting Prize Poem to Operatic Melody.

A curious controversy is being carried on by the Italian newspapers, says a dispatch to the New York Sun, over the tragic poem by Fausto Salvatori entitled "La Festa del Grano." The question now is whether the composer Mascagni does or does not intend to set it to music.

Some months ago it was stated that "La Festa del Grano" was none other than "Ossessi," a libretto by the same author. This report, at first discredited, gradually led to the discovery of the real facts of the case.

Fourteen months ago Signor Fausto Salvatori gave to the composer Guglielmi, already celebrated for his two operas entitled "Eumenides" and "Agamemnon," the libretto of a tragedy in verse called "Ossessi" (Obsessed.) Meanwhile Messrs. Sonsogno of Milan, the music publishers, opened a competition for a tragedy and offered a prize of $5000 for the work selected. Signor Salvatori changed the name of his tragedy "Ossessi" to "La Festa del Grano," added an act and without consulting Guglielmi sent the work to Milan and won the prize.

The main condition of the competition was that Messrs. Sonsogno should choose the composer who was to set to music the winning libretto. The choice fell on Mascagni. Evidently the popular Italian composer was not very enthusiastic over "La Festa del Grano," as he deferred beginning the work on the plea that he lacked inspiration and that the tragedy did not appeal to his artistic temperament. At the same time rumors began to circulate that Guglielmi was about to undertake the task. These rumors, despite the repeated denials of Mascagni and Guglielmi, became so persistent that finally an interview between the two composers was arranged.

During this time Guglielmi, not suspecting that "La Festa del Grano" and "Ossessi" were the same, continued his work on the latter and had nearly completed its two acts. The upshot of the interview between the composers was that Mascagni, learning the real facts of the case, refused to have anything further to do with "La Festa del Grano," and at the same time on his suggestion Guglielmi notified Messrs. Sonsogno that he had acquired prior right to the tragedy.

Messrs. Sonsogno state that a regular contract has been drawn up and registered in which Mascagni agrees to set to music any libretto given him by the firm within three years. Some time after he received "La Festa del Grano" he announced that the libretto was too philosophical to form the basis of a successful opera and that he felt that the work was beyond his powers. Messrs. Sonsogno, realizing the difficulties in dealing with an artist of the temperament of Mascagni, offered to substitute another libretto, but the matter has never been definitely settled.

As it stands now the solution seems to pivot on the good will of Mascagni, and the question is whether "La Festa del Grano" shall fall from the sublime to the ridiculous, whether the tragedy shall be reduced to a farce comedy or whether the outcome shall be a lawsuit.

Troublesome Afrida Tribesmen.

Trouble is expected in India, where the most troublesome and pugnacious of the Afridi tribes, the Zakka Khels, tall, powerful, fierce and cunning, have worn out the patience of the government, and a punitive expeditionary force had been dispatched against them. Seven thousand carefully selected men compose the force, and they will be pitched against 30,000 warriors. The present expedition was only decided upon after a number of the most serious raids, in which treachery, plunder and murder figured in great degree. On account of the inherent treachery and natural wickedness of the warlike tribes, Great Britain is called upon to engage in a war with them about once in every ten years.

Naming the Zones.

The semi-annual examinations were held at a well-known upper West Side private school the other day, says the New York Sun, and while inspecting the papers the teachers found many humorous answers to some of the questions. A class of boys averaging about twelve years of age had been examined in geography, which had been preceded the day before by grammar.

Among the questions in the geography paper was the following:

"Name the zones."

One promising youth of eleven years wrote this answer:

"There are two zones, masculine and feminine. The masculine is either temperate or intemperate; the feminine is either torrid or frigid."

Fillmore School of Music.

President Fillmore announces the engagement of Mr. Geo. Anderson, the well-known voice teacher, as an instructor in his school. Mr. Anderson is a graduate in voice culture of the American Conservatory of Music, Chicago, and has had twelve years' experience as a teacher. He uses the pure Italian method of tone production and has made a most careful and exhaustive study of correct tone-placement and the proper development of the voice

Art and Artists.

BY ANTONY E. ANDERSON.

The Rose and the Statue.

The Rose said to the Statue: Thou art cold,
And passionless, though beautiful and grand.
I all my life exhale, while thou dost stand
Unmoved, unmindful of the sweets I hold.
The Statue answered to the Rose: Thou poor,
Frail creature, toy and wanton of a day,
I scarce can stoop to note thy swift decay;
Lo, thou art fading now, but I endure.
Thus each reproached the other; neither thought
What various means lead to an end the same;
How manifold is beauty, and what claim
To the world's gratitude the other brought.

Various Exhibitions.

To the lover of art the past week in Los Angeles has been most interesting—almost exciting, in fact. There have been so many places to go to that the main difficulty has been to find the time to attend them all in six short days. One of them, however, that held at the Steckel gallery, will remain open for some time to come, so those who missed it this week may surely go to it during the next fortnight.

The exhibition at Steckel's comprises some twenty-five or thirty pictures from the collection of William Morris, a San Francisco dealer. There are canvases by American and foreign painters.

At the Blanchard gallery has been held a loan exhibition of 400 etchings, dry points, wood engravings, Japanese prints, etc., but no paintings, by famous men and women all over the world, some of the past and some of the present. This exhibition has been mentioned two or three times during the week in this paper. It was one of the most noteworthy collections ever shown in Los Angeles, and did not receive one-tenth the attention from the public that its superlative merits deserved.

At the Woman's Clubhouse, Hollywood, there was held, on Wednesday and Thursday, a loan exhibition of pictures and arts-crafts work which reflected great credit on the little town. The standard of admission was high, and very little work of indifferent merit found its way in.

At Gould's, in Los Angeles, Mrs. May Mott-Smith Cunningham showed some of her beautiful and artistic designs in jewelry. This exhibition will continue for one week longer. Gould's will also show, for two weeks, beginning Monday, a collection of Gertrude Partington's recent dry-points.

At the Woman's Club House in this city Joseph Greenbaum showed, for four days, twenty-six of his recent pictures, two of them being portraits of well-known Los Angeles society women, Mrs. Morris Albee and Mrs. Hancock Banning. These portraits have already been spoken of at some length in Art and Artists. Mr. Greenbaum's other pictures were landscapes, done in his usual sincere manner. A wall decoration, painted for Mrs. Irving Ingraham, was also shown. The exhibition closed on Friday. Mr. Grenbaum has now three portraits under way, those of Mrs. Horace Smith, Mrs. R. H. Norton, and J. J. Hanford, mayor of San Bernardino.

At Steckel's.

Among the pictures shown at Steckel's are a few of most excellent quality, and also some that are of no particular merit. "Twilight," by Lee Green Richards, is one of the best—a beautiful effect over slowly moving waters. It is painted with skill and understanding, as well as with a genuine appreciation of the subtleties of nature's moods. A new moon hangs in a blue-gray sky. Yellow boats, at anchor, sway lazily on the swelling tide, casting long reflections. Another delightful canvas by the same artist shows a sunset through a damp grove, charming in its low tones of greens and browns. This picture, like "Twilight," is fine in feeling and color. It is soothing and restful, inviting the spirit to contemplation and repose.

Other good pictures are: A small canvas by Berne-Bellecour, representing a French soldier in blue standing near a wall; "Perplexity," a genre by Faulau, in which the characters of the young girl and the father and mother, all seated in a railway station and studying Baedecker, are very well rendered; "Blinding the Trail," by L. E. Couse, two Indians, delightfully painted, who are bending over and tying a netted thing that looks like a snowshoe over their moccasins; "Pouring Tea," a Dutch interior in water colors by Benard de Hoog; "High Sierras," a good, honest, careful bit of painting by W. F. Jackson; and several landscapes by J. T. Harwood.

The two pictures by Frank P. Sauerwen, one of them a mere sketch, are not of this artist's best work.

In Hollywood.

The exhibition held in Hollywood on Wednesday and Thursday was a most creditable affair, the examples of arts-crafts shown being especially noteworthy, though there were also some good things in the picture gallery.

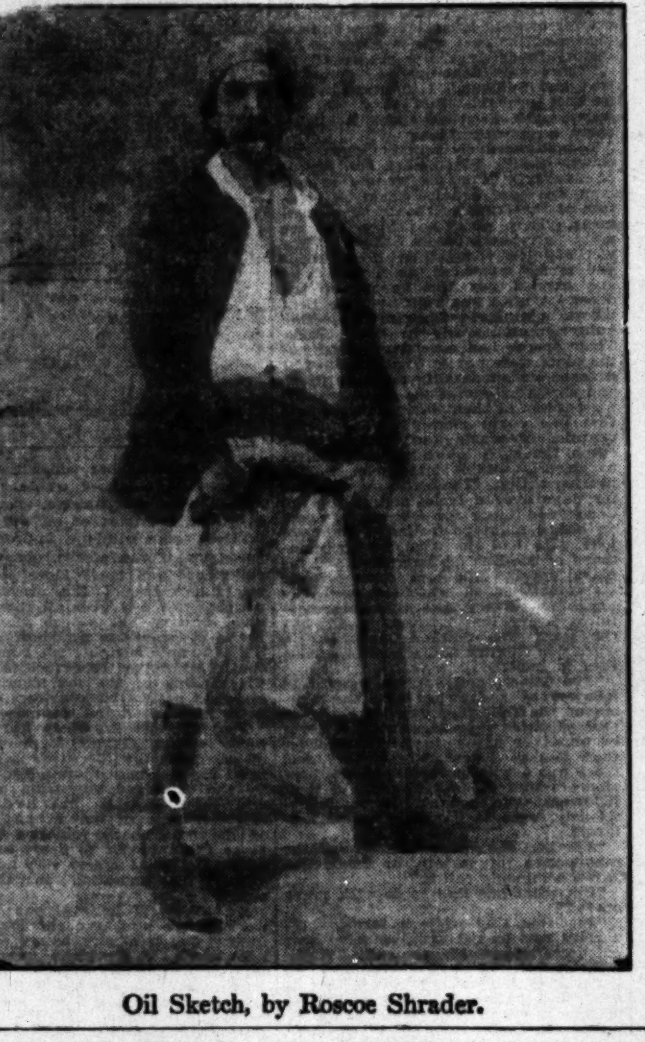
Frank A. Liddell had three or four small water colors that were lovely in color and feeling. Nona L. White showed a few of her characteristic rose studies in water colors. Norman St. Clair had a few water colors, all good, but "Autumn Sea" of quite unusual strength and beauty. Emily White showed some miniatures on ivory, all exhibited before in Los Angeles. Joseph Greenbaum's "Catalina" was also there. "Portrait Study," an old man's head by Adela Larsen, was a promising piece of work.

Among the most interesting of the paintings were the two splendidly strong figure studies from life by Roscoe Shrader, who is a resident of Hollywood, but who is now studying with Howard Pyle in Wilmington, Delaware. Mr. Shrader, who is still very young, promises to be one of the strongest of our American illustrators. He is now working on an important commission from the Century. His work appears regularly in Scribner's and Harper's.

Some beautiful work in photography was shown by Louis Fleckenstein, Anna Desmond, Marion Lehman, Hana Robison of Los Angeles, J. Edwin Greene of Pasadena, W. Edwin Gledhill of Santa Barbara, and Ethel P. Bailey of Hollywood.

Robert W. Hyde of Santa Barbara showed a book of exquisite workmanship, inside and out, the cover and illumination being both by him; Arthur Turner Foster of Glendora also showed some beautiful original designs for the Rubaiyiat Rubayiat, as did Adelaide Hanscom of San Francisco, the work of the former being in pen and ink, that of the latter in photography. Joaquin Miller posed for many of Miss Hanscom's wonderfully beautiful pictures. Nothing lovelier can be imagined than some of the illuminations in water colors with which Mrs. Irving Way had enhanced the charm of the rare and costly books lent by her husband, Irving Way, to the present exhibition.

There were also some original "sunbonnet babies" from the pen of Bertha Corbett, excellent book plates and original drawings by Elizabeth Hallowell Saunders, artistically bound books by Idah Meacham Strobridge, and representative examples of the handicraft work of Mabel Free and Emma Kraft, and of Brock & Feagans, as well as good wood carving by Emily Rutherford.



Oil Sketch, by Roscoe Shrader.

International Studio.

The opening paper in the International Studio for April is an appreciation of the art of George De Forest Brush by Minna C. Smith, with ten illustrations from the artist's most famous paintings, four of them being his lovely modern madonnas. Arsene Alexandre writes of Claude Monet, his career and his work, with a dozen illustrations. Another interesting personal paper is that which treats of Eastman Johnson, American genre painter, by Sadakichi Hartmann.

A particularly interesting article is that concerning Norwegian peasant architecture, by William Peters, illustrated by the author. M. Glaser writes of "Pictures of Old Prague by Modern Artists," and gives us eleven of these pictures.

Other timely articles of great interest and value are: "Spanish Mediaeval and Renaissance Ironwork," by Aymer Vallance; "The Royal Scottish Academy Exhibition," by A. Eddington; "The Architectural League Exhibition," by Henry H. Saylor; "Twelfth Annual Exhibition of the Society of Western Artists," by Maude I. G. Oliver, which has one of the William Wendt's California pictures among its illustrations; "The Hearn Pictures in the Metropolitan Museum," by Elizabeth Luther Cary; "Gesso—Methods and Suggestions," by Otto Walter Beck; and "Mr. Beck's Work in Gesso, by Eva Lovett.

ART NOTES.

Gertrude Eastabrooks, the well-known painter of roses, has just come out from Chicago, and will remain in Los Angeles for some time. Her studio is in Blanchard Hall.

Ralph Mocine and William H. Cole are out sketching in the cañons of the Santa Monica Mountains. They came to town the other day to look at the Ruskin Art Club exhibition, but have gone back to their beloved cañons.

William Wendt was also in town this week; but he also returned to his sketching grounds in a day or two.

Bruce Crane and Paul Cornoyer opened a three weeks' exhibition in the galleries of Louis Katz, New York, on April 6.

The Corcoran Gallery of Art, Washington, announces a second exhibition of contemporary American oil paintings, to open December 7.

The architectural exhibition of the T-Square Club, Philadelphia, and the Philadelphia Chapter, A.I.A., will open in the galleries of the Philadelphia Academy tomorrow, to close May 3.

The Art Institute of Chicago will soon put on view a collection of forty-three colored etchings by J. F. Raffaelli, and later a selection of engravings.

The Cincinnati Museum will have on view paintings by Elizabeth W. Roberts, April 1 to April 19.

BITS OF VERSE.

Age.

To watch the returning spring and wonder secretly
If, missing those who greatly love such days,
The spring could ever be so gay and green
As when they walked the lilac-budded ways.

To sigh o'er winters, strangely bleak and cold,
And see, in smoldering fires that char too soon,
No more what may be, shall be, but what was,—
As one recalls the cadence of a tune.

To smile upon and bless young sweetheart vows,
Remembering this face and that long passed,
To fancy love today a colder thing
Than this great love you cherish to the last.

To keep the friends grown faithfully old as young,
Reluctant, when new hands knock at your door,
To open; and if opening, withhold
The heart of which you once gave all and more.

To dream in solitude with pipes and books
Born old and sweet and good; to ask for songs
They do not sing; to find your happiness
A homely grace that in your soul belongs.

To seek again some calm, forgiving god
You smiled at lightly in your other youth;
Content to leave the mysteries of life
To mysteries of death—and wait the truth.

—[Emery Pottie, in The Craftsman.

If—Then.

If I could call them back—those dear dead days,
Those happy days of yore;
If there could be no parting of the ways—
No closed and silent door
Between us, dear;
If I could look into your eyes and see
That sweet, caressing smile;
If love's impassioned voice so dear to me
For just a little while Might bless my ear;

Then for thy own dear sake henceforth I'd live,
And know there could not be
A greater joy on earth than just to give
My life and all to thee
In love's sweet ways;
Then never should one word or deed or thought
Love's tender tribute lack;
Down at thy feet I'd lay all life has brought,
If I could call them back—
Those dear dead days.

Tonight.

Mysterious Night! when our first parent knew
Thee from report divine, and heard thy name,
Did he not tremble for this lovely frame,
This glorious canopy of light and blue?
Yet 'neath the curtain of translucent dew,
Bathed in the rays of the great setting flame,
Hesperus with the host of heaven came,

No other welcome to the Great American Fleet can compare with that at San Diego, when for the first time in months the ships will rest in home waters, and when the people of the Western United States will give them their First Greeting.

The eyes of the whole nation will center upon San Diego. All other celebrations will be tame by comparison. This will be the event of a lifetime. Don't miss it! Come to San Diego!

April 14, 15, 16, 17, 18

PRECIOUS STONES IN CALIFORNIA.

BY J. B. IRVINE.

With a design to increase the interest and awaken the pride of the residents of the State in California's remarkable mineral treasures, the State Mining Bureau has from time to time issued bulletins treating of gems and precious stones. The information thus disseminated has given impetus to further discovery and advance, with the gratifying result that developements in this line during the past five or six years have not been paralleled by those of any other State or country.

The gem industry is a comparatively new one in California, but State Mineralogist L. E. Aubury declares it to be of growing importance, as indicated by the annually increasing value of the output. The latest bulletin on the subject was compiled by George F. Kunz, who, during the past dozen years, has made careful study of the subject in his capacity as special agent of the United States Geological Survey.

According to Dr. Kunz, diamonds are occasionally found in the gold-bearing gravel deposits of ancient river beds in Calaveras county. While neither large or numerous, some of these stones are beautiful, and all of them possess much interest. But their size and number have not been such as to render the search for them profitable. Nevada county has yielded the largest stone, it weighing 7¼ carats.

Interesting localities of opal and turquoise have been found in the desert region of the Southwest. These give evidence of long and extended workings by prehistoric tribes who have left their stone tools and rock inscriptions around their old places of labor.

The most remarkable gem region of the state is conceded as being at several localities in Riverside and San Diego counties, where lithia minerals occur. Here tourmalines, topaz, epidote, beryl and garnet have been found, the district showing an assemblage of minerals such as is equaled at perhaps no place in the world. The gems are described as occuring in the midst of pegmatite veins which are formed in the granite and gabbro rocks. The rich tourmaline and kunzite veins at several of the developed mines and prospects are all said to be in the gabbro, while the topaz, garnet and beryl are in the granite. The gems invariably occur in pockets in the midst of the pegmatite and are commonly embedded in loose clay. The first discovery of colored gem-tourmaline in the State goes back as far as 1872, and the next important discovery was not announced until twenty years later, but it was not until about 1898 that this now famous locality was made known to the world.

Among the most interesting and beautiful of gem-minerals are the highly colored varieties of tourmaline. It is only recently that they have come to be much known or used as jewelry, though pink tourmaline has long been greatly and almost superstitiously prized in China. California has lately been found to possess the most remarkable of these gem-tourmalines in the world. Heretofore they have come chiefly from Brazil.

Kunzite has been received with much favor as a new and wholly American gem. In color it varies from almost white with a faint pink tone through pink and lilac pink into dark lilac. An English writer has called it peach blossom. The gem is remarkably brilliant, no matter what the color. It is usually perfect and free from flaws, and, when pink, is one of the few natural stones of that color. As a lilac gem it is unique.

The author of the bulletin concludes that it will require possibly a change of fashion or new adaptability of materials to consume all the semi-precious stones that are likely to develop if mining is continued in this line with much more energy. It is shown, however, that California as a tourist's resort has the advantage over many other places in being an attractive country, drawing many thousands of strangers, who are generally more or less affluent; and this suggets a new industry. It is believed that if the precious stones themselves should be handsomely or quaintly cut, and should in all instances be what they are represented to be, a large demand might be created for them. If the smoky quartz, lepidolite, and like minerals were worked into desk weights, seals, charms, etc., a great quantity could be sold, not only in California but elsewhere. Already California turquoise and tourmaline, when not of fine gem quality, have been cut into crude beads of East India type, into small forms of mosaic work, and the like, and in this shape have found a definite market in Europe as well as in the United States. Otherwise these minerals would have been a loss in mining.

DOG HANGED.

A Pennsylvania Canine the Victim of an Old Custom on Coast of Labrador.

[Philadelphia Record:] Like a convicted felon, adjudged guilty after a fair trial, Jack, the big half-breed Newfoundland dog belonging to Hugh McLaughlin of Leiperville, Pa., was hanged Thursday by the neck until dead. Every effort was made to keep the matter quiet, but it gradually leaked out, and the disclosure reveals one of the most interesting, if not dramatic, episodes relating to animal life.

The dog, which had suddenly developed a vicious disposition, sprang upon 5-year-old Thelma Berger, a pretty little girl, living near-by. Knocking her down, it sank its fangs into her flesh, and probably would have killed her or maimed her for life, but for the fact that the child's screams attracted several men and the big brute was driven off. The child was carried home, and McLaughlin, who is employed in Baldwin's Locomotive Works, at Eddystone, was notified. "Was it my dog?" he asked. Then, according to an old custom on the coast of Labrador, where dogs are hanged when it has been proven blood lust of a human being, McLaughlin tied the dog up in his yard.

The child, still suffering from her wounds, was the prosecutor and chief witness. She described the attack, told how the dog had leaped upon her, showed her wounds to substantiate her story. The men who had rescued her corroborated her statement. Then she identified the canine culprit, who looked up at her from his leash, cowering like a prisoner in the dock in the full realization of his offense. Next her rescuers identified the dog. The case against the animal was made out.

In the owner's mind there no longer remained a "reasonable doubt" of the dog's guilt. So he proceeded to pass sentence. It was that the dog be hanged to a tree in the yard until dead.

The child prosecutor and her witnesses filed solemnly out of the yard. Half an hour afterward a noose was slipped about Jack's neck and his body drawn up on a limb. All day his body hung suspended as a warning to other dogs. Then it was cut down and buried. —[Philadelphia Record.

An Oriental Settlement.

Having been fined for neglect of duty, a postal subordinate in India addressed his chief in the following terms: "Your honor may be right, I may be wrong; I may be right and honor wrong, let honor give me back the fine, and then at day of resurrection, when all hearts will be open, if I am wrong, I will most gladly, sir, return your honor the money."

Pointers From the Arrow Girl

LET ME TELL YOU A SECRET. I had an awful scare last week. Toward the end of the big Banner Sale the Advertising Men got so busy, they wouldn't write the ads. Then word came from the office for me to do it. Of course, I felt good about it, but oh, I was so scared. But, well, ad. writing isn't an art at all. You just find out the actual regular selling value—that's easy here, everything is in plain figures—and then put down the special bargain prices. Sometimes there's a reason. I understood that. It was a small lot or bought cheap or something like that but do you know—sometimes there isn't any reason at all. It's just a case of giving you all a specially good reason for coming to the store on just that particular day.

HERE'S ANOTHER SECRET: I'm not scared any more. They told me I was doing fine. (I thought so myself, when I saw the crowds, but really it isn't me at all, it's just the Hamburger line of values.) I'm installed in a little private office of my own now and I'm quite a somebody. If you've got anything on your mind about shopping, altogether or Hamburger's in particular, do write me. I'll be awfully glad.

I wrote this big ad. all alone. It's my first really big one, but I couldn't find nearly enough room for all the good things. The counters and windows will have to take care of the rest. Say, you read the "little" boxes in this ad. They've good stuff. Don't overlook the Silverware or Dinner ware for instance. The space was small, but the stocks and values are big. Well, that's all for today. Come in and see us.

Yours sincerely,
THE ARROW GIRL.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONDON, March 18.—Jacques Futrelle, the popular American short-story writer, whose inimitable creation, "The Dook," has amused the readers of The Saturday Evening Post by his quaint humor and expressive slang, has come to London to see the real article. He "blew" in on me, as he expressed it, a couple of days ago, a breezy, irresponsible American, to tell some of his "impressions" of the land of John Bull. He is as big as Jim Jeffries, and as jolly as Santa Claus, so I gave him the largest chair in the office and harkened to him.

I confidently expected him to knock the underpins from our English cousins' complacency and leave him not a leg to stand upon. Most American visitors do, especially those who limit their stay to a few days or weeks. But Futrelle, although he has been only a few days in town, has seen a whole lot that he likes about the English metropolis. At the same time it would be impossible for a visitor with the abnormal appreciation of humor possessed by this American writer to miss the many good laughs to be had at the expense of the English customs, many of which have come out of the moss-covered past, and have neither rhyme nor reason to commend them.

In the first place, he likes the architecture of London, which he says "beats anything in the States by a mile." At the same time he is disappointed in the "circuses."

"Ever since I was old enough to read a Baedeker," he said, "I have been looking forward with a joy that was measureless to seeing the London 'circuses.' I read that the intersections of many of the important streets were so called, and I imagined they provided a sort of free open air exhibition of prancing horses and daring trapeze acts for the edification and amusement of the people. When I arrived in London I hurried as fast as I could to Piccadilly Circus, but found nothing that appoached Barnum & Bailey's 'pereless, inimitable, unapproachable and greatest show on earth,' except a solitary grass figure of a boy doing a balancing act on one toe over a fountain in the middle of the street.

"I expected to see many funny things in London. I have seen many funny things, but not just the kind I expected. I discovered, soon after my arrival, that you could do almost anything you wanted to here except laugh to your heart's content. One must control his humor in London or he will get into trouble. A couple of days after I reached the city I was walking along the Strand with a friend from Atlanta. We spied an auction store and dropped in to see if we could pick up a diamond or two for a plugged nickel or less. As soon as we got inside the door we saw that the chances were we would not be disappointed in that respect, for the auctioneer was offering 'a solid gold, 18-carat, Hall-marked ring, set with three genuine rubies,' and some one in the rear bid the equivalent of a dollar in a trembling voice that betrayed a 'I hope mother don't know I'm squandering my money this way' feeling in the heart. As soon as we entered, the auctioneer spotted us and made the 'there's a couple of suckers' eyes to his assistant. Whereupon the latter approached us and submitted the ring for inspection. I didn't laugh. It was too obviously silly to laugh at. How the 'barker on his perch' ever expected anybody to 'fall' for that 'eighteen-carat, Hall marked, genuine ruby' tale, I cannot imagine.

"The auctioneer finally asked me if I would make a bid. I shook my head sadly. Whereupon he turned his attention to the natives. He repeated his 'con' story and some one bid 12 cents more than a dollar. He repeated it again and after a long wait some one bid a dollar and a quarter. Evidently fearing that the last bidder would regret it and make his escape, the auctioneer announced the ring sold so quick that he almost chopped the last word of the bidder in two.

"Well, now, it struck me so funny that real ruby rings should be going for a dollar and a quarter, and that the auctioneer could accept such a bid with a straight face, that I burst out laughing. I'm afraid that there was no restraint in my laugh. It was just a good, loud Ha! ha! The rest of the crowd looked at me reprovingly, while the auctioneer turned purple with rage.

"'He! he! he!' he exclaimed, imitating my laugh as best he could. 'Get out of here, you bloomin' Yankees.'

"My friend turned red and wanted to fight. I am a philosopher and wanted to laugh even more heartily than I had before. I took my companion by the arm and led him outside."

Futrelle is stopping at the Hotel Cecil, where they file the raw edges off the English customs for their American guests. Yet the management cannot 'monkey' with the law, and are compelled to close their restaurant at 12:30 o'clock every night. This custom appeared rather funny, and at the same time inconvenient to Futrelle, coming from the United States, where the fun hardly starts until after midnight, at which hour the sightseers and the visitors begin to go home from the 'naughty' restaurants and the "regulars" get a chance at the tables.

"I went to the theater a couple of evenings ago," said Futrelle, in telling me of his experience. "After the show we went to dinner. You never saw such a wild scramble in your life. It was the greatest race against time, with the longest kind of odds on time, that I have ever witnessed. I had everything from soup to nuts, but the courses came so quickly that I thought I was eating nut soup. At 12:30 o'clock the head waiter came around and yelled 'Last call,' and a minute later the lights went out. They wanted to put us out, too, but I declared that I was paying for the meal in front of me and I was going to finish it. And I did, while the waiter held a sputtering candle."

From the subject of "hurry or you'll get arrested" dinners, Futrelle switched to music halls.

"The 'alls, as they call them here," he said, "are very amusing, but, as Joe Weber would say, 'They are not in the presence of ladies.' They are not exactly 'polite.' Even New York wouldn't stand for some of the songs. On the other hand, some of the actors here are 'all to the candy.' I saw Seymour Hicks in 'The Gay Gordons.' He's a wonder. I don't know just how to describe him, because we have no one like him in the United States. He's Eddie Foy, Joseph Wheelock and Willie Collier rolled into one and played 'straight.'"

Futrelle is going to remain a little longer in London. Then he goes to "Gay Paree" for a stay. About May 1 he returns to England to take ship for New York.

The popular writer entered the profession through the newspaper office. He started on a paper in Atlanta, Ga., then came to New York, where he was for many years on the Herald. Despite the fact that he was sure that his talents lay in writing, he was never given a chance to do any original work. Instead he was given desk work and kept at it. He eventually went to Boston, where he worked on the American. While there he wrote a short story, which sold to the first publisher to whom he submitted it. Other successes followed, and after two months he retired permanently from newspaper work.

THE ELECTRIC HEADLIGHT.

Required Years of Experimenting and Many Thousands of Dollars of Expenditure.

The familiar electric headlight was invented by George C. Pyle of Indianapolis. Scores of other electricians in different parts of the country have undertaken the same task and failed. The invention is regarded as the most valuable, next to the Westinghouse airbrake, in giving confidence and courage to the engineer, and in the saving of life and property.

In 1882, Mr. Pyle called on H. H. Fulton, at that time president of the Steel Pulley and Machine Company of Indianapolis, and asked if his company could make an electric headlight for locomotives in accordance with certain drawings which he produced. He was answered in the affirmative, and in about three months the first locomotive electric headlight ever made was completed.

It was then taken to the roof of the company's works and tested. Although a crude affair, compared to subsequent lamps made by Mr. Pyle, the light it produced was regarded as remarkable. Most of the experiments since have been to reduce the weight and to lessen the expense. This has been done, from 900 pounds to 350 pounds, and from $800 to $200 a plant.

The transition, however, was accomplished by strenuous experimental work that staggered the stockholders of the company Mr. Fulton had organized. Among these was the late Lewis Miller, father-in-law of Edison, and inventor of the Buckeye reaper. After nearly eight years of experimenting, changing, and the expenditure of $70,000, all the stockholders dropped out except the inventor and Mr. Fulton. Those were dark days for the headlight, but the two men worked on until a new Indianapolis company could be formed. Mr. Fulton's courage and enthusiasm marked him as the kind of man who makes the inventor a possibility.

Electric headlights were placed on locomotives on such roads as the Pan-Handle, the Vandalia, the Michigan Central, the Burlington, the Erie and the C., H. and D., and on each of which lamps were tested. It was thought by Mr. Pyle that the lamp surely would stand the requisite strain, jar and vibration, but in no case in the eight years did a single headlight equipment get over the road without showing a defect, either in engine, dynamo or lamp. Engines of every known type suitable for headlight work were made and tested, but none proved adequate. In the last year of these eight years of experimenting, Mr. Pyle rode more than 30,000 miles at night and nearly every mile on a locomotive, and in addition to this work of anxious watching and testing he would put in hours each day on new work and experiments. But at the expiration of a little more than three years the indefatigable inventor was rewarded by completing an outfit that would do the work, and by seeing the first locomotive electric headlight go over the road without a single flicker or trouble of any kind.

To him and to Mr. Fulton, who had stood by him in these years of uncertainties and failures, the actual fact that a locomotive had gone over the entire length of the old Indianapolis, Decatur and Western road, about 150 miles, equipped with an electric headlight which had worked perfectly, seemed too good to believe. The locomotive carrying this perfect electric headlight returned the following night from Decatur to Indianapolis, and the headlight worked as perfectly as on the night previously. From that time success was assured.

The most impressive feature of the invention is, of course, the enormous power of the new plants compared to the old coal-oil lamps, and the gain in safety of night travel.

An extra good oil headlight will illuminate the track three telegraph poles ahead of the engine, while the electric light shows plainly objects which are thirty-three telegraph poles from the light. Thirty-two telegraph poles are counted a railroad mile. The reflection of an electric light can be seen thirty-five miles ahead, and a newspaper can be read three miles away.

The old oil light does not show an obstruction until too late to stop, while with the electric the engineer can laugh in his sleeve at an obstruction, and come to such a gradual stop that the passengers in the cars would not be aware of it."

Man Naturally Prettier Than Woman?

One of the greatest authorities in Germany on esthetics and on the laws of beauty has written an extended treatise to prove that nature has endowed man with far more beauty than woman, and that there is not a feature in a man's face or a limb in his body that is not superior to the corresponding feature or limb in a woman.

"If a man lives an orderly life," says the treatise, "he will regain his beauty. If he is vicious, he will speedily grow ugly. What has caused that thick, crooked, half-pendant lip on so many men? Tobacco—cigars, pipes, cigarettes. Where do the red noses and the copper cheeks come from? Wines and spirits. Why do the features lose every vestige of spirit and purity? Alcohol, lasciviousness. Live cleanly, live in the fresh air, and your beauty will be again as superb as it was in the days of ancient Greece. Our hair will return to us, so will our teeth, and our straight backs and clean limbs and bright eyes."—[The Pathfinder.

MEDICINE NEEDED.

ACUTE STAGE IN VENEZUELA.

Problems Which Cause the Present Trouble.

Much Tangled Skeins Need to Be Unraveled.

Territory Associated With Fabled El Dorado.

Adventurers, rainbow-chasers, El Dorados and will-of-the-wisps figure in the Venezuela question which from being in a chronic state of "acute" has become acuter, and if President Castro does not look out, will reach the acutest stage, which will mean a long farewell to all his greatness.

The demands made by the American government upon Venezuela, which Castro has so far flouted, were set forth in The Times dispatches the past week. The first position in Venezuelan claims used to be held by the famous New York and Bermudez asphalt case, but since the Bowen-Loomis scandal, so recent as to be familiar to everyone, and the proof that the company aided the Matos revolution, this mattter has been relegated to fourth place. First position is now taken by the demand for an indemnity of $25,000 for the expulsion from Venezuela of A. F. Jaurett, a Frenchman by birth, holding American naturalization papers. His case involves questions of personal character and the legality of the possession of the naturalization papers.

The much tangled skein of the Orinoco concession is the second which the United States asks be unraveled. It demands arbitration at The Hague unless another tribunal should be agreed upon, for the purpose of determining these facts: Whether the contract rights of the Orinoco Corporation have been destroyed or the value of its concession injured by alleged unjust acts of the Venezuelan government; whether loss has been caused to the Manoa Company, Limited, to the Orinoco Company, Limited, and the Orinoco Corporation, or to any of them, while they have been in partial or entire possession, or constructively in possession, of rights under the so-called Fitzgerald concession; to fix the damages arising to the present holders of the Fitzgerald concession from alleged acts of opposition or usurpation by the Venezuelan government.

THE FITZGERALD CONTRACT.

This contrac t is the one which brought out ex-President Cleveland's well-known defiance to Great Britain, and the resulting arbitration. The concession, originally granted to C. C. Fitzgerald, an American engineer, comprises 10,000 square miles in the delta of the Orinoco River, within the territory associated with the fabled El Dorado of the early British, Spanish, Portuguese and Dutch adventurers. It is considered worth fighting for, even to the extent of embroiling nations. It contains coal, iron, gold, silver and rich forest products. The concession was given to Fitzgerald ostensibly for the purpose of promoting settlement and development of the country, but there is no doubt that Venezuela looked upon it as really being to assure American protection against European powers of Venezuela's control of the Orinoco River mouth. While Great Britain threatened Venezuela the latter was glad to hide behind the flag of Uncle Sam.

Fitzgerald transferred his contract to the Manoa Company in 1884, a year after receiving it. In 1885, Guzman Blanco, who later became President, met an American named George Turnbull, and the result of the chance friendship was that when Blanco became supreme in his country, Venezuela declared the Fitzgerald contract void, and Turnbull received the concession. Eight years later, in 1895, when Blanco had fallen from his high estate, and was succeeded by Gen. Crespo, the Turnbull contract was in its turn annulled, and the Manoa Company reinstated by executive decree in the enjoyment of the Ftizgerald concession.

CASTRO ANNULS IT.

The Manoa Company had already sold its rights to the Orinoco Company. When the British bugbear passed Castr, who now was President, on October 10, 1900, annulled by decree the rights of the Orinoco Company on the ground that the original Fitzgerald concession, having been declared void in 1886, could not have been legally revived by the decree of 1895, but only by the signing of a new contract, which was not done.

In 1903, the whole matter was submitted to arbitration before a mixed commission, the practical effect of which was to restore the Fitzgerald concession to the status it occupied before Blanco annulled it, but it was also held that the question as to whether Fitzgerald was rightfully entitled to the concession since he had failed to carry out its terms, should be submitted to the courts for decision. In other words the claimants were saddled with a lawsuit.

Rudolph Dodge, who had been secretary of the mixed commission, endeavored to unite all warring interests, but while so engaged Castro granted the concession to five Venezuelans. Americans protested, and the matter was taken into court. On March 21 last news came from Caracas that the highest court of Venezuela had rendered a final decision against the Manoa Company and the Orinoco Company by annulling the Fitzgerald concession. The only hope of the various claimants now lies in Washington and the "big stick."

THE THIRD DEMAND.

The third demand of the Washington government is for the reopening and resubmission to a new arbitration of the entire claim of the Orinoco Steamship Company, operating as cessionaire and successor under the Grell concession, the case having already been submitted to an arbitration and an award made by the American-Venezuelan mixed commission.

The steamship company submitted a claim against Venezuela for $1,457,601, but was only awarded $28,224. Experts who have studied the case agree that the award was inadequate, and in seeking to reopen the matter the American government presents a strong case.

DEFILED BY PITCH.

There is not so much sympathy, even in the United States, with the company connected with the fourth demand, which is for an international arbitration to investigate the alleged rights of the New York and Bermudez Company operating under the Hamilton concession, and to establish the sum of its losses, in consequence of alleged denial of justice to the company in civil actions.

This is the case of what is known as the asphalt trust, the scandals in connection with which confirm the Biblical warning that none can touch pitch without being defiled. It led to the Bowen-Loomis affair and to the fining of the company $5,000,000 by Venezuela for damages caused by the part it played in the Matos revolution. However, the United States government has nothing to do with this; it is acting in connection with a civil suit brought by the company in an endeavor to maintain its rights. The company charges a denial of justice in the sequestration or seizure of the Bermudez Asphalt Lake by the Venezuelan authorities. Venezuela in return alleges that the company has not carried out its contractual obligations under the terms of the concession.

America's fifth demand is that the Venezuelan government shall withdraw its opposition to the alleged rights of the United States and Venezuela Company, an asphalt concern, to carry on its business in accordance with the terms of the Guzman concession acquired by George W. Critchfield, or, second, that the rights of the company shall be determined and the damages fixed by an arbitration.

This latter claim is more or less concerned with the asphalt trust. To the repeated demands made by the State Department that it and the other subjects in dispute be settled, President Castro has reiterated his refusal to arbitrate and the whole controversy has reached a point which may compel the United States to adopt strong measures to compel Castro to treat this country with proper respect. The United States has dealt very gently with Venezuela and its president, but the latter is evidently spoiling for a spanking.

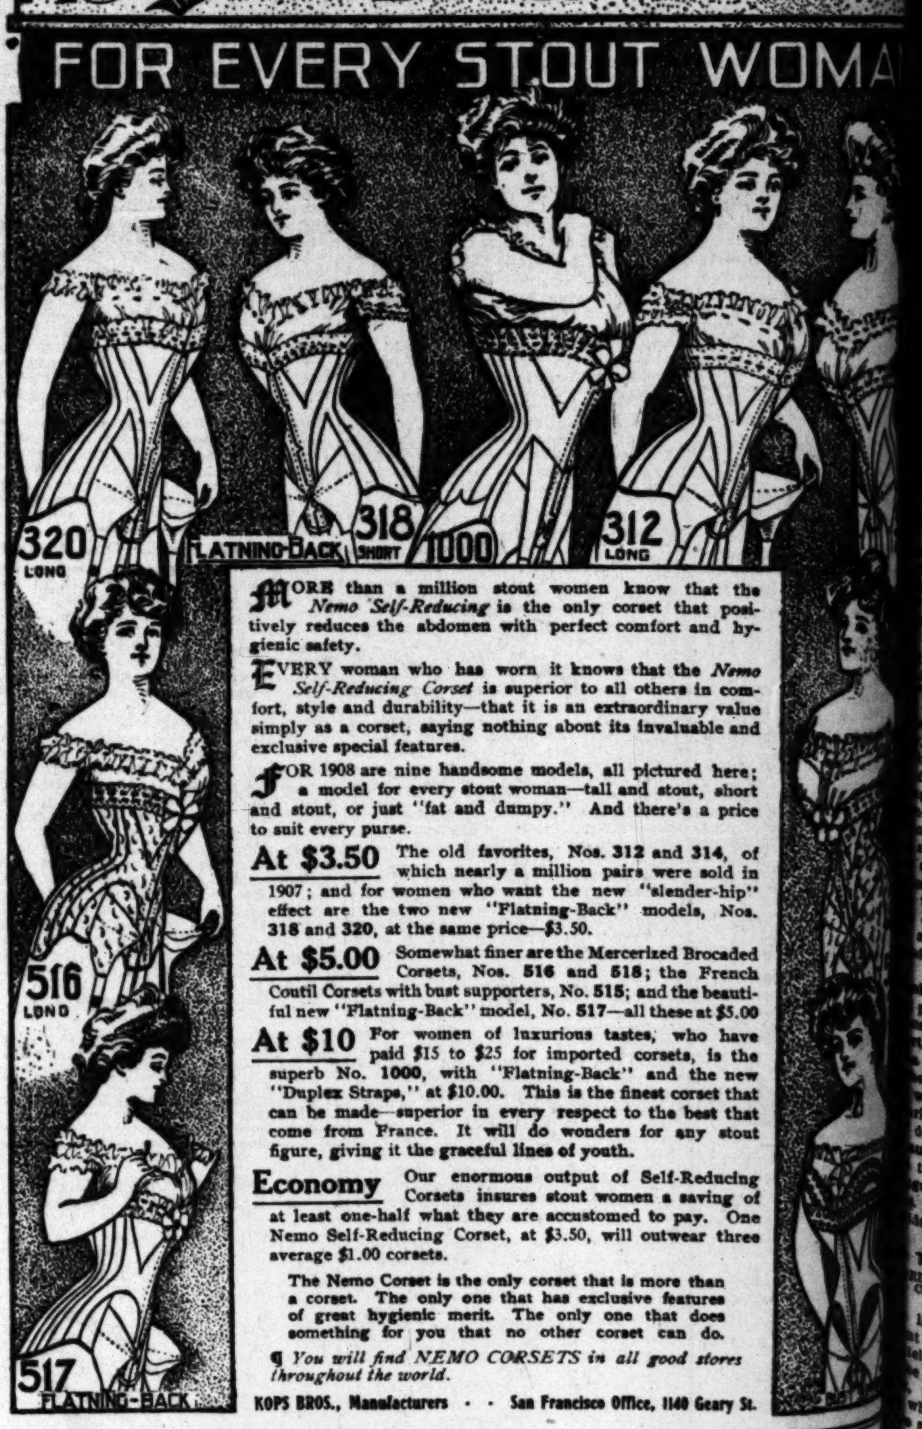
A Nemo SELF-REDUCING CORS

FOR EVERY STOUT WOMA



MORE than a million stout women know that the Nemo Self-Reducing is the only corset that positively reduces the abdomen with perfect comfort and hygienic safety.

EVERY woman who has worn it knows that the Nemo Self-Reducing Corset is superior to all others in comfort, style and durability—that it is an extraordinary value simply as a corset, saying nothing about its invaluable and exclusive special features.

FOR 1908 are nine handsome models, all pictured here; a model for every stout woman—tall and stout, short and stout, or just "fat and dumpy." And there's a price to suit every purse.

At $3.50 The old favorites, Nos. 312 and 314, of which nearly a million pairs were sold in 1907; and for women who want the new "slender-hip" effect are the two new "Flatning-Back" models, Nos. 318 and 320, at the same price—$3.50.

At $5.00 Somewhat finer are the Mercerized Brocaded Corsets, Nos. 516 and 518; the French Coutil Corsets with bust supporters, No. 515; and the beautiful new "Flatning-Back" model, No. 517—all these at $5.00

At $10 For women of luxurious tastes, who have paid $15 to $25 for imported corsets, is the superb No. 1000, with "Flatning-Back" and the new "Duplex Straps," at $10.00. This is the finest corset that can be made—superior in every respect to the best that come from France. It will do wonders for any stout figure, giving it the graceful lines of youth.

Economy Our enormous output of Self-Reducing Corsets insures stout women a saving of at least one-half what they are accustomed to pay. One Nemo Self-Reducing Corset, at $3.50, will outwear three average $1.00 corsets.

The Nemo Corset is the only corset that is more than a corset. The only one that has exclusive features of great hygienic merit. The only one that does something for you that no other corset can do.

¶ You will find NEMO CORSETS in all good stores throughout the world.

Modern Adventure.

THE STEM OF THE CRIMSON DAHLIA. By James Locke. Moffat, Yard & Co., New York. (Price $1.50.)

Whatever else the Balkan States may or may not be, they are certainly a great boon to the modern novel-writer. In case some concert of European powers should attempt to change their present turbulent status, the protective order of quick-action novelists would certainly be justified in entering a protest. Where else in modern times can a handsome American hero display his prowess without getting into jail or slug a villain without being called a rowdy? Where else can a fantastic tale of deering-do be brought up to date, without totally disjointing the plot?

So it is in the Balkans that the plot of "The Stem of the Crimson Dahlia" is laid. Hardly laid—pinned down might be better. The plot is too skittish and full of sudden boundings to remain in one place if not firmly repressed. In fact, it reminds one of a moving picture show, in which the film, if run through the machine rather faster than nature would indicate, throws pictures that interest mainly because they exaggerate into marionette jerkiness the more placid movements of everyday life.

John Markham of New York, innocently and rather stupidly gets involved in a political plot while sightseeing in Constantinople. Martha Ewing, an American girl of great beauty, is also involved. Markham stays with the plot in order to help her. He is abducted two or three times, nearly has a duel, fights with various villains in various manners, assists in unearthing a complicated conspiracy, and on page 342 is accepted by the heroine —although she objects to his clothes, for at the time he is disguised as a Bulgarian mountaineer. These are the elements that Mr. Locke has built into a very rapid and quite readable story. His main reliance is action and then more action, but he has pictured sketchily some aspects of Constantinople and Sofia. The probability of the story is very much open to question, and also the propriety of attributing to the Russian Ambassador to Turkey such methods as are depicted in the book.

But whether or not the Russian Ambassador ever would disguise himself as a one-eyed beggar, "The Stem, etc.," is a book with which to kill time. It is adapted to that purpose, and to no other.

Simple and Wholesome.

FOR MAISIE. By Katharine Tynan, author of "The Story of Bawn." A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago. (Price $1.50.)

Year after year Katharine Tynan has turned out her well-written and pleasantly-entertaining stories of Irish and English life, finding an appreciative public on both sides of the water. Indeed, her American readers are doubtless quite as many in numbers as her English ones.

"For Maisie" is her latest book, a simple and wholesome story, whose scenes are laid, for the most part, in rural England, not far from London, though Maisie is also brought over to Paris and Aigle for a brief space of time.

Kit Wells, son of a disreputable woman of London's lowest quarters, runs away from her and becomes a carpenter in the country. He grows into a man of strong character, though always remaining rough, uncouth and uncultured, and prospers exceedingly, partly through inherent qualities and partly for love of Maisie, a little child whom he has adopted. Maisie's mother, a gentle woman, who has contracted an unfortunate marriage, seeks shelter at Kit's cottage door. Kit takes a violent fancy to Maisie and marries the woman, who is dying of consumption, that he may have legal possession of the child in all his life. His love for Maisie is the one passion of his life. He has her educated and surrounded with luxuries. He schemes and plots for her advancement. In short, his every thought is for Maisie.

The little girl grows up into a very lovely and lovable woman, knowing nothing of her true parentage, which is revealed to her at the very last, when Kit wants to show that she is quite worthy, in the matter of birth, of Humphrey Stanhope, who belongs to an old county family of the bluest blood. Humphrey, be it said to his credit, is quite willing to marry Maisie without any credentials of birth and breeding, for he is genuinely in love—though he finds Kit, who remains an incorrigible cockney to the very last, a somewhat bitter pill to his aristocratic palate.

Miss Tynan introduces an American girl into the novel, a Miss Aurelia Low, niece to a multi-millionaire from Chicago. Aurelia is not quite convincing to us in America. We know—though Miss Tynan evidently doesn't—that well-educated Chicago girls don't say "downright mad" and "real lovely" very often. Aurelia, however, uses these expressions almost every time she opens her pretty mouth.

NEWS AND NOTES OF FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

There is now in press a new book by Elinor Glyn, entitled "The Savings of Grandmamma."

Alfred Austin's new volume, "Sacred and Profane Love and Other Poems," will be published immediately after Easter.

Jesse Lynch Williams's last novel, "My Lost Duchess," will be off the press the middle of this month. It is a romance with a mystery, the scenes set chiefly in Central Park and Fifth avenue.

Mrs. Henry de la Pasture's new novel, "The Grey Knight," is a modern love story, the heroine being a beautiful middle-aged widow, and the hero a fiery Welshman of 60. It will be published the latter part of this month.

Ellis Parker Butler's latest book, soon to appear, is "The Cheerful Smugglers." The smugglers are members and guests of the Fenelby household who attempt to evade a tax laid on everything coming into the house, an import duty designed to provide an educational fund for the Fenelby baby.

"My Day and Generation," by Col. Clark G. Carr, author of "The Illini" and "Lincoln at Gettysburg," is announced for immediate publication. Col. Carr has known personally and intimately many of the great men and women of the country, and his recollections cover our history from the beginning of the anti-slavery agitation.

"An Open Letter to Cardinal Gibbons," translated from the French of Paul Sabatier by John R. Slattery, is announced for early publication. Any one desiring information on the controversy between France and the Vatican will find this volume both succinct and instructive. M. Sabatier is intimately informed about Catholic affairs in France.

Prof. John Bassett Moore has in preparation "The Life and Works of James Buchanan," which he has written from a desire to restore to more just regard the President under whom the conditions became ripe for the war between the States. The work will be in twelve volumes, two of which will be ready this spring.

A new book by Beatrice Harradan, author of "Ships That Pass in the Night," is now in preparation, and will be published under the title of "The Interplay." The name is taken from a line by an old English writer, "And there was playe and interplaye of musick, divers instruments acting on each other in curious fashione."

PEOPLE AND THINGS OF LITERARY NOTE.

The young women of the senior class in the University of Michigan are preparing to present Marguerite Merington's acting version of "Cranford" for the entertainment of their guests at commencement.

M. Jusserand, the French Ambassador to the United States, has contributed a critical essay entitled "Ben Jonson's Views on Shakespeare's Art" to the "Stratford Town" edition of Shakespeare's works which Duffield & Co. will issue shortly.

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle will preside at the eighteenth readers' dinner to be held in London in May. The readers' pensions committee has been able to found four pensions at a cost of just more than £2000 and it is hoped that the forthcoming dinner will be devoted to establishing a fifth.

"Aunt Jane of Kentucky," by Eliza Calvert Hall, has been set in type for the blind, and Helen Kellar is now enjoying the sketches of Kentucky life. The author has been asked to allow the book to be translated into French.

Dr. F. J. Furnivall is now engaged in editing the "Old Spelling" edition of Shakespeare, an astonishing undertaking for a man of his age. Although this famous Shakespearean scholar is now in his eighty-third year, so great is his energy that it is only lately he has been persuaded to accept the assistance of a sub-editor.

The library board of the United States navy recently ordered eight copies of "The South American," by Dr. Albert Hale, thus placing its stamp of approval on a book which has been generally recognized as the only book of exact, ample and up-to-date information on the "Other Americans." The services of Dr. Hale have received further recognition in his appointment to a position of importance in the Bureau of American Republics.

William Dean Howells has been sojourning at Rome in a house in the Vio Venito just below Queen Margherita's palace. Recently he left for Genoa, bound thence for Gibraltar and Algeciras, and writing en route several descriptive articles which have been appearing in a New York newspaper. The previous visit of Mr. Howells to Rome was made forty-four years ago. It is expected that one result of the present visit will be a novel which will have its setting in modern Rome.

Edward H. Cooper, the author of "The Marquis and Pamela," contributes an article on Ouida to the current number of "The Fortnightly Review," in which he takes up the cudgels in defense of Mlle. de la Ramée, who deliberately refused, he says, to sacrifice her art for the sake of making a great fortune. Mr. Cooper cites this action on Ouida's part as an example to be followed by the rising generation of writers.

William Heineman, the well-known London publisher, is a man of varied talents. It is known that he has successfully appeared in London in a number of copyright performances of modern standard plays, and now he has been displaying his skill as a photographer, in a number of striking snapshots that he has taken of William DeMorgan, author of "Somehow Good," and "Joseph Vance," in Florence. Although it is known that Mr. DeMorgan is considerably over 40, he does not look a day over it in these pictures, all of which show him in the best of humor.

It is reported that Lord Cromer may visit this country the present season as the guest of President Roosevelt, one of his great admirers. Because of his unparalleled record as a colonial administrator in Egypt, Lord Cromer has more than once been called the greatest of living Englishmen. After his thirty years' service in Egypt, during most of which he has been the actual ruler of that country, he has retired to England not to rest, but to take an active part in political life and to write one of the greatest of modern historical works, his "Modern Egypt," which has just been published.

Dublin is rapidly gaining a reputation, according to the Athenaeum, as the most play writing and play producing city in the British Isles outside of London. It is a common saying that there today it is amost impossible to find a man who has not written a play or who does not contemplate writing one. For the independent theater which is responsible for much of this play writing activity Dublin is indebted to the imagination of W. B. Yeats and the enthusiasm of Miss Harniman. The latest recruit to the playwrights is Count Markievios, a Polish artist who five years ago was wholly unacquainted with the English language. His play is called "Seymour's Redemption."

Exhibited His Brain.

Walter Schneider, a 12-year-old farmer boy near Mulhall, Okla., was run over by a stalk-cutter in a runaway. "Beginning at the hairline in the center of his forehead," says the Mulhall Enterprise, "and running down to within an inch of the right ear around to the suture at the back of the head a clear cut was made and the skull shoved up and over at the suture joint until there was a wide opening at the lower side, and the entire part in a halfmoon shape was loose, so that each heartbeat was perceptible by the moving of the severed part. The doctor lifted the severed part and looked in on the brain; some hair and dirt had been forced into the opening which was cleaned out and twenty-seven stitches taken." The boy went to a spring, washed the blood from his face and then walked a half mile home. His doctor says he will get well.

Oklahoma's Bank Insurance.

The bank insurance system of Oklahoma went into effect February 14, and of its working Gov. Haskell says: The law provides that State banks shall insure their deposits by placing 1 per cent. of their amount with the Treasurer of the State. In the event of a failure we shall use this fund to make up the loss to the depositors. As a matter of fact, the history of banking indicates that 1 per cent. will cover the losses for more than ten years. While the insurance plan is compulsory with the State banks, it is only optional with the national banks. All State banks save one, and a portion of the national banks, have come under the system. The one State bank holding out is a small one that the national banks are using as a test case. In addition to our insurance feature, we have a very rigid system of inspection and regulation. The Enid National Bank of Enid, Okla., which is under the new insurance plan, received a $4000 time deposit from Nebraska. A State bank at Woodward received deposits, respectively, of $1200 and $2000 from Wichita, Kan. So, instead of driving capital out of the State, the new plan is bringing it in from other States. The bank deposits of the State now amount to about $75,000,000.

VITAL FLUID.

KEEPING LIFE BY INSULATION.

PROMINENT PART ELECTRICITY PLAYS IN HEALTH.

Reason for Changes in Comfort on Hot Days as Compared With Cold and Damp Periods—Every Person Injured by Dampness Causing Loss of Electricity.

"That vital power is electricity is abundantly proved directly, but the way we are compelled to insulate the body to keep life in it proves beyond a doubt that the vitality is electricity. A man cannot live unless his body is all the time insulated." So speaks a modern scientist.

"When a Leyden jar is put in a dry atmosphere," he says, "it holds its electricity for hours. When put in a damp room it loses it immediately. Put a man in a dry atmosphere and even a consumptive may get well and live to an old age. But put a man in a damp room without shoes or clothing to insulate his body, and he will die with pneumonia in a day or two. No human being or animal can live without the body being insulated to prevent the waste of the electric vitality.

"Water is the best conductor of electricity. Lightning rods always run into the ground far enough to reach moisture, else electricity running into dry earth would cause an explosion. In all electric wires for telegraphic one wire has to be grounded to moist earth. There is no person who is not hurt by dampness. A well person is given a cold, for so much electricity escapes from the body that he is left cold. His cold condition closes the pores, which are the body ventilators. This leaves too much waste matter for the excretory organs to eradicate. The whole body is in a weakened condition from loss of electric force and one is ill. When a weak person becomes damp so much electricity is conducted from him that it may give him pneumonia with many chances of death.

"This is why one's rheumatism or neuralgia gets worse on a damp day The waste of electricity makes the face nerves too cold. The neuralgia becomes worse before a rain when the air is moist, but if it should lightning to any extent, thus liberating much electricity into the air, again the neuralgia gets better. Enough electricity is in turn absorbed to make one feel well. In fact, Dr. Brown-Sequard and other authorities regard rheumatism and neuralgia as caused by too little electricity in the body.

"The lassitude of the inhabitants of low, damp countries has its natural cause in the vital electricity being drawn from the system by the damp-conducting air. The energy and vim of mountaineers comes from the air of high altitudes being dryer, and dry air is a poor conductor. One in the mountains preserves most of his electric force and one in the damp lowlands loses much.

"No one has been able to explain why in the dry Bulgaria 400 out of the 4000 inhabitants have gone beyond the century mark, and one recently celebrated his hundredth marriage anniversary. The insulation of high, dry air explains it all. The tablelands of Mexico often have centenarians.

"This is why consumptives have to go to the mountains, and especially to the high, dry, desert plateaus of the Rocky mountains. This is why the tired, overworked man and nervous woman go to the mountains in the summer. This is why all low countries are more or less unhealthy.

"M. Peletin found by the electrometer that the electricity increases with the distance from the surface of the earth. This accounts for the healthiness of high mountains as well as from the dryer air insulating the body.

"Heat dries the air, which is as important as warming it to suit the life temperature. Great cold is not felt as much where the air is dry as where it is lowland damp. Twenty to 40 degs. below zero does not hurt one in dry air as much as zero weather in low, damp sections.

"Heat dries the surfaces of the skin as well as the air, thus rendering it insulated from electric waste. Grease and fat are non-conductors. This is why the Eskimo and the Northern Indians dress in greasy skins and feathers. This is why the New Hollander besmears the body with fish oil. This is why the Eskimo eats the whale blubber to get more insulating fat into the body. This is why the fat man does not get as cold as the lean man, he does not lose as much electric heat.

"To insulate the body is the reason the civilized man wears the con-conducting cottons, silks and woolens. Cotton is more of a conductor than wool, so we wear woolen clothing in the winter and cotton in the summer.

"To insulate the body explains why the Indian, with whatever other reasons, sleeps upon the buffalo and bear skins, which are non-conductors. Because animal hides are non-conductors is why the civilized man wears shoes made from leather, a prepared skin, and why the Indian wears deer skins to keep his electricity from running into damp ground.

"To insulate the body is one reason why the Polynesian sleeps upon non-conducting dry leaves, and why the Asiatic sleeps upon his muslin, silks and hair mattresses. Feathers are non-conductors. This is why our grandmothers' feather beds were always so warm. Rubber is a non-conductor, so why we wear rubber overshoes on a rainy day.

"One of DuBois Reymond's experiments with the galvanometer was to demonstrate that when the connection was made with the instrument touching a wound or a place where the skin was removed the strength of the current running into the galvanometer is greatly increased on touching the natural skin. This proved that the skin is a non-conducting substance for insulating the body.

"An English scientist, Rutter, found with the galvonometer test that the needle connected with water where the hands of well people were, did not show as strong a current as when the hands of invalids were touching the water. This proved that well people are better insulated by their skin than are invalids. It is a known fact that well people have more non-conducting adipose around the vital organs and under the skin. This makes them more insulated and better preserves their energy. Some people are invalids solely because the body releases too much electricity into the air around them. Not understanding this principle, they have drugged themselves and taken every known remedy, yet some days when the air is moist they are very weak and never know why. Some sensitive, fine-natured people with little non-conducting substance in the skin have their electric vitality absorbed by some well person around them, and yet get no sympathy for being weak all the time.

"The cuticle of the skin is a non-conducting membrane. It is composed of a tough substance similar to that which makes the nails, hair and hoofs of animals. The hoof of an animal, like the horse and cow, is more essential as a non-conducting part to insulate the body from wasting electricity into the damp ground than for protecting the foot from bruises. Every known animal has a non-conducting substance over the foot. The whale, seal, walrus, etc., living in the cold Arctic waters have a very thick skin lined underneath with thick layers of non-conducting fats.

"Hair is a non-conducting substance. This is why rubbing the hair will produce sparks of electricity. To rub any non-conducting substance will make electricity. This is why animals not wise enough to wear clothes to insulate the body grow thick hair. This is why the sheep grow wool which man uses for clothes for winter.

"The same kind of non-conducting substances lines the lungs, the intestinal canal, the passage from the glands, most glands, the blood and lymph vessels. It is to protect the interior of the body from waste of electricity.

"DuoBis Reymond showed that a thin coat of ice would prevent a current of electricity from passing. Ice will also prevent warmth and vitality from passing. Cold thus retards the circulation alike of electricity and vital force. This explains why we are stronger in cold weather than in warm. On cold days we are better insulated. This explains, too, the lassitude of the warm climates —why a New Yorker is very active and a Floridan very slow.

"The electrometer is an instrument for measuring the electricity in the air. Dr. A. C. Garrett, author of Medical Activity, used the electrometer for five years, 1850-54, and found some fifteen times more electricity in the air in winter—December and January—than in the summer—June and July. This accounts for the weakened debility of summer and the vigorous strength of winter. The earth is nearer the sun in winter. On clear days he found far more electricity than on cloudy days, which explains why people feel better cold days. A January cloudy day the electricity represented only 136; a clear day registered 1,133. An average summer June day would be 47, while an average January would be 605.

"Dr. Garrett also fond the air electricity has its high and low tides. It is at its maximum at 8 o'clock a.m. and 8 to 9 o'clock p.m. and lowest from 2 to 4 o'clock p.m. and from 1 to 3 o'clock a.m.

"This explains why people die nearly always at these hours, 1 to 3 o'clock a. m. This rise and fall of air electricity comes from its coming and returning from the sun."—[Washington Star.

Economy in Cable Messages.

An amusing story recently went the rounds at Princeton concerning a last year's graduate, an industrious student of an extremely literal tendency.

At the beginning of his concluding year, it appears, his father, about to set off for Europe, had promised the boy that if he got his degree he would be sent for by his parent, who would take him for a continental trip lasting the entire summer.

His ambition thus stimulated, the lad studied faithfully all the college year, and in June came through with flying colors. Then he cabled his father: "Yes."

The old gentleman, however, would seem to have forgotten his impulsive offer, for after musing a bit over the message he cabled back: "Yes, what?"

Whereupon the son, in turn a trifle perplexed, thought it over. Finally he cabled his father: "Yes, sir."—[Harper's Weekly.

H LITERATURE—News From the Real

LOOK HERE, MR. BOOK PUBLISHER!

You take heed of what local booksellers have to say about book and magazine advertising in the Los Angeles TIMES and the beneficial effect it will have on sales! It's a pocket-book appeal from them to you. Their arguments back up what The Times knows to be hard facts. The high character of this journal, the wide influence it wields among the unusually intelligent class inhabiting this region who are its readers, the testimony of local dealers that their big book-sale day is Monday following the Sunday literary reviews in The Times, all amply demonstrate that a golden opportunity is within your grasp, Mr. Book Publisher, through advertising in the

Los Angeles

February 1st, 1908.

Los Angeles Times, City.

In the interest of our book department, allow me to suggest that in my opinion it would be a profitable undertaking for you to induce the big book publishers in the East to use your paper to give publicity regarding the new books.

It is sure to create a greater interest in the books, and bring up the sales of this, as well as other book departments in the city.

I have often wondered why you do not regularly carry some of the advertising of the big book publishers on your review page. Such reviews supplemented with clean cut advertising would be very effective.

Los Angeles is now a city of 300,000, and Los Angelenos are known to be book readers. A carefully planned advertising campaign would be a benefit to all concerned.

Your paper would be a big result bringer in this class of advertising. I feel that this field is open to you, hence this suggestion. I know it will be mutually beneficial to all.

Trusting that some good may come of this thought, I beg to remain,

Yours very truly,

THE BROADWAY DEPARTMENT STORE.

TO A GREAT RULER.

the early history of the says: "When Her- disembarked his little in what is now the State of Vera Cruz, he found it inhabited by aborigines of comparatively high culture. The inhabitants called themselves Totonac, and their territory was known as Totonocapan. The conquerer was not long in discovering that the Totonac were subjects of Moctezuma, a great ruler in the mountains, and that they chafed under his yoke. Shortly after landing Cortes visited their settlements at Quiauistlan and Cempoala, near the former of which he laid the foundation of a city that he called Villa Rica de la Vera Cruz, the Rich Town of the True Cross. He was well received by the inhabitants of these cities, making friends with those above mentioned and thirty other dependent Pueblos, whose aid greatly facilitated his march to the interior of Mexico. But this friendship of the natives of Cempoalan and their settlements for Cortes was not shared by all the Indians of the Mexican gulf coast. In the valleys of the Panuco and Tamesi rivers, that is, in what is now northern Vera Cruz and southern Tamaulipas, dwelt the so-called Huaxtec people.

"They had populous towns, having reached a high degree of culture, and they had never been conquered by the Aztec. At first they resisted the Spaniards, but subsequently were subdued by Cortez, and their main city, called Chila, situated on the Panuco River, about fifteen miles from its mouth, and certain other settlements on lagoons of the Tamesi River, were destroyed. The survivors of these villages who escaped slavery or massacre fled to the mountains, where their descendants, bereft of ancestral arts, lost much of their culture and settled in new locations."

A FORGOTTEN CITY.

One of the most important of these forgotten cities was Cempoalan. At the time of the Spanish conquest early in the sixteenth century, it was so striking a metropolis that it excited the admiration of the Europeans, and from its many temples and large buildings was called Sevilla. Its streets and plazas were said to have swarmed with people, one student estimating its population at 20,000. After the conquest it declined rapidly, and the number of its inhabitants so dwindled that in 1580 an authority says there were only thirty houses in which people lived, and in 1600 only one or two still remained on the old site, most of the survivors having been distributed into new congregations by the all-powerful Viceroy.

The adjacent forests and exuberant tropical vegetation rapidly grew over the deserted buildings of the once populous city, so that in a few generations it had become a place of the past.

Thus it remained until not a generation ago a Mexican lady, a collector of land shells, called attention to these ruins of a past civilization hidden in the forests. An investigator was sent out, and in 1891 the Mexican government had a survey made of the vast buildings, and models constructed for exhibition, which are now in the National Museum, in Mexico City. Since then, however, they have again been practically neglected, so that Dr. Fewke's party, in order to make a study of the ancient abandoned city, was forced to cut its way through the forests with machetes.

GUARDED BY UNDERBRUSH.

The explorers found guarded by underbrush the fallen remains of a metropolis over a mile square, but the main buildings, and those best preserved, were crowded into a limited area. On every side in this neighborhood, if vegetation permitted, were encountered evidences of former human occupation. Not only did mounds and pyramids rise on all sides, but plastered walls and fragments of concreted roadbeds lined with rows of stones set in cement, not unlike curbs, were seen.

Dr. Fewkes says, "So far as can be determined, the four buildings of old Cempoalan now standing are pyramids, the bases of former temples. They are constructed of a concrete core made of water-worn stones laid in lines one above another and faced with concrete. Wherever this superficial covering has fallen, especially on the stairways, rows of stones are clearly seen. The surfaces of these buildings were originally highly polished, so smoothly that it was supposed by one of the soldiers of Cortes that the walls were covered with plates of silver. These walls were decorated with yellow and red paintings, traces of which are still visible, especially in places not exposed to the weather. Two typical forms of buildings are represented in Cempoalan, one circular, the other rectangular. Both types have stairways with massive balustrades on one side."

TEMPLE OF THE AIR.

On one of the largest of these massive foundations rose the Temple of the Air, supposed to have been dedicated to the Plumed Serpent, or God of the Air. Around it are crowded many smaller mounds, indicating houses once possibly inhabited by priests. A quarter of a mile distant among closely built walls now in ruins, probably near the center of the city, stand two massive pyramids, one known as the Temple of the Fountains or as "Chimneys," and the other nameless. Not far away down a ruined avenue is one of the best preserved buildings, called Las Caritas, or "Small Heads," from the many small pottery heads found at its base, apparently having fallen out of the walls. Another pyramid, called the House of Moctezuma, and a group of structures around a plaza, together with these, are practically all that stands of the former city.

Usually associated with Cempoalan was a city called Quiausitlan, and in connection with its people, who moved to another site, was founded a town called Vera Cruz, where now "the remains of crumbling walls and the little church mark the oldest settlement of Europeans on the continent of America."

ANOTHER SET OF RUINS.

A set of ruins called Xicochimalco, not far from the present town of Jalapa, on the route of Cortes's march inland, was visited by Dr. Fewkes. In this region were found a series of large angular mounds of earth inclosing a courtyard now planted with bananas and coffee. They are different from the neighboring ruins, and many stone objects found near them are not like the Aztec relics of the locality, so that there remains the possibility of their having been the homes of some peoples prior to the Aztecs and of a higher standard of culture.

Not many miles away lay what was left of still another ancient town, with pyramids and fallen walls of buildings studding the slope of a hill and stretching out over a plain below. A large stone idol was still in place in front of a temple.

Other pueblos and pyramids, both ancient and modern, in the eastern part of Mexico, were examined, notably the pyramid called the Lightning, near Papantla. In this connection it is stated:

"The modern Pueblo Papantla situated in the midst of the vanilla zone of Vera Cruz, is a community of Totonac Indians, among whom survive many ancient customs. One of the most interesting of these is the game of the flyers, which was once widely distributed in Mexico. In this play men disguised as birds mount to the tops of upright poles and, attaching themselves to ropes, jump into space, seeming to fly through the air. It would appear that this game has preserved in Papantla some of its ancient vigor and that the performance here retains much that is more or less ceremonial. An old woman, the so-called witch, makes offerings of copal, aquadiente and a fowl, which are placed in the hole when the pole is put in position, and various minor rites are performed during the several days the ceremony continues."

TRIBES THAT BUILT MOUNDS.

Many curious idols, stone yokes, sling stones, paddle-shaped stones, bowls and clay images were examined in connection with the habits and customs of these forgotten early peoples, to determine, if possible, just what they were.

In drawing conclusions, until the region has been more carefully studied, little can be said with authority, but the archaeologist points out that the manner of structure of some of the pyramid temples resembles that of others farther south, and that the nearest northern analogues must be looked for in the Mississippi Valley. He says: "The northern Indian of certain parts of the Mississippi Valley bore somewhat the same relation to those who built some of the mounds as the surviving Totonac and Huaxtec do to their own ancestors, who erected the temple mounds of Vera Cruz and Tamaulipas. The present culture of the survivors of the Mound Builders of the Mississippi Valley, however, and of those of the Tamaulipas region is very different from those of their ancestors."

In what is now Indian Territory, before the European came, the tribes that built mounds had changed their mode of life to a roving one, and, therefore, it is hard to tell whether they were related to the peoples of Mexico. In any case, so much of the region about the Rio Grande has been unexplored archaeologically that definite conclusions may not yet be drawn as to the relationship of the Mound Builders of Louisiana to those of Eastern Mexico.—[Indianapolis News.

DOWN IN OLD MEXICO.

BY WILL BRANAN.

The Gringo's Song.

Sarah, Sal, and pretty Sue,
  We've left them all at home;
Martha Jane and Mary Lou,
  We've left them all at home.
There was blue-eyed Bess of Boston,
  Also Annabel of Richmond,
Likewise Caroline of Charleston,
  We've left them all at home.

But we find the flowers here,
  Like those we left at home,
Bloom more beautiful each year,
  Like those we left at home.
There's Maria of Monterey,
And Carmen of Chihuahua, say,
There's not a few so far away
  Like those we left at home.

For the charm is still the same,
  Like that we left at home;
It's a perfume without name,
  Like that we left at home.
With northern lily, southern rose,
It's all the same when Nature blows
The sweetest fragrance that she knows,
  Like that we left at home.

The Horrid Stuff!

It requires a remarkably dauntless spirit and a good grip on one's nerve to brave the terrible odors that emanate from a pulque shop, but it is a matter of history that Carrie Nation had the hardihood to venture through the doors of one on her recent visit to Mexico City. And she actually had the temerity to taste some of the national beverage. Then, indeed, she would have been justified in smashing up things with her famous hatchet, but she merely made a rush for fresh air, with "The vile stuff. Horrid. Ooogh."

The Poet's Lament.

When poets profound and soulful
  Can't butter sordid bread,
Their thoughts confounded doleful
  Had better be unsaid;
But poets are with us all the time
  Without a good excuse;
With nothing they can make a rhyme,
  Here's one—so what's the use?

The Latest.

The British Minister to Mexico, Reginald Tower, has just returned to the City of Mexico from the port of Tampico, where he was the hero of a wonderful fish tale. While fishing for tarpon with hoop and line, he made a haul of eight fish at one time, after an exciting battle which continued for more than an hour.

It seems that a large tarpon which Mr. Tower was about to land was swallowed by an enormous shark, and this is what caused all the trouble, for the shark not only swallowed the tarpon, but the hook and line. He would have swallowed Mr. Tower but for the timely assistance of a friend.

But after a fierce tug of war the man-eating shark was drawn up on shore and killed. It was then found that he had not only swallowed the tarpon, but six smaller sharks, thus making a catch of eight fish at one haul to Mr. Tower's credit.

Mr. Tower is the richest man in the British diplomatic service, and he can easily afford a few fish stories now and then.

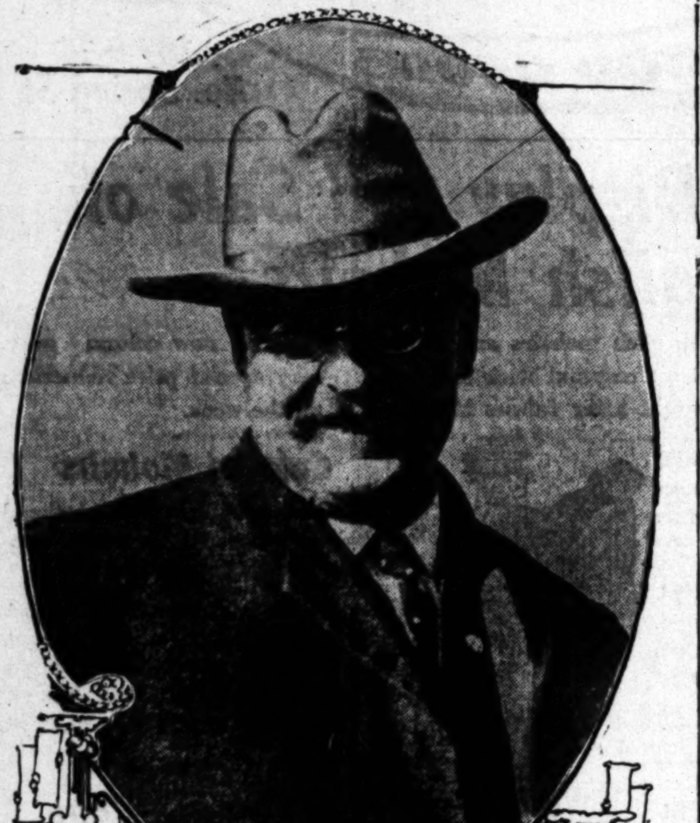
The Limit.

"Do you habla any English?" the dear lady tourist innocently inquired of a young man on one of the street corners of Mexico City, the other day.

"Sometimes," the callous youth replied: "I was born in Boston, bred in old Kentucky and kicked out of Texas. Yes'm, I speak it a little."

PEOPLE. Interesting Men and Women the World Over--Their Doin

IS IT "T. R." OR WHO IS IT?



L. M. Garfield.

Looks like a picture of Roosevelt, doesn't it?

But it isn't.

It's the President's double. It is an excellent likeness of L. M. Garfield of Xenia, O. Incidentally, it is an excellent likeness of Teddy, but Garfield is the man who actually posed for it.

The rough rider hat and thick glasses weren't put on just for the purpose of accentuating the resemblance of Garfield to the President, either. Garfield wore both long before Roosevelt was famous—not the same hat and glasses, perhaps, but some like those he wears in the picture.

Even as long ago as when Roosevelt was Police Commissioner in New York and he began to have his pictures in the papers, people remarked about the resemblance Garfield bore to him. This resemblance seems to have increased rather than diminished as the men have grown older.

Garfield rarely makes a trip away from home that he isn't mistaken for the President. Hotel clerks, newspaper men and people along the street always stare at him until the attention he attracts has become an actual annoyance. Cabmen, particularly, have mistaken him for Roosevelt scores of times.

In Cincinnati not long ago, Garfield took a cab at the Union station to ride up to the Gibson House. "What do I owe you?" he asked the cabman when he reached the hotel.

The cabby just laughed. "I guess there won't be no charge," he said. "I'm willing to haul you any day just for the honor!"

Garfield insisted that there was no honor in carrying him; that there was a mistake, but the cabman insisted that the President had suddenly acquired a ponderous modesty. Garfield had to fairly force his cab fare into the man's hand. He could ride free half of the time when he is away from home if he so desired.

On another occasion, in Chicago, when Roosevelt was expected to be in that city, Garfield was besieged by newspaper men at his hotel even after they found that the "president" had registered under the name of L. M. Garfield, Xenia, O. Being newspaper men, the representatives of the press saw that it was no ordinary story when the President of the United States goes about under an assumed name.

Garfield is a manufacturer, and has never gone deply into politics. He finds that his time is fully occupied being superintendent of the Miami Powder Mills, about six miles from Xenia. If war should be declared between the United States and any foreign power Roosevelt, through the War Department, would buy part of the powder needed from his double.

While never particularly active in politics, Garfield has served as president of the City Council in Xenia and as member of the board of public service, to which place he was elected on a reform ticket.

He has always been a Republican, and is an ardent admirer of Roosevelt. Like his double he thinks the stork should replace the eagle on the coins as the national bird. He has a family of six children, four of whom are married, and the stork has been kept on the jump, too, about the homes of the Garfield children.

Garfield is a few years older than Roosevelt and is a Connecticut Yankee by birth. He ceases to be a double when it comes to hunting. He says he could not hit a bear even if the bear was a blind paralytic.

ARMY AND NAVY MEN.

MAJ. CHARLES R. NOYES, for the last four years adjutant-general of the Department of the Missouri, has been reassigned to his old regiment, the Ninth Infantry, now at Fort Sam Houston, Tex., near the old city of San Antonio. Maj. Fred Perkins of the Thirteenth Infantry has been assigned to duty on the general staff, which left a vacancy in the majority of that regiment, which was filled by the transfer of Maj. Wilds P. Richardson of the Ninth Infantry to the Thirteenth Infantry, hence Maj. Noyes drops into the vacancy created by Maj. Richardson's transfer from the Ninth. As Maj. Noyes is pretty near the top of the list of majors, his friends hope soon to hear of his promotion to the rank of lieutenant-colonel.

Col. Charles L. Heizmann, Assistant Surgeon-General, has been retired from active service upon his own application, after over forty years' service. Col. Heizmann is the ranking officer of his grade in the medical department. He is from Pennsylvania, and was appointed an assistant surgeon with the rank of first lieutenant in May, 1867. He reached the grade of assistant surgeon-general with the rank of colonel in April, 1902, and has been recently in command of the medical depot at San Francisco.

Commander L. S. Van Duzer, who has been on duty as inspector of the Fifteenth Lighthouse District, at St. Louis, Mo., has been relieved of that duty and assigned to the battleship Connecticut as executive officer.

Lieut.-Col. William Carroll Rafferty has been made commandant at Fort Howard, and also has charge of the Baltimore military district. He has just previously served as post commander at Forts Preble and Leavitt, Me., but has been filling similar positions since 1899, having moved 13 times in seven years.

The sentence of dismissal imposed by court-martial on Maj. William F. Hancock, Coast Artillery Guards, stationed at Fort Barrancas, Fla., has been changed by the President to a reduction in rank. Maj. Hancock now stands No. 19 in his grade, and the President's action drops him to No. 46. He was convicted of violating a pledge to abstain from indulgence in all intoxicating liquors and was sentenced to be dismissed. Maj. Hancock is from Ohio, and was graduated from the United States Military Academy in June, 1883.

Capt. Ervin L. Phillips, Thirteenth Cavalry, has been detailed as professor of military science and tactics at Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., to take effect October 14, 1908.

Rear-Admiral Schley, U.S.N., retired, will attend the Consistory meeting of Masonic bodies at Yankton, S. D., the middle of May. The occasion will be the signal for a general public demonstration for which arrangements now are being made. The distinguished visitor will be the guest of the Masonic fraternity while in the city.

Capt. Frederick W. Cole, Quartermaster at the Presidio, San Francisco, has resigned and the same has been accepted. Ill health and personal business matters are given as reasons for his action.

Second Lieutenant Frank L. Beals, Fifteenth Infantry, has been placed on the retired list of the army on account of disability incurred in the line of duty. Lieut. Beals is from Tennessee, and served in the ranks of the army from June, 1898, until October, 1902, when he was appointed second lieutenant in the Sixteenth Infantry. A few months ago he was transferred to the Fifteenth Infantry, which regiment is stationed at Fort Douglass, Utah.

Capt. Henry Morrell has reported at Puget Sound navy yard for command of the battleship Wisconsin. This is his first assignment to the command of a large vessel.

Capt. Morrell of the battleship Wisconsin, Capt. Nicholson of the battleship Nebraska, Capt. Underwood of the cruiser Colorado, and Capt. Wilner of the cruiser Pennsylvania were all classmates, and as their commands are all at the Puget Sound navy yard, they have been enjoying quite a reunion.

CENTENARIANS.

HENRY DORMAN of Missouri, aged 109 years, who was discharged from the Seventh Michigan Cavalry two years after the Civil War began, is said to be the oldest living veteran. He has just been granted a special pension of $50 a month by Congress. He had also four sons in the army, one of whom died in Libby Prison.

Mrs. Mary Gordon, colored, of Kansas City, says she is 125 years old. She was born near Alexandria, Va., about 1782. She was the slave of Mathias Boone, a wealthy cotton planter of that vicinity, who was an officer in the Continental army. "I was sold, the first time," she says, "to satisfy a sheriff's warrant. My master's daughter, Ellen, was married to a young planter, William Gilliss, and I was given to them as a dowry. My new master was a spendthrift. That's why I was sold at a sheriff's sale to John Gordon of Vicksburg, Miss., a cotton grower. I was put to work weaving cotton cloth. I was married soon after I went to Master Gordon's home. We had nine children, but all except two are dead." Mrs. Gordon lived with the Gordon family until after the Civil War. Then she moved to a little truck patch in Warren county, Miss. She, with her son, moved to Kansas City, Kan., fourteen years ago. She is wrinkled and rheumatic, but still retains all her faculties. She is an ardent Methodist and expounds its doctrines to all who will listen.

Mrs. Esther Hoge Patterson of Philadelphia, celebrated her 101st birthday the 3rd inst. She comes from long-lived parents, her mother having lived to 93 years, and her father to more than 70.

POLITICIANS, STATESMEN.

SENATOR ALLISON of Iowa celebrated his 79th birthday last month, and can look back over thirty-five years of continuous service in the upper house of Congress. Prior to that time he served eight years in the lower house. There was an interregnum of two years between the two periods. His first entry into Congressional life dates back, therefore, to the direful days of 1863, when Abraham Lincoln was in his first term and many were wondering whether there would be any nation left for him or any other President to rule over for a succeeding term. As he never allows himself to be interviewed, he has the distinction of being practically the least written up member now in Congress.

Representative Aiken of South Carolina believes in patronizing home industry, and as proof of his adherence to his convictions, he wears a homespun suit made of cloth which is handmade in his district. The cloth is called Kentucky homespun jeans, though made in South Carolina by an old maiden lady who raises her own sheep, shears the same, dyes the wool, spins the warp and woof, and shoves from side to side the shuttle in an old-fashioned hand-loom until the cloth comes out whole and ready for the tailor's tape line and scissors. Speaker Cannon would not let Representative Aiken rest until he got enough of the cloth to make him a suit, which he has been wearing for two years, and he says it is as good as new now. The spinster lady who makes this cloth lives at Walhalla, Oconee county, and her name is Mary Orr, a cousin of ex-Speaker Orr of the National House of Representatives.

John L. Burnett, member of Congress from Alabama, is the shortest man in the House, and is less than five feet in height.

Senator Jeff Davis of Arkansas, when Governor, is said to have once released a negro from the Arkansas penitentiary and sentenced him to Boston for life.

William B. Sorsby, the American Minister to Bolivia, who was stricken with paralysis in January, is now practically recovered. He has gone to the coast to recuperate.

Gov. Johnson of Minnesota is just as tall as he has been painted and has just the same slight stoop; but is lanker and looks more the student and less the man of affairs.

Gen. Morteza Kahn, the Persian Minister at Washington, has been finding a labor of love in the composition and compilation of six textbooks, written after the most approved modern methods, for the use of the school children of Old Omar's land. The first two of these volumes have been published in Teheran, Persia. The Minister of Persia has named the first "Education" and the second "Encouragement." The other four are planned in the ascending scale of progress from the primer, to the books for the more advanced pupils. The Imperial Board of Education in Persia has adopted for use in all the schools of the country these new text-books.

Gov. Hughes of New York, receives his callers in the large executive room rather than the customary inside office. This makes shorter stories to be listened to from the country "leaders" who come in for a consultation and find it difficult to talk confidentially in the presence of the customary number of persons in the room

Representative Frank Clark of Florida last week pulled the nose of a fellow who burst through the storm doors of a hotel into which Clark and his wife were about to enter. Mrs. Clark's hand was caught in the door. After he had grasped the offender's nose a return compliment was received that left a knot about the size of a walnut and almost as green over his left eye. He assisted in his legislative work the following day with the conspicuous ornament.

CHURCHMEN.

EDWARD EVERETT HALE, the chaplain of the Senate, called at the State Department recently to see Secretary Root. He had forgotten that it was diplomatic day at the department. When he approached the Secretary's door the colored messenger standing outside said: "Are you a foreign minister?" "No," said the doctor: "I am a domestic minister." He passed on in without further question.

Rev. John Flinn of Portland, Or., 91 years old, is the last of the devoted band of missionaries who braved the perils of the wilderness to plant the gospel in the Oregon country in 1850. Notwithstanding his advanced age he is still active about his home place and enjoys good health.

Rev. Frederick B. Fisher, pastor of the Temple-street Methodist Episcopal Church, has created a stir in the church world by sending a letter to his congregation asking that his salary be reduced from $2200 to $1200 a year. "A preacher should be paid just enough for a modest living and no more," says Rev. Mr. Fisher in his letter. "We (myself and wife) can live very comfortably on $1200 a year, and it is not right that the church should pay me more. Rev. Mr. Fisher is a native of Kokomo, Ind., and was formerly pastor of the North-street Methodist Episcopal Church there. Before coming to Boston he was a missionary in India. He began life as a bootblack and has supported himself since he was 8 years old. Rev. Mr. Fisher is one of the most popular preachers in Boston.

Rev. Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, pastor of the Central Congregational Church, Brooklyn, has been approached recently by a subcommittee of the general committee of the Wesleyan University at Middletown, Ct., with a request to consider his election as president of that institution. Dr Cadman has not as yet come to any definite decision.

EXPLORERS, SPORTSMEN.

C. W. ROBINSON and Mr. Monrad-Aas, Norwegians, have returned to London from India where they ascended one of the peaks of the Himalayas to the height of 23,900 feet. This is one of the highest climbs on record. A fortnight was spent at an altitude of 19,500 feet without suffering any inconvenience from the rarity of the atmosphere.

Clarence J. Gerald and four other prominent men of Seattle recently went to Tacoma to hunt bear. Gerald carried a gun loaded with birdshot and was assigned to a post when the party started to beat the brush. The bear suddenly appeared in front of Gerald and he admits he dropped his gun and ran. He fled so rapidly that he ran over a precipice, and in the fall he broke a leg and sustained other injuries. Thereupon the five prominent men abandoned the bear hunt.

EDUCATORS.

DR. GEORGE B. VILES has resigned as associate professor of Germanic languages and literature at Ohio State University, in Columbus, O., and will devote his attention to literary work. His resignation will take effect at the close of the present school year. Dr. Viles is serving his second term as president of the American Esperanto Association. One of his motives in giving up educational work is to devote more time to the furtherance of this language.

Dr. Henry Mitchell MacCracken, the chancellor of New York University, who will deliver a course of lectures at the University of Copenhagen, arrived at Copenhagen. He was accompanied by his son, Dr. Henry MacCracken. The Universities of Christiania and Lund have invited Chancellor MacCracken to repeat his lectures there.

Rev. Monroe Vayhinger, pastor of the Methodist Church at Hartsville, Ind., and vice-president of Moores Hill College, has been elected president of Taylor University at Upland, Ind.

PEOPLE OF THE COAST.

R. FISHER, the weather bureau observer at the summit of Mt. Tamalpais, chronicled the advent of the stork in his family at the summit last week. "Babies come high, anyway, to the average meteorologist," he said, "but this little girl breaks the record, having made her advent half a mile above the level of the sea."

Mrs. Elizabeth Saunders, well-loved actress of the long ago, celebrated the eighty-ninth anniversary of her birth in San Francisco last week. Although somewhat frail, Mrs. Saunders enjoys good health and is so alert mentally that life is a pleasure to her as well as to her friends.

Neil McKay and his sister, Miss Clandia Colonna, actress, propose to start about June 1, in a thirty-foot sloop for Southwestern Alaska, McKay is building the boat himself which will be thirty feet in length, ten feet beam, and will draw only fourteen inches of water. They expect to be gone all summer and will visit Skagway, Juneau and perhaps go as far north as Seward if the first part of the journey proves successful.

Rev. Walter E. Tanner of Oakland was recently run over by an automobile, suffering injuries that prevent him temporarily from filling the pulpit of the Baptist Church of which he is pastor. Mrs. Tanner is, however, equal to the emergency, and she reads from the desk the sermons which her husband prepares, and as she is rather a gifted dramatic reader she makes a very good substitute.

Rev. J. P. D. Lloyd, rector of St. Mark's Protestant Episcopal Church of Seattle, has returned from an eight months' trip through England, Russia, Germany and France, during which he attended lectures at Berlin and Oxford.

Gov. Gillett has been confined with the grippe. This is said to be the first time in his life when he has been sick enough to be in the physician's hands, and it has naturally been a very impatient experience.

H. Engols, a boilermaker of Richmond, last week had the experience of his life. He was at work inside a twenty-eight-inch water pipe driving rivets when it broke loose from its fastenings, rolled down an incline and plunged into a ditch. When he was pulled out of the pipe he was found to have suffered a five-inch gash on his forehead which necessitated his going to the hospital.

IN THE LIMELIGHT.

LAWRENCE O. MURRAY, who succeeds Wm. B. Ridgeley as Comptroller of the Treasury, has been assistant secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor since 1904. He was for three years secretary and trust officer of the Central Trust Company of Illinois. Mr. Murray is 44 years old, and a native of Steuben county, New York. In 1893 he was admitted to the bar of New York and soon afterward became private secretary to the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. He was Deputy Comptroller of the Treasury in 1898.

John W. Guy, 70 years old, a wealthy farmer of Accomac county, Virginia, has the record-holding family of the county. He has been married for over forty years. During that time his wife has presented him with no less than thirty children. The youngest child is a little more than a year old. Both the proud parents are sprightly and vigorous, the husband working daily on his farm and the wife keeping busy with the cares of her great household.

Gen. Grenville M. Dodge, soldier and railroad builder, who was also over-chief of Gen. Grant's secret service, has presented to the curator of the Iowa State Historical Department the original papers and documents relating to his career. There are five large army chests filled with the material.

A. W. Craven, chairman of committees in the Victorian House of Assembly, of Melbourne, Australia, is in Washington. Mr. Craven has been a member of the Victorian Parliament since 1889, and as chairman of committees becomes speaker of the House in the absence of that officer. He is making a tour of the world, and came to Washington to see the legislative branches of this government at work. Mr. Craven has had a remarkable career. He was born on board a sailing vessel leaving Liverpool forty-five years ago, and arrived in Australia with his parents, who were natives of Yorkshire, Eng., when he was a year old.

Carl Zumisko, one of the mechanical engineers connected with the Trans-Siberian Railroad, was sent to the United States by Prince Khilkoff, the Russian Minister of Railways and Communication, seven months ago to study American railway mechanical methods, and has spent most of his time in the Eastern States. After an inspection tour on this coast he will leave this port for his home in Vladivostok. Zumisko says the Trans-Siberian line is a great engineering triumph for Russia. In his opinion it is marvelous that this one-track road could carry half a million men some 5000 miles, and keep them provisioned and reinforced, as was the case in the late war.

Col. Robert M. Thompson of New York has purchased an ocean steamer on which he will journey to the Orient with several chosen friends. The vessel will carry a cargo of merchandise, shipped to various destinations in the regular course of commerce, for which the usual freight rates will be charged and the proceeds of the carriage will be applied toward defraying the expenses of the outward trip. At each place it is proposed to barter for curios or more popular goods, so that the return trip also will show a profit balance. When the United States is reached and the ship and cargo are sold, Col. Thompson, it is said, expects that the enterprise will have paid for itself, the provisioning even included, and on the sale of the steamer a profit is thought probable.

C. F. J. Barnes of Detroit, architect, who has just returned from a three months' trip through Italy, England and France for the purpose of studying European architecture, announces that he returns to the United States a better citizen than he was when he went away.

J. Winfred Harner, chemist, of Philadelphia, is making a pedestrian trip to his home at Waynesboro, Va., a distance of 400 miles. Walking is a pastime with Mr. Harner, and he expects to accomplish his journey in seven days, walking twelve hours a day.

SCIENTISTS.

DR. WILLIAM R. VALENTINER, who has been curator of the of the new department of decorative art in the Metropolitan Museum of Art at New York, has arrived in that city from Berlin, where, for several years, he has been an assistant director of the Berlin Art Museum. Dr. Valentiner, who is 32 years old, is already well known as an authority on many branches of research. He has degrees from several universities in Germany and has devoted much time to special studies.

Prof. Edmund O. Hovey, associate curator of the department of geology of the American Museum of Natural History, will spend the next three months camping on the sides of volcanoes. He will be accompanied by Mrs. Hovey, and their home will be in a tent pitched on volcanic slopes. They will leave New York on April 16. Prof. Hovey will first visit Mont Pelee, at Martinique. He studied the volcano which caused such destruction of life in 1902, and ascended it while it was still active. There have been numerous changes on Mont Pelee, including the great dome over the top caused by the raising of matter which was too thick to flow over the sides. Observations of volcanoes at St. Vincent, Guadalupe and other West Indian points will also be made with the aid of scientific instruments. The professor expects to obtain many interesting geological specimens.

OVER THE SEA.

TOM PRICE, the South Australian Premier, is one of the most picturesque personalities in Australian politics. He actually helped to erect the parliamentary buildings in which he now speaks as Premier. Born in Derbyshire in 1852, Mr. Price spent the early part of his life in Liverpool, where he worked as a stone mason. Twenty-five years ago he emigrated to Australia, and it was not until 1893 that he entered Parliament. Eight years later he was appointed to the leadership of the labor party, and in 1905 he became Premier. Although quaint in his speech and possessing, perhaps, more candor than culture, Mr. Price can sway audiences to a remarkable degree.

Princess Senakoffska has arrived at Chantilly from Russia, having traveled in an enormous caravan, in which she is making a tour through Europe. The vehicle is drawn by four horses and contains three rooms reserved for the Princess and accommodations for thirteen servants. Whenever the Princess leaves the van to take a walk she is escorted by a gigantic Cossack, wearing a military uniform and several medals.

Prof. S. C. K. Rutnam, who is a native Hindu and president of Central College, at Colombo, Ceylon, in an address at New York on the "Political Awakening in India," asserted the Indian Empire was ready for revolt against the oppression and misrule of Great Britain.

Lieut. Mezel, aëronaut, with two men and women passengers, had an alarming experience at Berlin last week. The airship being overballasted struck the gasometer chimney, and then fell on the roof of a house. The occupants of the car were rescued with difficulty. A somewhat similar accident has also occurred at Rome to Duca Gallese, Don Filippo Doria, and Comte Bracci, the gasometer being struck by the balloon, causing quite serious injuries to the first named of the party.

INVENTORS.

ADOLF AZZOLI of Seattle has invented a fender for electric cars which embodies several new features. He has had a fender built and claims that it will pick up and support anybody the car may strike until the car can be brought to a standstill.

W. W. Hanscome of San Francisco has developed a mono railway that he believes will enable people to travel at the rate of 140 miles an hour. For twenty years in the employ of the Union Iron Works he has designed, constructed and installed every part of the electrical equipments of all the warships turned out by that institution.

Edward Hett of Staten Island, is to the front with a method of casting a concrete house. Mr. Hett says that he can produce an eight-room house for little more than $1000. If another $1000 be added for plumbing, wiring, piping, doors and windows, the total would run a little over $2000 as against about $4000 for any other kind of a house now known. There are other savings, however, in favor of the concrete house. It needs neither paint or insurance. It is weatherproof, fireproof, verminproof and it will last for ages, without repairs. It is cool in summer, warm in winter, and is, moreover, good to look at.

PHILANTHROPISTS.

MISS HELEN GOULD, whose numerous charities have made her name a household word, has announced that the present financial conditions will compel her to retrench in her charitable plans. These conditions have forced her to close part of her estate at Tarrytown, of which a portion is to be rented, to rent the Girls' Industrial School at Lyndhurst, recently built at a cost of $75,000, and to discontinue plans for opening the school for the poor at Woodcrest.

John O. Rockefeller, who has been visiting in Augusta, Ga., has been so well treated by the people of that city that he has bought a place there, and announces that he will make it his winter residence. The treatment he enjoys is to be allowed to go and come like a human being rather than as a curiosity. In Augusta the people have treated him the same as any other visitor, whether he went to church or into a store to make a purchase.

ARTISTS.

PHILIP A. LASZLO, the Hungarian artist, who came to this country commissioned by Lieut. Henry Lee to paint a portrait of President Roosevelt, has completed his work and also a portrait of Mrs. Roosevelt which are said to be the most satisfactory portraits the President has ever had painted. Lieut. Lee was formerly military attaché at the British embassy and is a great admirer of President Roosevelt.

Fritz Erler, the Munich artist, is exhibiting four pictures painted for the Wiesbaden Kurhaus. The Kaiser has spoken disparagingly of these pictures, and for this reason the artist decided to exhibit the studies in all the principal towns of Germany in order that the opinion of the people might be taken. He thus makes a direct challenge and public protest against the Emperor's judgment.

AUTHORS.

MRS. WARD, despite her work as a novlist, essayist and student of Spanish literature, has been essentially a home woman. There are few places more attractive or prettier in England than the Ward cottage in Tring, a hamlet in Kent, which affords Mrs. Ward the quiet and seclusion she so desires. The house has been decorated and furnished throughout on the ideals of Mrs. Ward, and here she surrounds herself with prize-winning specimens of Angora cats. From this retreat she looks out calmly upon the world, and her friends believe her best work is yet to be written. Mrs. Ward, as befits a niece of Matthew Arnold, is opposed strongly to all changes tending to lead women into the field of men, and if society only knew her, it would not become excited over her coming. She reveals her girlhood training in almost everything to which she puts her hand. Her early years were spent in classic Oxford, where her father prepared youths for college. Here most of her time was spent in the Bodleian library—the book-lover's nearest approach to the ideal hom for books. It was in this library that her interest was aroused in Spanish literature, and it was the Oxford atmosphere that had much to do with her strong religious convictions. Mrs. Ward may not enliven the Lenten season, but it is safe to say she says, "but I have never liked like the recent visit of another English woman, the author of "Three Weeks."

Miss Fanny Crosby, the blind poetess and hymn writer, whose compositions run into the thousands, and whose cheerful, uncomplaining spirit will serve as an example to others for many years, has just celebrated her eighty-eighth birthday. "I have been blind ever since I was six years old," she says, 'but I have never lived like a blind person. When I was a girl I rode horses by holding onto their manes. I climbed trees and did lots of other things that the girls who are styled tomboys do; and now I have such beautiful day dreams, in which I see faces and eyes that are dear to me and picture in mind the faces of those I love, and I do not think that the fancy pictures I draw of them are very far from fact."

ACTIVE WOMEN.

MRS. ROOSEVELT is one of the busiest women in Washington official circles. The burden of a good deal of entertaining at the White House falls upon her. She does her own shopping, supervises the school work of her younger children, takes a long walk almost very morning, and frequently goes horseback riding afternoons with her husband. Mrs. Roosevelt is greatly interested in music and is an excellent pianist. She is a connoisseur of pictures and is familiar with the literature of the day. Her skill with the needle is remarkable. Miss Ethel Roosevelt shares her mother's fondness for music and art, and Mrs. Roosevelt and her daughter are the best of comrades. Mrs. Roosevelt is said to be opposed to a third term for the President, having become wearied of the formal official social round in which she has lived for the last seven years.

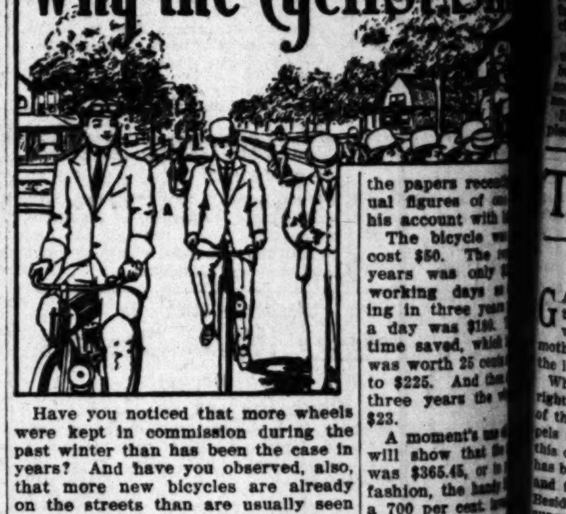
Mme. Porforio Diaz, wife of the Mexican President, has for years been not only the first lady in the land, but the first in the hearts of her people. All Mexico lovingly calls her "Carmelita." She is still young, though she has presided over the President's household for nearly twenty years. Diaz is 77, but you would not suspect it, save from his closely-cropped snow-white hair. And he is as proud of his wife today as when he wedded her, and thereby removed his most active political opponent, Gen. Ramon Rubio, her father. Their courtship was most romantic, their wedded life has been ideal. They have no children.

Mrs. Emma Severns of Burlington, N. J., personally cooked the dinner served to her friends on April 3, the ninetieth anniversary of her birthday.

EDUCATIONAL WORK.

New York University has had a student strike over the hazing of a freshman. Now that events have quieted down the students are discussing the effect of the faculty's "technical admonition" of the president of the junior

Why the Cyclist Sm



Have you noticed that more wheels were kept in commission during the past winter than has been the case in years? And have you observed, also, that more new bicycles are already on the streets than are usually seen this early in the spring? Well, if you have, it will not be hard for you to understand why the headline above this article is particularly pat.

Occasional hard times are necessary to teach us a few needed lessons in economy, and as the bicycle offers not only a saving, but several ways of gaining, its returning popularity is easily understood.

Of course, the biggest item, or the one that seems largest to the man or woman who uses the street cars daily, is the fact that the bicycle checks the steady strain of silver from his pockets to the traction company's treasury. That's a larger item, taking it by the year, as one must, than is usually realized. When the street cars are used four times a day, as is the case with many workers, it figures out about equal to a couple of month's house rent each year for the average man; an item that certainly is worth considering.

What a Bicycle Saves.

But for nine men out of ten, especially for those who have home duties to attend to nights and mornings, the saving of valuable time that a bicycle offers, is really worth more to the wheelman than the transportation he saves. It easily amounts to an hour a day, and any man can work out that sum at his own rate of pay.

A mighty good illustration of what this all totals up, went the rounds of

OUR EACH

NEWS OF EACH AND ALL.

IN RESPONSE to many requests from the members of the Each and All, it has been decided not to confine the society to Southern California, but to accept members from any part of the world. Many Southern California members have formed friendships in the Eastern States through the columns of The Times, and they have expressed the desire to continue the pleasant correspondence by private letter and through the medium of The Times.

The members of the Each and All have found it very beneficial to compare the climate, pastimes and methods of living in Southern California with those in the far eastern, northern and Southern States, and to exchange postals, souvenirs and fancy work of all kinds. Many of the eastern friends of Southern Californians have kept up their interest in the affairs of the Each and All, and the management deems it best to continue these friendships. Therefore, the members of the Each and All are invited to keep track of their old friends in distant States and countries, and to form new friendships if desired.

So a cordial invitation is given to girls the world over to join the Each and All, and secure the benefits of pure and wholesome correspondence, suggestions as to the best way to live happily in your environment, and the helpfulness of advice and sympathy in misfortune. Each and All Society is a universal organization for this purpose.

Many members of the Each and All have been unable to attend night meetings of the society, and for the benefit of these and for members living outside Los Angeles, yet near enough to be able to attend a daytime session, a meeting has been called for next Wednesday at 3 o'clock p.m. in the rest room of The Times.

The evening meetings of the Each and All have been very helpful to the members, and those meetings called for the afternoon should reach many who otherwise could not be present, especially the younger girls and those who have family cares to keep them home at nights.

Things are shaping themselves so that it is advisable to hold meetings twice a month. These meetings are held the first and third Wednesdays of each month, the first Wednesday being reserved for the evening meeting, which is always held in the rest room of The Times building at 7:45 o'clock. The third Wednesday of the month is reserved for the afternoon meeting, which is also held in the rest room, at 3 o'clock.

Members who wish society pins are again reminded to send in their names to this department, in order that we may be able to get a figure on them from the manufacturer. The price quoted will, of course, depend upon the number wanted. Judging from the design chosen by the members at a recent meeting, this society pin will be very dainty bit of jewelry, which all members will wish to possess.

We are publishing a number of letters from new members today, which shows how our society is growing. We shall shortly be able to again furnish our members with lists for post-card, fancy work and picture-print exchange.

Our president today gives a gracious welcome and good homely advice to both old and new members, and makes some suggestions which are sensible and timely.

It has been decided to make our pledge a feature of our department in

IN THE SCHOOLS.

GATES-STREET school, on the way to Eastlake Park, has 550 pupils, with twelve teachers, all under the motherly guidance of Mrs. Ransdall, the loved and revered principal.

While the work of all the grades is right up to the standard, the singing of the pupils of the eighth grade compels special attention. Every pupil in this class has a voice, which he or she has been taught to use with expression, and the result is beautiful in concert. Besides the instruction of the regular supervisor of music, these pupils are under the direction of Miss Horsiman, the seventh-grade teacher, who is also a fine musician. A new song, entitled "Hail to the Fleet," is now being prepared in honor of the visit of our warships.

The pupils of the graduating class have organized what is known as the Culture Club of the Gates-street School. This club has for its officers Alvena Schakow, president; George Giovanola, vice-president, and Jesse McKillup, secretary, and a membership of eighteen. The club meets once a month, when a programme of recitations, songs and instrumental music is given. The club is making ready for an Easter party.

The seventh-grade pupils are very proud of their new picture, purchased recently. It is one of Guerin's, representing Independence Hall. These seventh-graders are doing excellent work in penmanship and composition, as well as their drawing in perspective, and in studies in still life.

The sixth grade A's are very good historians, and with this is included the study of biography. These pupils diligently study the reference books in regard to the subject matter in hand, and thereby weave interesting and accurate stories of historical people and events."

The minds of the young people of the fifth and sixth grades are veritable storehouses of beautiful thoughts, culled from the writings of our American poets. Our own beloved Longfellow is the especial favorite of the pupils. Miss Strauss recently read to this class an extract from an educational monthly, treating of the calisthenic exercise, the class immediately adopted the extract as a motto, which is, "Stand as though you had bought and paid for yourself, and are proud of the bargain."

Conforming with its love for the American poets, this class has purchased a picture representing six American authors. This picture occupies a conspicuous place in the room.

The little women of the fifth grade are just beginning their lessons in sewing, which they are taking to quite naturally. Their work in this line consists of stitching, darning, blanket-stitching, the making of doll aprons and sewing bags.

The fourth-grade pupils, of whom there are forty-eight in the class, averaging 10 years of age, are reported as being very good spellers. They are all much interested in their manual work, which consists of making cardboard frames, for which they select their own pictures from magazines.

The B's of the fourth grade are said to be the finest basket workers in the city. These pupils are all engaged, too, in making gardens at home, in which work they are greatly encouraged by their teacher. As a result of this home gardening, Walter McCul[illegible] presented his teacher with a monster head of lettuce, which measured eighteen inches across. Casimir Bri[illegible] has had wonderful success with his pansies. The other division of this grade is very good at oral spelling.

The third graders like to draw and

THE PLEDGE.

"To make one another happier, to lighten one another's burdens, to share one another's cares, to be lifters, not leaners, to make the world a little sweeter place to live in, to be mutual encouragers, never discouragers of any one, to start songs, not complainings, and to do every day something beautiful, some kindness which will cheer and strengthen another."

CALENDAR CHAPTER MEETINGS.

General meeting Each and All Society, Wednesday afternoon, April 15, at 3 o'clock, rest room of The Times building.

Walking Chapter, Thursday, April 16.

Domestic Science Chapter, Friday afternoon, April 17, 2:30 o'clock, with Mrs. W. E. Wells No. 1015 East Ninth street. (Ninth and Mateo car.)

Musical Chapter, Wednesday evening, April 22, at 7:45 o'clock, with Miss Myrtelle Decker, No. 731 Carondelet street.

A Word from the President.

Dear Girls, everywhere: Just a word of caution to "my girls," especially those joining local chapters. So many chapters are forming, and you'd like to belong to all —but, dear girls, go slow. Pick out the one in which you will find the most interest and give that one your best efforts.

If you have time for more than one, join others, but I fear an exuberance, quite as much as a lack, of enthusiasm.

It is safer to go more slowly and be sure of your ability to keep up. Then, too, it's better to grow in enthusiasm as we grow in number, rather than to use that enthusiasm all up in the beginning, and have no more left in six months of a year from now.

I want to "boom" the Cheer-up Chapter. My heart is "tuned in sympathy" with any project that will make sunshine. Our Invalid Help Chapter is doing much for those who suffer physical pain, but I should like the Cheer-up Chapter to minister to those who are sick at heart and need large doses of cheer. I'm ready to act as chairman for a time. If you are lonely and need us, we want you.

Perhaps you're saying, "I'd like to join Each and All, but I can't see where I'd fit." Just join, and we'll fit you in afterward.

EVA P. REARDON,
President.

Report of D. S. Chapter.

Eleven members of the Domestic Science Chapter met at the home of Mrs. Baker last Friday afternoon.

The reports of the treasurer and secretary were read and accepted. The plan of mending and making over old clothes for needy children, will be undertaken by our chapter in the near future.

The next meeting of the chapter will take place at the home of Mrs. W. E. Wells.

Our chapter is anxious to swell the membership list, and will state here that it is not necessary to have a knowledge of domestic science to become a member of the chapter; all are welcome.

Report of Art Chapter.

The Art Chapter met Friday, March 20, with Miss Mathews and organized with Miss Myers as chairman. A committee was appointed to arrange work for the ensuing term, and a secretary-treasurer was elected. Some interesting work was reviewed, and it was decided that a part of the time should be devoted to the lives and work of the great artists. Subjects were given out for composition and illustration; it was also decided that certain days be set for sketching in our picturesque vicinity. Our object to advance ourselves and all in Art. Workers are to bring in work done between meetings for comparison and mutual aid.

The second meeting was held Tuesday evening with Mrs. Miller, No. 333 Douglas street. Owing to some mistake the notice was not published, and consequently our meeting was small as to numbers, but large in enthusiasm. Thursday, April 10, we met at First and Spring streets at 9:45 a.m.

J. M.,
Chairman Art Chapter.

The Art Chapter, too, should soon be able to report a large enrollment of members, for there are many students in Los Angeles interested in art whom the systematic plan of work would greatly benefit.

Report of Walking Chapter.

The Walking Chapter would like to hear from all the Each and All members who like to walk.

Our trip of last Thursday was a very enjoyable one, as any one who has walked through beautiful Griffith Park will know. We had three new members on our walk this time.

The most interesting feature of last Thursday's walk was the secret Miss F. W. carried. I'm afraid, girls, it is a heart secret. The surprise of the day was a real live Fluffy Ruffles.

Next Thursday's walk will be up Fourth street to No. 340 South Olive, where a meeting of the Walking Chapter will be held at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. All members are invited to attend, especially those interested in walking and having a good time.

MOSEY.

D.S.C and F. W. Chapter.

Dear Each and All: For a long time I have been an interested reader of the Each and All Department and have wanted to be one of you. I should like to join the Fancy Work Chapter, also the Domestic Science Chapter. Am inclosing a stamped, addressed envelope. Is there anything else for me to do?

MRS. G. D. (Los Angeles, Cal.)

The members of the D.S.C., my dear, will see to it that you will have all you want to do, for they are busy bees. Never fear that you will not receive formal notice to attend the next meeting of this chapter. There is nothing for you to do—until then. Just wait. I am so glad to know you are interested in the Each and All Society, and you are warmly welcomed as a member.

Object of Walking Chapter.

As a most enthusiastic walker I wish to say a word in favor of our chapter, thinking some may be deterred from joining us for fear the walks are too long. We are not trying to establish new walking records, nor do we contemplate "doing" Mt. Wilson immediately. We do not measure the success of our walks by the number of miles covered, but rather by the help we receive from association and the forgetfulness of self in the perfect enjoyment of nature's beauties, spread so lavishly all about us. And while our limbs possibly may grow a little weary occasionally, the rest to the mind more than compensates; and you know that congenial companions and the good fellowship feeling that prevails shorten the distance ever so much.

When we intend to use the whole day, we "Each and All" carry some little lunch, and while "storing" it away many helpful hints are gleaned from members of other chapters. Shall I say Domestic Science as to the make-up of some tasty dainty?

We hope to be christened at our next jaunt, and thereafter our report will appear with all proper dignity, and not merely called the "Walking Chapter."

Now, I hope I have fanned into flame the feeble spark that has been slumbering in the hearts of many who would like, but hesitated, to join us. We are very approachable, and one contact will make you wish for another.

As to the deaf girl, of course she may be one of us, for eyes and feet will serve her as well as others who perhaps hear too much sometimes. Everybody watch for the next walk and come out in full force if you wish to meet a jolly bunch.

MRS. J. W. F. (Los Angeles, Cal.)

The above explanation of the purpose of the Walking Chapter is told very clearly and interestingly. If all the members of this chapter would tell, through The Times, what thoroughly enjoyable trips these walkers have, the chapter would soon grow to a much larger membership.

A New Member.

Please note self-addressed stamped envelope for the address of the chairman of the Walking Chapter. Does my application to become a member of Walking Chapter entitle me to Each and All as a member in general? I always have been very much interested in all your doings.

MRS. A. C. T. (Los Angeles, Cal.)

Your application entitles you to membership of the general Each and All Society. The address of the chairman of the Walking Chapter has been forwarded to you.

A Stranger.

Am a stranger in the city and would like to get acquainted with some young women. Would like to join the Walking Chapter of the Each and All Society. Will you please send me the address of the chairman of that chapter?

H. B. (Los Angeles, Cal.)

This address has gone forward to you. You have chosen a good way to become acquainted with a congenial band of girls. With the "Walkers" you will soon become acquainted with the city and country.

Still Another.

Dear Friends: I would like to be a member of your society. Kindly write me the particulars, and I would wish a society pin.

MRS. H. V. (Long Beach, Cal.)

Just as soon as we receive our new pins I shall see to it that you get one immediately. Read our pledge published on the page. If you take it and live up to it you are a member of Each and All Society.

Not Necessary to Be Present.

I have been reading the Each and All for a long time and would like to know how I could become a member—how, when and where. I live twelve miles from Los Angeles and cannot come Wednesday, April 15, but would like to very much. I have a sick mother and cannot get around, so let me be a member without coming to the meeting. I will be 14 years old this month. I am a German girl. I would like to have you put my name down for one of the new pins.

E. F. (Burbank, Cal.)

Of course you may become a member of our society without attending the meetings, for the society is carried on mainly through correspondence. I shall put you in correspondence with some of our young members, if you wish it, and I know you will derive much pleasure from their cheery messages. Do not leave your dear mother to attend a meeting when she is ill and misses your companionship. Is mother too ill to take an interest in the Each and All? We have a Shut-in Chapter, of which she might become a member and thus render dreary hours perhaps a trifle less dreary.

Greatly Interested.

I read your page each week in The Times. I am greatly interested and would like to become a member. Please write and tell me the rules and what it costs to become a member. I would also like you to give me this lady's address. I am not well and should like to write her in regard to her treatments. It gets so warm one can hardly live in this desert country after June. I expect to come in to Los Angeles and would be glad to meet you

N. B. C.,
Holtville, Cal.

It will not take long to write you the rules which govern Each and All Society, simply because there are no rules. You are now a member of the society, since your letter has been received ,and you expressed the desire to become a member. The address you wish will be sent you as soon as possible.

A Would-be Author.

I am one of the Would-Be Author girls. We want more members. It seems to me that the English composition classes in both our local high schools and the numerous private schools in the city ought to supply a number of members to our club.

At least join the correspondence chapter if you have not the time to devote to the Los Angeles Club.

Come on, girls, a hearty welcome awaits you. If you do not care to make authorship your profession, why, just join for the culture and pleasure derived.

LUCILE.

A rule of the society is to send names and addresses with all communications, not for publication, but for the editor's information. This rule holds even when writers adopt a nom de plume.

A Good Letter.

I note the reply to my former letter in last Sunday's Times, to wit, that there is no age limit, and so many sign their name Mrs. that I'm sure matrimony is also no bar. Therefore, believing myself eligible, and feeling younger in heart than 40 years of age, I herewith make formal application for membership and inclose stamped and addressed envelope.

Would like to enroll in the Chapter for Study of Bible as Literature if it is made and correspondence course and not too great a strain on time and purse.

Will also enroll as a helper in the Shut-In Chapter as one who will write. Cannot promise about calling, but would if I could. Ask the leader to put me in touch with the one having the hardest time to "be reconciled" and believe all is well.

If I could get in touch with several who feel they cannot understand why matters run so roughly with them if God is an all-wise, loving Father, and be a little help to them, I should be glad of the opportunity, and feel my own experience marching through the Slough of Despond had not been all in vain. Sincerely,

A. A. W.,
Los Angeles, Cal.

You were born a member of Each and All Society, for your letter proves it conclusively. Even though you are only just now asking to have your name inscribed as a member, I feel that you have always lived up to the spirit of the socity, and therefore you are indeed very welcome. Both of the chapters you mention are conducted largely through correspondnce. I shall put you in correspondence with both. I am so glad you raed the answer to your letter in my talk last Sunday. It is so comfortable to deal with understanding people. You are still a very young woman, but I judge from the "M.D." after your name that you have already done much, and still there are, let us hope, at least forty years more for the continuance of your good work.

I wish you could, as a personal favor, make an effort to be wtih us next Wednesday afternoon. Can you?

Extracts from Letters.

I am still suffering as much as ever, and need money to buy medicines, and wish I had some stamps, as the only pleasure I have is in my letters. Still God has been very good to me, but I miss my mother so much. I hope to hear from you soon dear Ivy Leaf.

A. M. M.

I have been an invalid for sixty-one years with spinal trouble and suffer terribly. I would like some stationery and stamps, or anything that will cheer and brighten the lonely hours. I shall be glad for letters.

C. A.

Another year has gone and I thank you for remembering my birthday. I always need a little change or stamps, and God bless those who so kindly remembered me. I enjoy souvenir postals and letters so much. You know there is not much pleasure here in the poorhouse. Still I am not unhappy.

K. D.

I enjoyed the birthday surprises so much, for I have been a shut-in for thirteen years, with a complication of diseases. I have lots of reading matter I am through with and could pass on if I had the stamps. I hope to hear from you soon.

C. A. B.

I have been a shut-in over thirty years. I enjoyed the birthday surprises very much, please come again, as I enjoy your letters and gifts. I would like some leather postals to make a sofa pillow.

I am confined to a wheel chair now for eight years with rheumatism. I enjoy letters and gifts from my friends so much, especially stamps and stationery, for then I have a chance to chat with my pen friends; thanks for the birthday party. The dimes will help me lots.

M. E. F.

The addresses of any of the above writers will be given upon request. Send self-addressed stamped envelope to the editor., who will take pleasure in putting anyone in communication with the chairman of the Invalid Help Chapter.

EDITOR EACH AND ALL.

Member for D.S.C

Am desirous of becoming a member of Each and All and joining the Domestic Science Chapter. What do you think of a Fancy Work Chapter? Enclosed is self-addressed envelope for particulars. Sincerely,

I. F. (Los Angeles.)

You will receive a notice from the chairman of the D.S.C. and be duly enrolled as a member.

Stenographers' Chapter Again.

I would like to say a word on the subject of the Stenographers' Club. I am not sure what your idea is. You say that you have the names of six young girls who wish to join, but cannot find anyone to take charge of them. Do you propose to start a class in stenography with a teacher? My idea of a stenographers' club would be to have girls who are already stenographers, but out of practice for one reason or another, such as not getting enough dictation, etc., to meet together and dictate to one another and help one another in any way they can once a week or so. I think it would be a more helpful plan than organizing a class of beginners.

If the six young girls you speak of are finished stenographers, why not have them get together and form a club?

Yours very sincerely, STENOGRAPHER.

No, we cannot start a class in stenography just yet, that may come later. What we do wish is to improve a class of girls who already have a knowledge of shorthand, but who are anxious to improve themselves in order that they may feel competent to fill responsible positions. Your idea of the stenographers' chapter is correct. Will you let me hear from you relative to accepting G. L.'s kind offer to meet at her home next Friday evening, or do you think it will be best for all to attend the afternoon meeting next Wednesday in the restroom, and there organize? Let me hear from you as to this.

Thought It Only for the Young.

I was very glad to again see the Each and All page. I have never been enrolled as a member because I gained the idea it was especially for the younger women—those young in years as well as heart, and I thought myself not eligible. Several items I have seen have caused me to think there is no "age limit," and hence I would like to be a member of the General Circle.

I shall not be able to attend many meetings, but if there are any among the members who are having a struggle to understand how God can be a loving Father and still allow so many heavy burdens and disappointments to come to them, I should like to correspond with them. Possibly I may, with God's help, be of some use to them, having known what it was to ask, "[illegible] why?"—and feel as though all things [illegible] going wrong and there was little [illegible] in trying to do right or "have faith," [illegible] of the things good people preach to the afflicted and ofttimes heavy laden. If there is one such fainting soul among the members to whom any word of mine may help I shall be glad to do so.

A. W.,
Los Angeles.

I judge from your letter, you are just one of the sort of members we need in our Each and All Society, and I am sincerely glad you have at last decided to become one of us. Rest assured your kind offer will be accepted, and there will be a heavy demand made on your cheery messages.

The Babies and the School Children—Pictures and Points Here and There.

IN THE SCHOOLS.

GATES-STREET school, on the way to Eastlake Park, has 550 pupils, with twelve teachers, all under the motherly guidance of Mrs. Ransdall, the loved and revered principal.

While the work of all the grades is right up to the standard, the singing of the pupils of the eighth grade commands special attention. Every pupil in this class has a voice, which he or she has been taught to use with expression, and the result is beautiful in concert. Besides the instruction of the regular supervisor of music, these pupils are under the direction of Miss Horsiman, the seventh-grade teacher, who is also a fine musician. A new song, entitled "Hail to the Fleet," is now being prepared in honor of the visit of our warships.

The pupils of the graduating class have organized what is known as the [illegible] Club of the Gates-street school. This club has for its officers [illegible] Schakow, president; George [illegible], vice-president, and Jesse [illegible], secretary, and a membership of eighteen. The club meets once a month, when a programme of recitations, songs and instrumental music is given. The club is making ready for an Easter party.

The seventh-grade pupils are very proud of their new picture, purchased recently. It is one of Guerin's, representing Independence Hall. These seventh-graders are doing excellent work in penmanship and composition, as well as their drawing in perspective, and in studies in still life.

The sixth grade A's are very good historians, and with this is included the study of biography. These pupils diligently study the reference books in regard to the subject matter in hand, and thereby weave interesting and accurate stories of historical people and events."

The minds of the young people of the fifth and sixth grades are veritable storehouses of beautiful thoughts, culled from the writings of our American poets. Our own beloved Longfellow is the especial favorite of the pupils. Miss Strauss recently read to this class an extract from an educational monthly, treating of the calisthenic exercise, the class immediately adopted the extract as a motto, which is, "Stand as though you had bought and paid for yourself, and are proud of the bargain."

Conforming with its love for the American poets, this class has purchased a picture representing six American authors. This picture occupies a conspicuous place in the room.

The little women of the fifth grade are just beginning their lessons in sewing, which they are taking to quite naturally. Their work in this line consists of stitching, darning, blanket-stitching, the making of doll aprons and sewing bags.

The fourth-grade pupils, of whom there are forty-eight in the class, averaging 10 years of age, are reported as being very good spellers. They are as much interested in their manual work, which consists of making cardboard frames, for which they select their own pictures from magazines.

The B's of the fourth grade are said to be the finest basket workers in the city. These pupils are all engaged, too, in making gardens at home, in which work they are greatly encouraged by their teacher. As a result of this home gardening, Walter McCul[illegible] presented his teacher with a monster head of lettuce, which measured [illegible] inches across. Casimir Bri[illegible] has had wonderful success with his garden. The other division of this grade is very good at oral spelling.

The third graders like to draw and paint; they also like to have stories read to them and then retell these stories in their own words.

The two lower grades, representing four classes, occupy a separate building from that of the other grades. These classes with combined effort will decorate the hall of this building with a number of pretty pictures, obtained through contributions of the children, which all may thus enjoy.

The first grade B's are now doing some very pretty and intricate mat weaving. They are also doing crayon work, taking natural flowers as models.

A pretty flag has just been completed by the little people. It is made entirely of folded squares of red, white and blue paper, all of the pupils making two or three squares apiece for the flag, which is hung in the class-room. These same little people recite extracts from "Hiawatha" very well.

There are forty-five little kindergartners in the Gates-street school, and their favorite song is "America," which proves them to be very patriotic. They sing the national hymn standing. This is very difficult singing for tots ranging from 4 to 6 years. Chester McCarthy, 4½, is the best singer in the class. These little people can sing off all of the Mother Goose rhymes, these jingles being set to different time in order to exercise them in rhythm work.

The Twenty-third-avenue school.—There are six grades taught in this school, along with cookery for the girls and sloyd for the boys. There are 265 young people on the class roll. The pupils from Griffin avenue and Gates-street school, attend here also for cookery and sloyd.

The girls in the cookery department were engaged in making meat pie Wednesday, and judging from the care with which this was being prepared it must have proved a very appetizing dish. One hundred and fifty girls are being taught cookery in this school.

The sixth-grade pupils are also making a study of Longfellow, and they are now memorizing his "Psalm of Life." The fifth-grade scholars were quiet as mice, engaged in studying a reading lesson, last Wednesday. These reading lessons are studied and afterward written from memory. Alex Duncan and Helen Smith are the good readers of the class. The girls of this class like to sew. "Sailing Around the World" is the title of the song this class will sing in honor of the coming of the fleet.

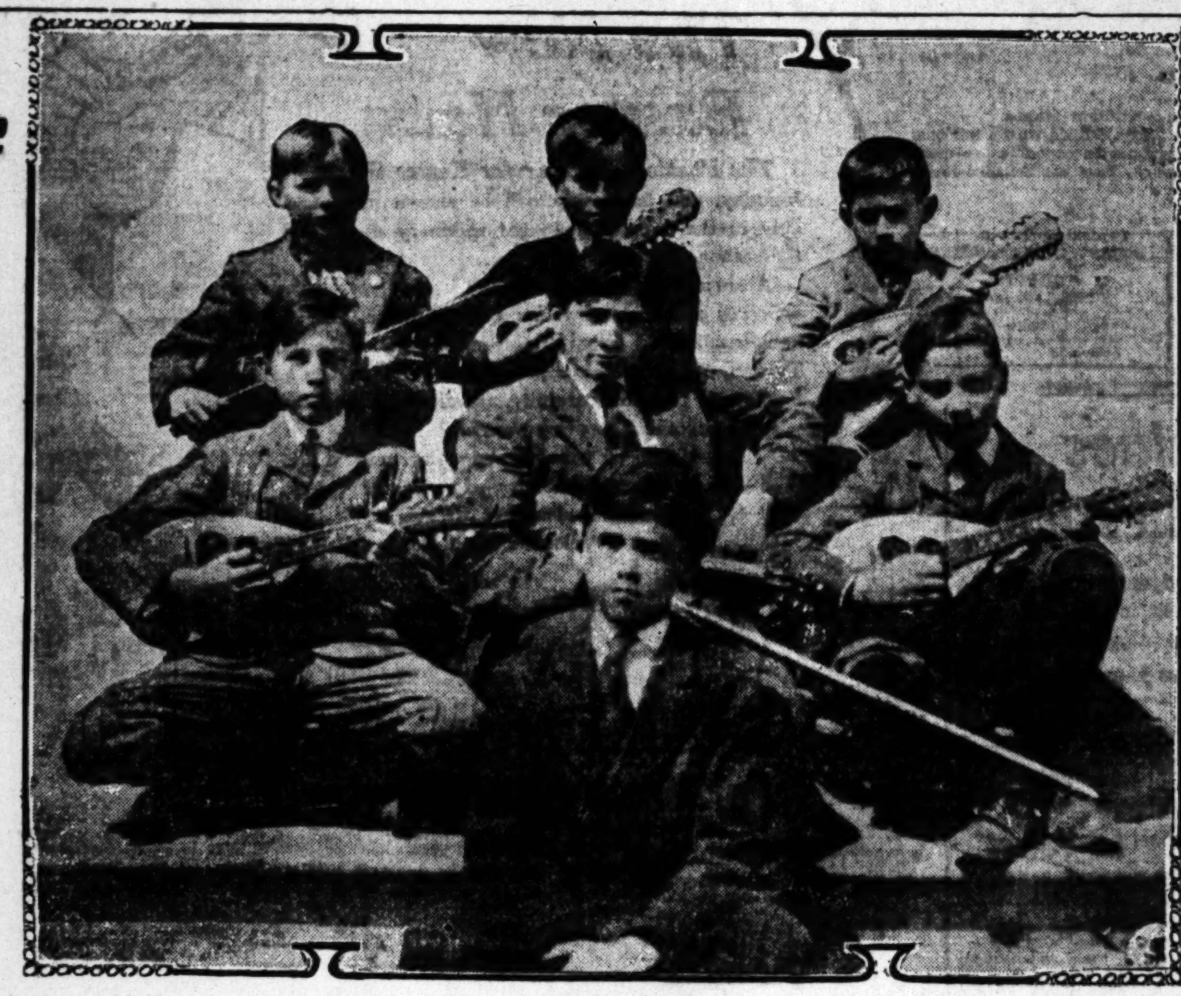
The fifth-grade pupils are interested in the study of pottery, , in connection with their drawing. They recently visited a pottery, taking observations there, they then made clay models, and wrote compositions on the subject. This class has memorized a number of quotations, in connection with the language work. Wednesday is quotation day, a number of new ones are always added to the store on this day.

The Pritchard-street school—This school is nestled comfortably at the base of the foothills away out in east Los Angeles. It has only been occupied since the middle of February, and here Miss Thiel rules her forty-five young charges very lovingly, and they in turn are very devoted to her, and responding with earnest efforts.

Peter Belusch, only 7 years old, is Miss Thiel's self-constituted assistant. Peter is never so happy as when he can help out in some way. He is monitor, civic league officer and all-around leader all in one.

The little people here range from 6 to 9 years of age. First and second grades with two divisions of each, keep the one teacher very busy without giving the teacher much chance for individual work. They are all deeply interested in the manual work, which consists of paper folding, mat making and bead stringing. They are very proud of their school, too, being loathe to leave it even when school is dismissed.

The hill right to the rear of the building the children have called "Our hill." Up this hill every morning and then a run down is the exhilarating exercise enjoyed by teacher and children each morning just before school.



Norwood School Orchestra.

Young Musicians.

The boys whose picture is here reproduced are the young musicians forming the orchestra of the Norwood-street school. Archie Chamlee is the leader of the orchestra, being already a violinist of rare ability. Earle Connors plays second violin, while Charles Bayley, Robert Wells, Milo Johnson and Henry Schaefer play the mandolin, with Francis Carey as pianist.

The boys are very anxious to keep this, as it has always been, a Boys' Orchestra, with no help whatever from the girls. They practice faithfully, under the direction of the leader and are thus capable of furnishing inspiring music three times a day for the marching girls and boys.

The Fleet.

BY LEE SKINNER, AGED 12 YEARS.

Should the Japanese navy try to slip into San Pedro some dark night when "Fighting Bob" Evans's sixteen war vessels are anchored there, they would go back a very demoralized fleet. In less than a minute they would find it light as day, from the bright rays of the searchlights, with which each ship is provided.

While they were recovering from their astonishment, the twelve-inch guns would begin to boom, and they would find a much sharper welcome than they had anticipated.

The world would then wake up and really believe that the jackies of the American fleet are the world's best gunners.

Not so quick would they want to pick a fuss with our country, and it would convince them that it would be useless to try and compete with our men and navy.

Gates-street school, seventh grade.

The Battle of San Pedro.

While visiting the Connecticut I heard a man shout to the mate, "Look through the glass and see what's out there." He looked through it and exclaimed, "I declare it's a strange warship. Go and tell the captain."

Soon the captain hurried out with a more powerful glass. After looking through it he said: "Why, it's flying the Japanese flag. I wonder what she is doing out there, now she is going away."

A consultation was held and no one seemed to know anything about it being there before.

"Well," said the captain, "be on the lookout tonight. They may want to take us by surprise. Remove all visitors from the ship and inform the other ones."

I wanted to stay on so I hid in the storeroom. After waiting for what seemed to me a day, I ventured from my hiding place to get some fresh air. It was quite dark, so I hid in a shadow and it soon got very dark. The sailors did not sing and dance as usual that night, but waited in silence. They watched the grand sight made by the play of powerful searchlights on ships and water.

Suddenly I heard an excited voice saying: "Look there, over to the right." There a searchlight was turned on an immense warship, larger than any of those of our United States.

A volley of shot came from this ship, and then the captain of our ship commanded, "Clear the decks." All obstructions to rapid firing were immediately cleared away, and we started to reply to the enemy's salute with ten-pounders. The Japanese were now using their rapid-fire guns, and it was found that we were almost entirely surrounded by the enemy's ships.

Our men had hard work, but soon the marksmanship of the best gunners in the world began to tell on the enemy.

Suddenly all the waters at the side of our ship rose high into the air, and fell again with a deafening roar. It was a Japanese torpedo, and we had had a narrow escape.

Men had to shout to be heard amid the noise of whistling shells about our heads and on all sides.

I heard the captain shout: "See that ship bearing down on us. Send out two torpedoes to destroy it."

They were soon dispatched and the captain breathed a sigh of relief. Soon the water was seen to rise in front of the enemy's ship, and the captain grew anxious. His fears were soon dispelled, for the ship was seen to go to pieces and fragments flew high into the air.

"Good shot!" said the captain.

The shooting lasted till it began to get light, and the Japs evidently had received the worst of the bargain. The ocean was strewn with fragments of vessels, and the other ships were swiftly retreating.

The captain espied one about a mile away, and said: "Boys, try your target practice on that ship out there." In about ten minutes it sank to the bottom riddled with holes.

I thought Japan was not likely to attack the Americans again very soon after this lesson.

I took the first boat for the shore, and went home full of admiration for the United States and our protectors.

GATES-STREET SCHOOL,
Seventh Grade.

My Good-for-Nothing.

"What are you good for, my brave, little man,
Answer that question for me if you can;
You with your fingers as white as a nun's;
You with your ringlets as bright as the sun,
All the day long with your busy contriving,
Into all mischief and fun you are driving;
See if your wise little noddle can tell
What you are good for. Now, ponder it well."

Over the carpet the dear little feet
Came with a patter to climb on my seat,
Two little hands pressing soft on my face,
Drew me down close in a loving embrace,
Two merry eyes, full of frolic and glee,
Under their lashes looked up unto me,
Two rosy lips gave the answer so true,
"Good to love you, mamma. Good to love you."

Mrs. Thomas Henry Carter.

MONTANA SENATOR'S WIFE TELLS ENTERTAININGLY ABOUT THE INDIAN COUNTRY OF THE ROCKIES.

By Margaret B. Downing.

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.)

WASHINGTON, April 4.—"These are the times when one may become famous through the founding of useful societies," remarked Mrs. Carter, wife of the Montana Senator, in a recent interview. "I think a field presents itself for the League of Patriotic American Women. Last summer, I entertained some British acquaintances and some Washington friends by taking them through the Indian country of the Little Rockies in true emigrant fashion. Capt. F. E. C. Ryan of the Royal Navy, after feasting his eye on the superb scenery and satisfying his soul with a really novel experience in the Indian dances, remarked that he feared American womankind, lovely, charming and delightful in every other particular, was not patriotic. 'No really patriotic American would fly to Europe and the East while such wonders unexplored lie within the bounds of her own country,' he explained. The League of Patriotic American Women should pledge themselves to see and understand the wonders of their own land before seeking foreign wonders.

"In Washington it appeals to one particularly, how alien a true blue American can be in the capital city of her own land. To the majority of those whom one meets the great country west of the Mississippi lies off the social map, and is as unknown as the land of the Grand Llama. Yet we possess a civilization which, though young, is promising and already among the interesting features of the national drama. Helena is a small city as reckoned with the capitals of older States, yet when a recent army commission was entertained there, one of the bronzed warriors remarked that he never saw so many handsome women or beautiful gowns. Which remark proves, without further argument, that in the paramount point, the womankind of Helena has not lagged behind her eastern sisters. Paris gowns, millinery and jewels are the rule, not the exception, though there exists the element which prefers American goods of all kind. But when women can afford to wear imported finery as their daily apparel, it speaks volumes for their material prosperity.

"But beautiful cities, handsome women and other evidences of culture, such as fine public buildings, promising schools of art and music and well-equipped seats for higher learning are not unique attractions in the United States. Montana's boast is the grand scenery which far surpasses the beaten roads of travel in Switzerland or other tourist playgrounds of the Old World. To the majestic landscape and the exquisite blending of lake and river and the picturesque features of Indian life. I hear people sigh and ask, "Where shall we go this summer?' 'What can we do that we are not wearied to extinction with doing, and what can we see which we have not seen a score of times before?' I make answer, get together some substantial garments and come to the Indian country.

"Last summer I took my British guests to the tribal dances and to the medicine lodges of different tribes. Their experience proved so interesting that it is likely visiting the Indian countries will become popular among intelligent Britons even if good Americans continue to rush by the thousand to Europe every summer. We pitched our tents near the medicine lodge of the Crows and not the least of the pleasures of the summer was photographing the workers and the lodge during the course of erection. We remained throughout the ceremony and saw the dancing from its inception. You know the dances must go on day and night for three days, the performers stopping only at appointed intervals for a little breathing space but taking neither food nor sleep. Nothing which Kipling has written exceeded the weirdness of the dance by torchlight, especially toward the end of the rite when the dancers were haggard as ghosts and looked about to die of exhaustion. Frequently the poor deluded creatures do die from the exertion, but fortunately no such tragedy happened while my guests were among the spectators. We were allowed also to see the distribution of gifts. In the old days, the various tribes exchanged the maidens for horses, ponies and gay blankets. Now the Indians are not permitted to give away their girls but the array of presents makes quite a showing. These gifts are displayed and presented with great ceremony and new firearms compose the larger part of the bounty.

"But an equally interesting part of Indian life may be seen in the missions. To visit the missions is one of the most entertaining pastimes of which I know and besides its interest, it contains quite a salutary lesson. Saint Peter's mission was founded by the Ursulines, is an exquisite spot nestled high in the mountains and a visit now does not make manifest the heroic work of the missioners amidst indescribable hardships, physical and moral. It would not make very amusing reading to describe the labors of these gentle women in initiating the savages into the mysteries of civilization. Their first contact with the noble red man and his consorts was among scenes of degradation, in tents where misery and its attending spirits, vice and lack of cleanliness, were sufficient to make the stoutest heart fail. To these people the use of comb, brush, knife, fork, broom and mop were mysteries deeper than the signs of the stars. Now, a smiling picture greets the sight. A neat village, a church, industrial schools, nurseries, sewing schools, in fact, every modern method of improving heart, soul and body. A visit to the day nurseries is enjoyable for the papooses look entirely incongruous in their regulation attire. The kindergartens are well attended and the little ones are delighted to have visitors and show off as skilfully as the most cultivated of their eastern sisters.

"The traveler on the North Pacific Railroad, which passes for miles through the Flathead reservation may look from the car window on comfortable houses, cultivated fields and herds of well-kept horses and cows which are owned by Indians who received the first missionary to this region, Fr. De Smet. It speaks eloquently for the man who came here in 1850 to redeem the wilderness and to plant the cross that the seed he sowed has yielded so grand a harvest. Of the material harvest, abundant evidence shows on every side. The Indians now own and work sawmills and flour mills. They build their own houses substantially and with many comforts and and they are adopting every modern device of farming. Senator Vest has many times borne eloquent testimony in the Senate of the United States of the success of the Jesuit Indian missionary, and those who are skeptical should visit St. Ignatius' or some of the adjacent missions. I think it was Senator Vest who used to illustrate one way in which the Jesuits maintained unfailing good relations with the red man. The story was about a horse deal, always a severe test on the entente cordiale.

"The story is told of Father Prando, whose name, after that of De Smet, is held in deep reverence by the Indians. The father wanted a fine strong fast horse for his parochial journeys, and he promised a certain sum of money to two Crows if they produced the horse he described. The Crows appeared one morning with a pony filling every requirement as to strength and rapid gait, but so refractory that he had to be blindfolded to be saddled. Still the clever Crows maintained that as the father had said nothing of a gentle horse, but only about his strength and power of motion he must take the horse they brought him and pay out the money. Father Prando reasoned with them all in vain. The Crows stubbornly asked for their money. 'You can saddle him,' they insisted. 'See, we just take off our shirt and tie it before his eyes and he stands like a lamb.' 'But,' said the father, 'that's just the trouble. Now you see, you know, I go among many people, whites as well as the Crows, and among women as well. Now, you must feel I should not like to have to take off my shirt every time I saddled my horse. It would cover me with shame.' The Crows reluctantly admitted that it would not be seemly for the 'black gown' to disrobe in public, so they finally gave up the sale, content that the 'black gown' had dealt fairly with them, and they went off to find a less spirited horse."

Mrs. Carter, unlike the women who make up the official world at Washington, has been identified all her life with the State from which her husband is sent to the upper house of the Legislature. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Francis Galen, were natives of Ireland, but came to the Northwest with its earliest pioneers. Of her mother, Mrs. Carter speaks with tenderest reverence, and this is the tone adopted by all those who labored with her for religions and for culture in the new territory. In that book, which is an authority. "Indian and White in the Northwest," by Rev. L. B. Palladino, S.J., the following tribute to Mrs. Galen is found: "She was born in County Ferbanagh, Ireland, September 7, 1837, and died in Helena on December 27, 1891. A woman of sterling worth, of more than ordinary industry, whose devotion to the cause of religion not less than her many deeds of kindliness and mercy to the poor and needy commend her to the grateful remembrance of all Montana people. His eminence, Cardinal Gibbons, has written a most useful and popular book on the 'Faith of Our Fathers.' We are under the impression that not only here in Montana, but in many other places as well, there would be little faith of our fathers' were it not for the faith of our mothers, such mothers as Mrs. Mathilda Galen.'"

Mrs. Carter received her education at Saint Mary's, South Bend, Ind., and she is one of the most accomplished women in official life. Her harp stands waiting her in her drawing-room, and she devotes as much time as possible out of her busy life to her music. Like her mother, she is a woman of broad aims and of high ambitions. While she fulfills most punctiliously the social duties of her position, her time is not much occupied with the concerns of Vanity Fair. She is president of the board of directors of Trinity College for the Higher Education of Catholic Women, the first institution of its kind established on American soil.

"Among women, the thirst for knowledge seems unquenchable, to judge from the onset on Trinity College," remarked Mrs. Carter. "It seems as though the college will never be large enough to accommodate all who wish to come. It looks as if the third enlargement must be put under way this summer. I favor the higher education of women, though, of course, I know that my opinion is at variance with many learned doctors of theology and of the secular branches of knowledge, and I rejoice that Catholic women have at last every opportunity to develop the mind under circumstances which must prove congenial. It seems as though there is a field for a Catholic college for women in almost every large city. Colleges and universities for men under the direction of the religious orders have multiplied, but there is but one college for women. I trust that some of the more progressive sisterhoods will emulate the good example of the Sisters of the Notre Dame and establish colleges wherever there is the demand for such culture."

Mrs. Carter is a superb equestrienne and she is greatly sought for such parties. She is among the few who can keep apace with the vigorous Chief Executive, and whenever they ride by appointment or meet casually there is always a race and great sport over the finish. Her trip last summer, and, in fact, many such trips, have all been taken astride her steed. She provides as comfortable vehicles for her guests as the roads of the Rocky Mountain districts will permit, but she always makes her journeys in the saddle. Some of her feats would place her among the adventuresome riders of her day and a chapter on her horseback experiences would be diverting and unique. There are two boys in the Carter household, both of whom are students at the Georgetown College, the oldest Catholic institution of learning on this continent and the chief seat of the widely diffused Jesuit system of education. Senator and Mrs. Carter have a stately and well-equipped home in Sixteenth street and dispense hospitality which is altogether worthy of western traditions.

GIRLS GROW PRUNES.

They Find It a Pleasant and Successful Way to Earn a Living in California.

[New York Sun:] "For the last four years my two sisters and I have averaged $500 a year each on our prune orchard in California," said Miss Emma G. Burnham, when telling of her life and experience in the West. "Twelve years ago I went to California as a stenographer, and office assistant in a lumber business.

"The leading member of the firm was an eastern man and I got the offer of the place because I had taken dictation from him at a summer hotel where I was employed to do any sort of pick-up work that came to hand. Fortunately I pleased that man, and as he was rather difficult to please and knew it himself, he sent me out West to be ready to do his work when he came on.

"That summer I spent my two weeks vacation in Santa Clara county and saw my first prune orchards. I am fond of country life, and when I returned to town after that trip I had the fever so bad that I wrote to my two younger sisters, who were working in stores in Boston, begging them to save all their earnings so we could buy a few acres of land and begin a prune orchard of our own within two years.

"My letter was such an enthusiastic account of the business and of the country in general that they came to my way of looking at things at once, and both wrote me by return mail that they were willing and would save every cent.

"Land was cheaper then than now, and fortunately for us we realized it and laid out every dollar we thought we could spare in buying land. I kept my place in the office, working to supply ready money for my sisters while they devoted themselves to the orchard and building our future home.

"One of them had taught a class in carpentering for a few months before she got her job in a store in Boston, so she knew how to use tools. Coming direct from New England, that class of labor seemed to them unreasonably dear in the West, so they decided to build not only the fences and outbuildings, but the house.

"Yes, they did it. With the assistance of three men for six days they built the house in which we have lived ever since.

"Of course, I don't mean that the house was completed in six days, but that the three men helped my sisters for only that length of time. They laid the heavy timbers and put up the frame. After that my sisters buckled down and in less than a month we were living in the house, and with the greatest comfort at that.

"Once a New England woman gets away from the narrow conventions which have hedged her in all her life, I believe she is about the handiest and most progressive woman in the world. She has not only had to work and economize since her birth, but she has been taught how.

"Once get her away from her petty surroundings, and let her see what a big world we are living in and she is ready to tackle anything under the sun. That is the way it was with my sisters.

"We now have fifty acres of prune trees, every one of which they planted with their own hands. After the ground was plowed and harrowed they would plant out the trees. When pruning time came they had studied up and watched other prune growers, so they were posted, and stepped right in and did the work.

"As soon as the orchard came into good bearing I resigned my place in the lumber office. That was six years ago. Two more years and our trees had reached perfection. Since that time we have counted on having $500 apiece every year as our share of the earnings of the orchard.

"Of course we are each allowed regular wages, just as we pay the extra men and women who come in when we need them. That $1500 a year we call our dividend, and if we dress and keep our personal expenses within our wages we can put every cent of it in bank. Unfortunately, we are all fond of pretty things and travel, so we have agreed that we shall each spend one-half of our share of the dividend in any way that seems to us best and not be reproached for extravagance.

"Most of my spending is for books and pictures, while my youngest sister has a passion for the beautiful laces and needlework done in the convents of Mexico. The middle one—the sister who stands between us in point of years but who in point of fact stands miles away from us when work on the place will allow her to leave—likes to travel.

"Her love of travel is almost as great as my love of books. Just as soon as the work in the orchard is past, off she goes. She has not only visited every prune orchard of importance in this country, but those in France and the Danubian provinces, and she has seen other places besides.

"It was during these visits to the French orchards that she learned how to pack the best specimens of the fruit in fancy packages and get double prices for them. We were, so far as I have heard, the first prune growers in America to pack fancy boxes of prunes for sale direct to consumers.

"The bulk of our crop is disposed of in that way. We pack the largest prunes in fancy boxes and ship them to the most fashionable hotels in the country. There is as much difference in the grades of prunes as there is in oranges. Ordinarily there are ten grades of prunes, ranging from thirty-five to the pound to the smallest, averaging 140, but of late years the plums have been so improved that many growers now restrict the first grade to twenty-five to the pound.

"That is about the best grade that we have ever produced. Of course they bring fancy prices and have to be a bit more carefully handled, but as my youngest sister always says, 'As we are in for the money, why not work so that we will make the biggest pile?' That is about our line of argument in the management of our business; we are willing to give the labor to get results.

"When preparing the ground for planting a prune orchard repeated plowing and harrowing is required to pulverize the soil thoroughly and destroy surface vegetation. Year old seedlings are the best for planting, and should be set out in holes two feet each way. The planting must be done during the rainy season, and the orchard must be cultivated several times during the first year.

"After planting the shoots are cut down to eighteen inches or two feet. The second year they are pruned so that from three to five branches are left, and in the third and fourth years they are again severely pruned.

"After that time methods of various orchardists differ. From our experience we think it best to prune our trees regularly each year, and our method of cultivating the orchard is the same as that given apple orchards in New England except that we irrigate it twice a year. Once in the spring and then again in the summer the water from a little stream that runs through our land is collected in a pond and turned into the orchard.

"The fruit ripens in September and is gathered by spreading sheets under the trees and shaking the branches. The fruit is then taken to the shed where it is graded as to size, and after being passed through a boiling hot liquid, which not only cleans it but softens its outer skin, is spread out on trays measuring 3x8 feet and set in the sun to dry.

"This drying process requires from three to eight days, depending on the weather conditions. When the prunes are sufficiently cured they are stored in large bins, where they must remain from ten to twenty days to undergo the sweating process.

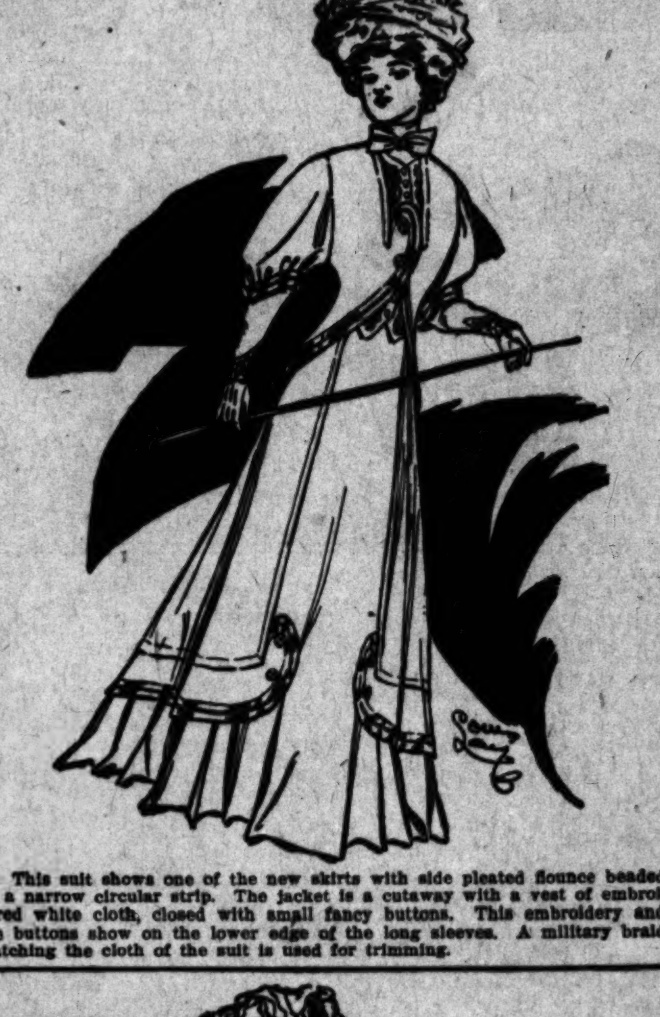
"After this has been properly accomplished they are ready for market and are to be packed to suit the orders received. As I have already said, we make a specialty of packing fancy boxes, so we sell only the smaller prunes, the lower grades, to the prune merchants of San José, the prune metropolis of the world.

"For general farm work we regularly employ two men and their wives, and during picking season hire extra help as it is required. As a rule all our extras are either women or half-grown girls. We prefer them for everything except for shaking the trees and handling the heavy trays. This is often beyond their strength, so we always have men to do it.

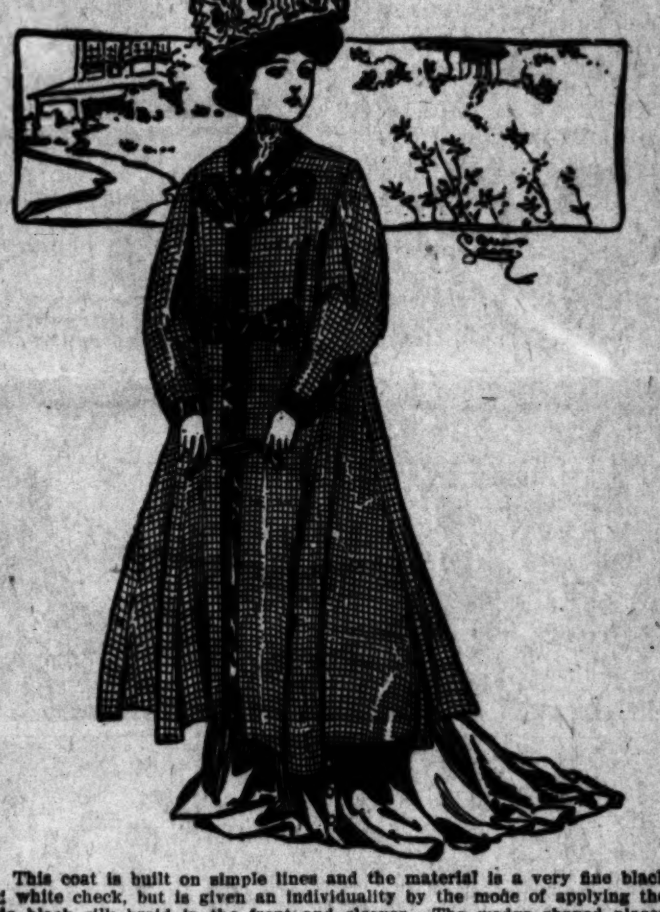
"While on our place the show of trays during the drying season is well worth looking at, to our mind it is nothing compared to that to be seen on the larger orchards. On one of these I have seen 10,000 trays of fruit spread out in one unbroken tract. It meant work, yes; but at the same time it meant money.

"Twenty years ago all the prunes consumed in the United States were imported from France and the Danubian provinces and were known as French and Turkish prunes. Now the prune orchards of Santa Clara virtually supply the world. We not only raise the 100,000,000 pounds that are consumed yearly in this country, but have several hundred thousand pounds left over to ship to Great Britain, Germany and France."

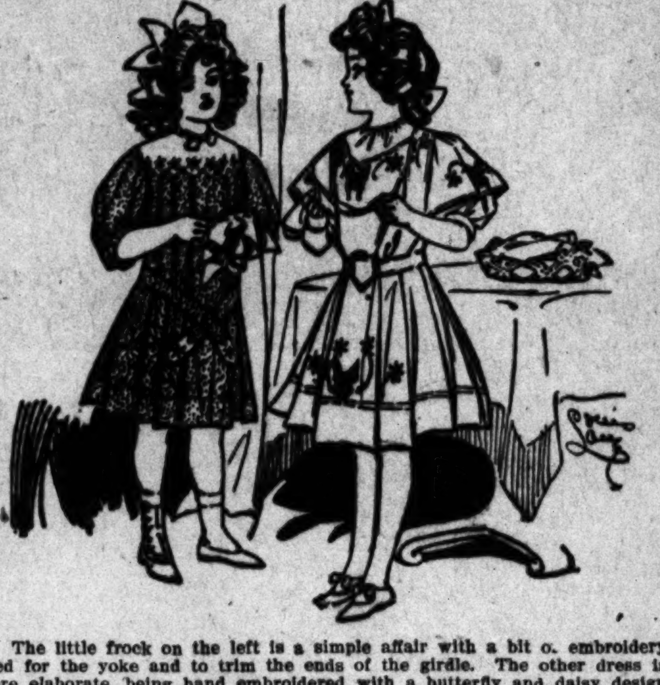
UP-TO-DATE FASHIONS FOR WOMEN.



This suit shows one of the new skirts with side plaited flounce beaded by a narrow circular strip. The jacket is a cutaway with a vest of embroidered white cloth, closed with small fancy buttons. This embroidery and the buttons show on the lower edge of the long sleeves. A military braid matching the cloth of the suit is used for trimming.



This coat is built on simple lines and the material is a very fine black and white check, but is given an individuality by the mode of applying the wide black silk braid in the front and sleeves. The wedge shaped places between the bands are filled with ecru cloth and gilt buttons. The garment is closed by loops and buttons underneath the band.



The little frock on the left is a simple affair with a bit o. embroidery used for the yoke and to trim the ends of the girdle. The other dress is more elaborate, being hand embroidered with a butterfly and daisy design done in yellow and white on an ecru linen, and with narrow bindings of white linen finishing the edges.

The Tailored Suit.

The figure is the first important thing in the wearing of the plain tailored suit.

The carriage should be correct, and the matter of waist line carefully watched.

A good-looking tailored suit and a slovenly waist line is an impossible combination.

The length of the coat should be governed by the height of the wearer. For the medium-sized woman the three-quarter or the long coat is particularly adapted. But the very short and the extremely tall woman should avoid this style, as it will rarely prove becoming to either.

The simple, single-breasted costume coat that clings to the figure and is cut to hip length is much better adapted to extreme figures.

The best made of these coats are marvels of shapeliness, and give lines and curves to the thinnest and most angular figure, and, what is most important this season, suggest a small waist, not so much by actual measurement as by contrast with the contour above.

Another type of costume coat is the knee-deep model, with cutaway fronts. This is so simple in style that to be a success it must needs be cut and made by a tailor who knows his business thoroughly.

To Mend a Torn Garment.

When a silk or cloth garment is torn, procure a few threads of the warp of the goods and darn as you would a stocking. If you have no pieces from which this may be obtained, perhaps there is a straight edge on one of the seams from which a few threads may be taken. In this way the repair is made of exactly the same shade as the cloth.—[The Delineator.

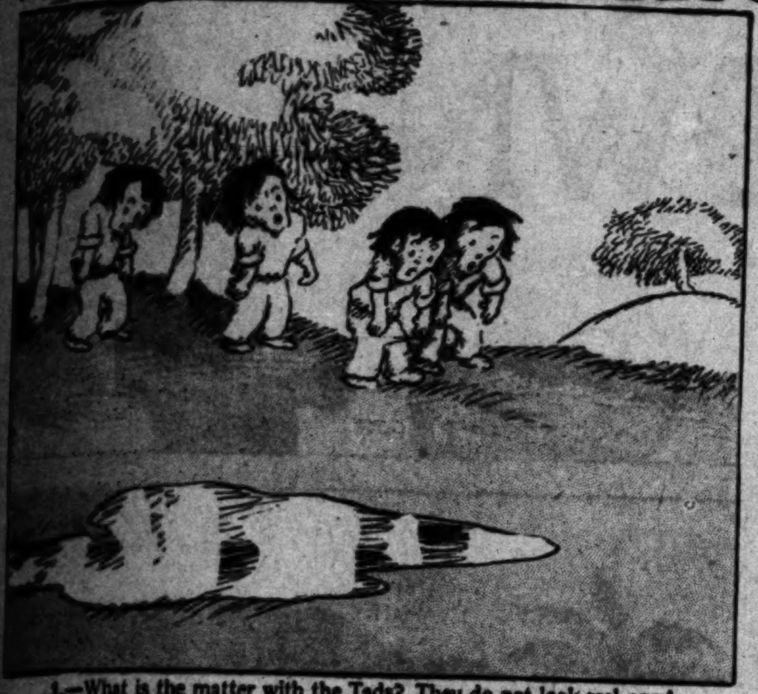
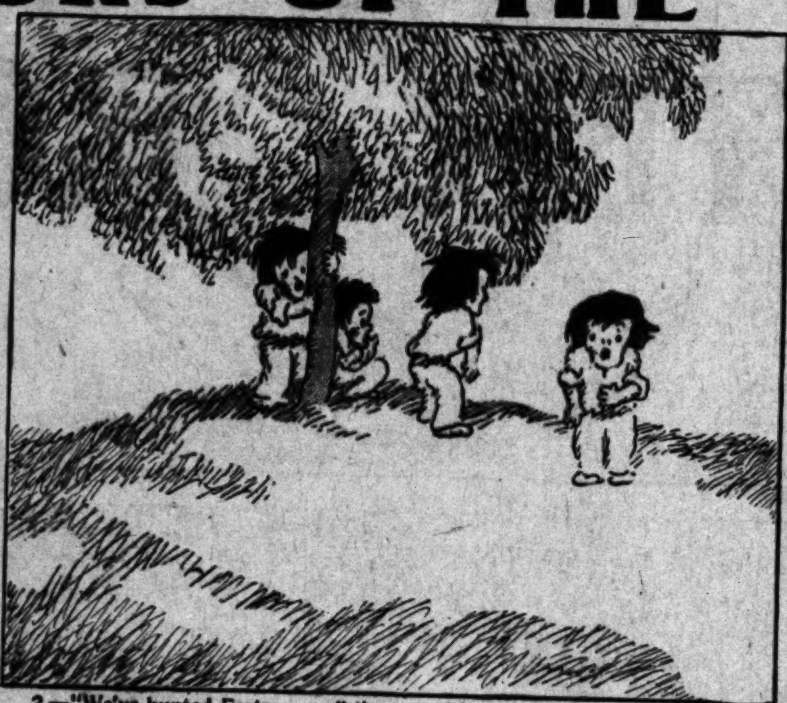
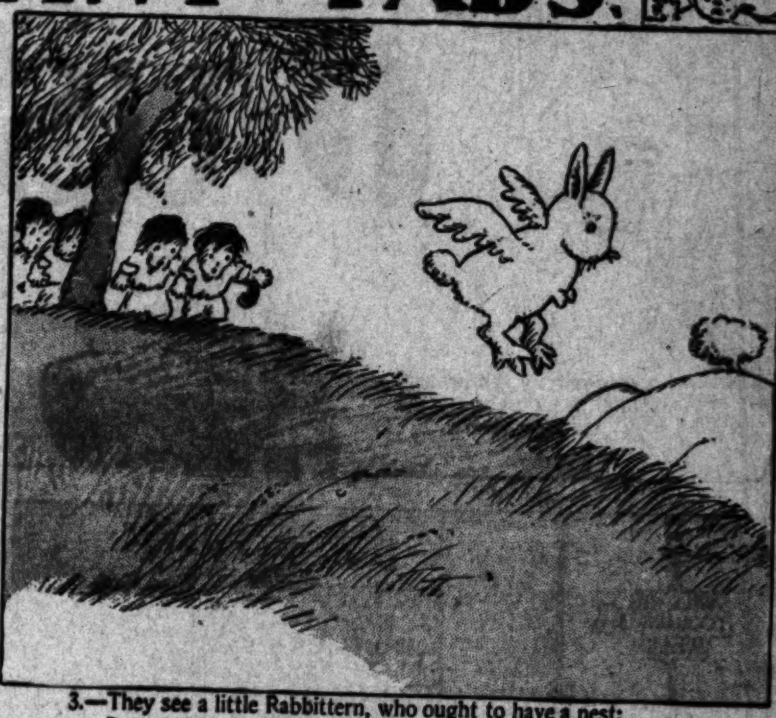
THE TERRORS OF THE TINY TADS.



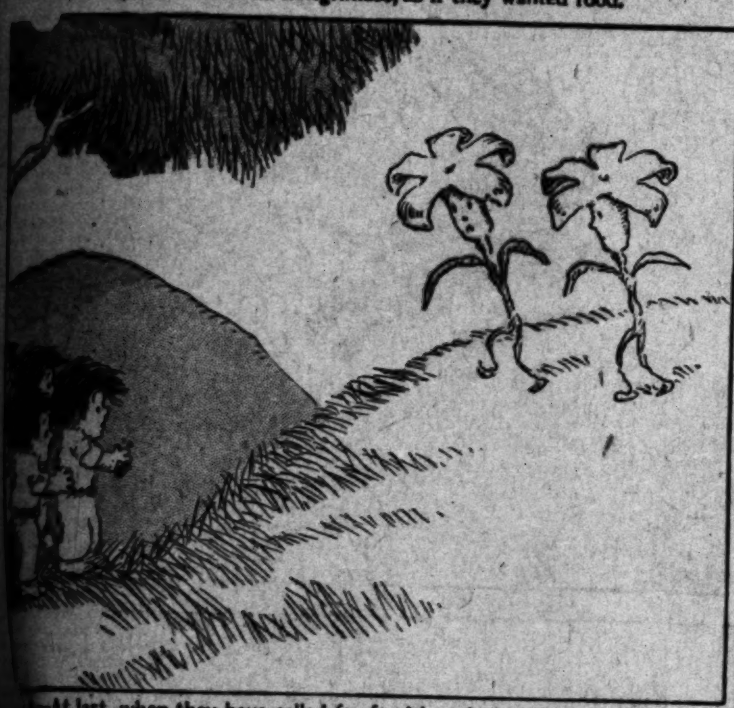
1.—What is the matter with the Tads? They do not look real good
They make an awful hungrimace, as if they wanted food.



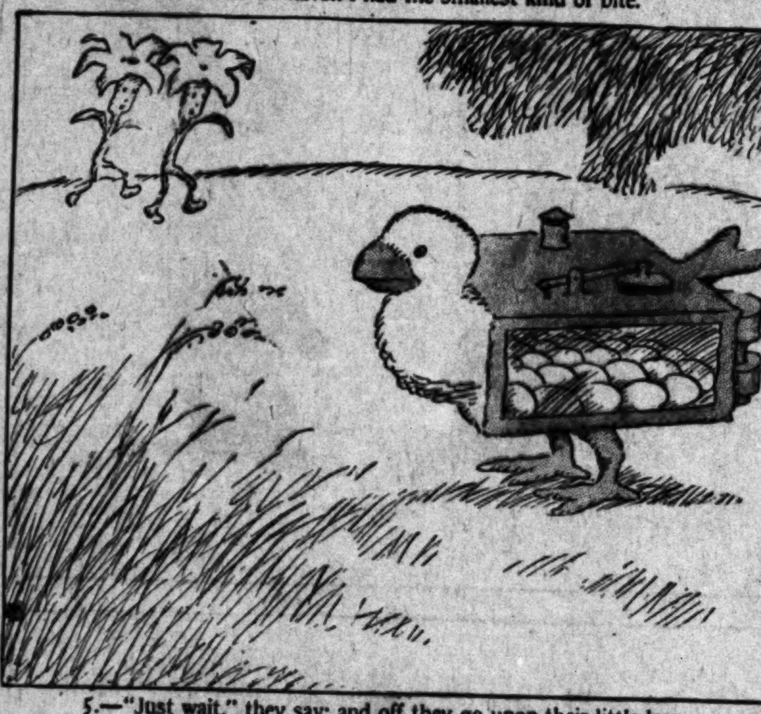
2.—"We've hunted Easter eggs," they say, "for one whole day and night
And all this time we haven't had the smallest kind of bite."



3.—They see a little Rabbittern, who ought to have a nest;
But nowhere can they find it, though they try their very best.



4.—At last, when they have called for food in voices shrill and high,
Two Easter-lilyputians come in answer to their cry.



5.—"Just wait," they say; and off they go upon their little legs,
And find a Bobolincubator filled with hard boiled eggs.

RESOLVED.

THAT UNCLE THOUGHT HE SHOT A RABBIT, BUT NOW HE KNOWS HE DIDN'T. NOW! A RABBIT HAS BIG EARS, BUT WHAT HE HEARS REMAINS A SECRET; SO TELL YOUR TROUBLES TO A RABBIT. IF THE GOSSIPING TROUBLE MAKERS OF THE WORLD WHO ALSO HAVE BIG EARS, DIDN'T HAVE SUCH BIG MOUTHS TO KEEP THEM COMPANY, WE'D HAVE HAPPIER EASTER DAYS AND OTHER DAYS—ALWAYS. A SECRET ONCE TOLD IS LIABLE TO BECOME THE FOUNDATION STONE OF A CASTLE OF TROUBLE; BUT IF YOU MUST TELL IT, TO RELIEVE THAT "I MUST TELL YOU JULIA, HONEST!" FEELING, TELL IT TO A DEAF AND DUMB ASYLUM, WHERE THEY'LL THINK YOU'RE TELLING THEM A FUNNY STORY. BUT DON'T TELL IT TO THE ASYLUM CAT, BECAUSE IT CARRIES A TAIL.

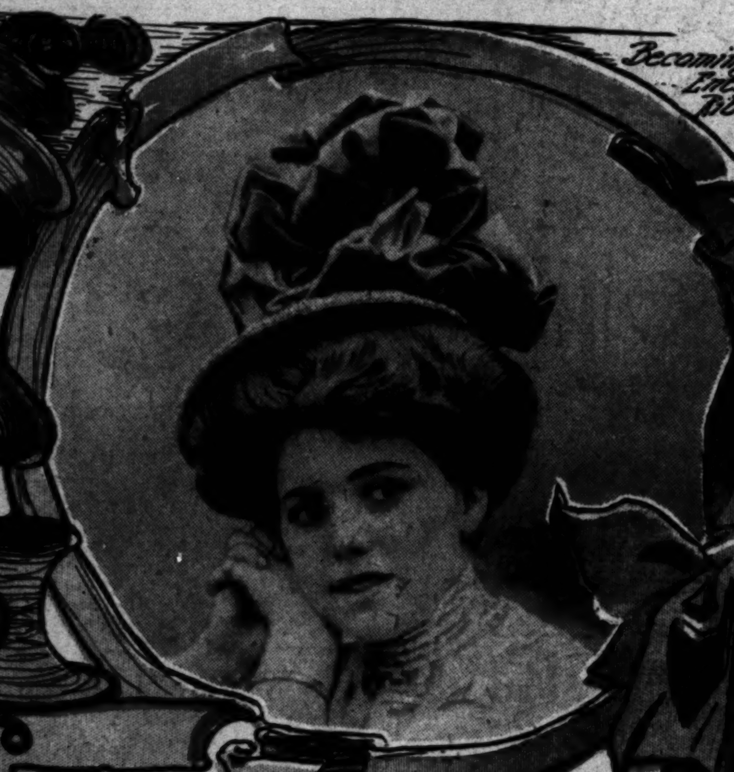
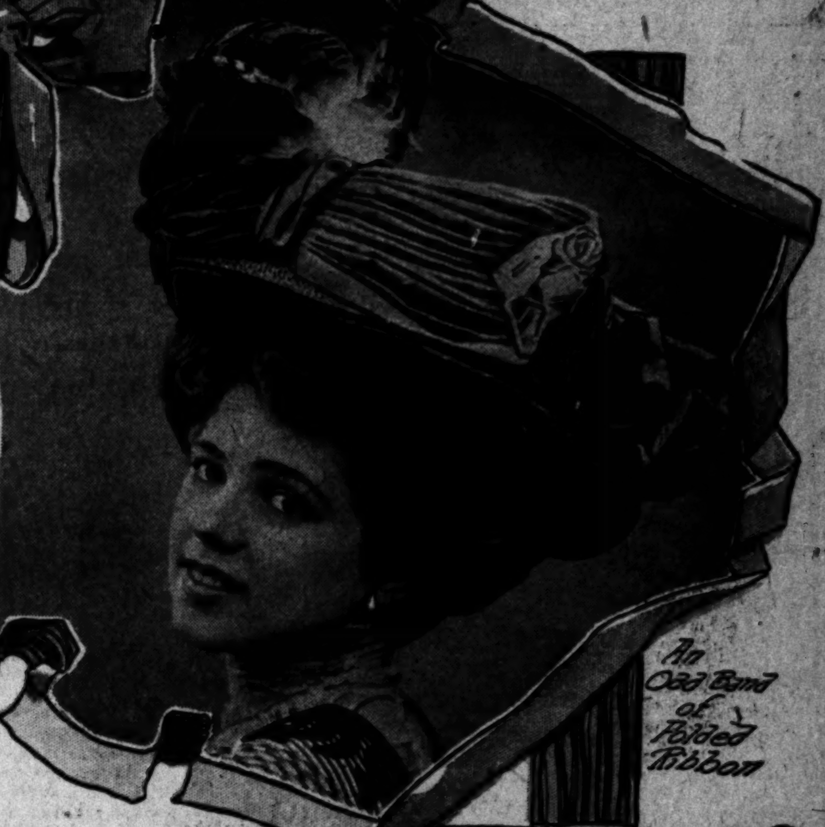
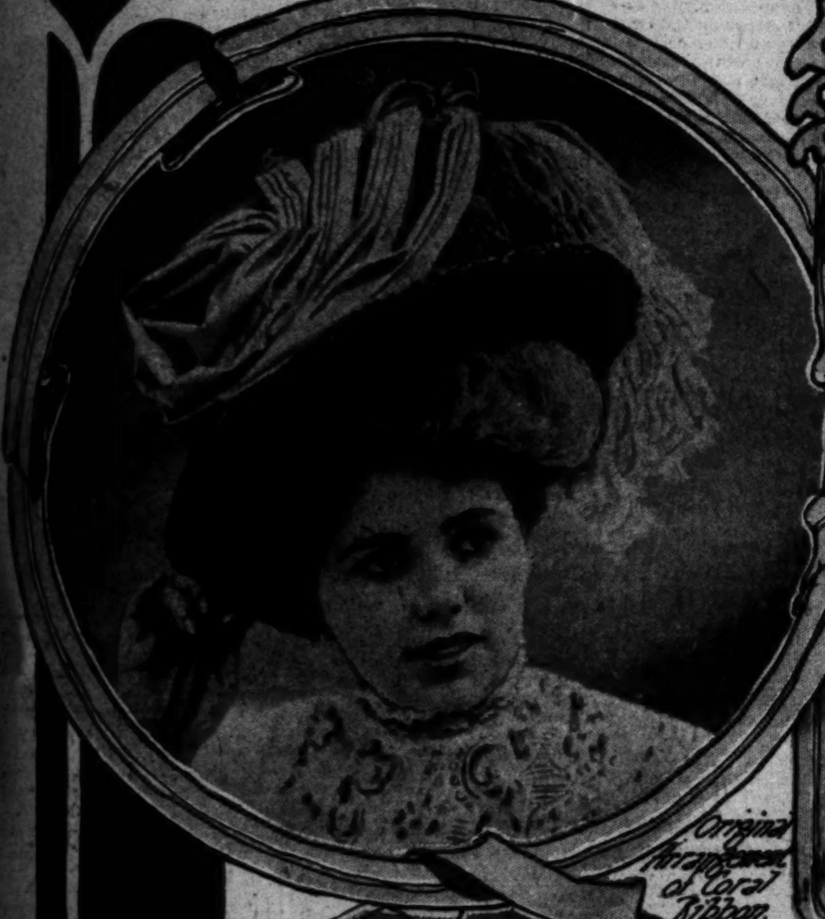
SUGGESTIONS FOR RIBBON TRIMMED EASTER HATS



Becoming Small Hat Entirely Ribbon Trimmed



An Odd Band of Folded Ribbon



Original Arrangement of Coral Ribbon.

QUITE a feature of the new hats for spring is the remarkable way that ribbon is arranged. This is done so cleverly that, given seven straw hats and sufficient ribbon of one width, each chapeau may be trimmed in a manner that does not suggest its fellow at all, for on one the ribbon will be used full width in loops; on another it will be shirred so that it is very narrow, and in still another it will form a buckle, while taffeta is shirred to resemble feathers, aigrettes and wings.

This will all be good news to girls—and there are many of them—who must make their own Easter hats. Plain straw is not particularly expensive, and if there are no left-over ribbons about the house, new may be procured and the hat made for about one-eighth the price of the average Easter bonnet. But the beauty of the ribbon-trimmed hats lies not only in arrangement of the ribbon, but in the combination of color, the perfect blending of shades that marks the work of a real artiste.

Most of the hats are small, a characteristic of hats trimmed in this way, for they are not suitable for very dressy occasions.

In the selection of color it is best to choose one that may be procured in many shades—brown, for instance. There are many shades of brown—old friends under new names—beige, medore, pain brule. It really matters not what they are known by, but what does matter is that the browns used shall be all of one tone. Do not combine the yellowish with the reddish. Then blue comes in many shades, and there are names to call them by—Nattier, Copenhagen, Alice. These, too, must be combined with care. Reds are more difficult to manage, so it is always best for the amateur to use the geranium combinations or shades of coral, for the pinkish reds are always doubtful.

A hat in brown is trimmed with a six-winged butterfly bow in three shades of taffeta, edged with beaded medallions and pearl paillettes. This ornamentation is easy to buy ready made, though perhaps the economical girl might embroider the edges with champagne-colored silk floss and sequins, that may be bought by the dozen.

A blue hat is trimmed with loops of ribbon edged with velvet. This is a splendid idea for the girl who has taffeta ribbon not quite wide enough, for, with the aid of velvet ribbon, it may be built out as required. In this case the ribbon is of a slightly lighter shade than the velvet.

Another hat in brown has on the right side some brown and white pheasant feathers, while on the left side wide pleated taffeta ribbon is brought out straight to the edge of the brim, where it is held by a stiff gilt ornament.

A much smaller hat is that of red trimmed with a complicated bow of taffeta and velvet. In arranging such a trimming the loops are best reinforced with many folds of maline, instead of stiff wires.

An original arrangement is that where the wing peeps forth from the high, wired band of taffeta. This top is held out near the edge of the brim on the side, so that the effect of the hat is oblong.

A creation in tones of coral has a shaded ostrich plume held in place by four bands of taffeta ribbon laid in folds. It is a really beautiful adornment, and one that is elaborate enough for a most dressy hat.

A natural straw is trimmed with four cravat bows held in place by one crosspiece of ribbon and an ecru osprey plume. The ribbon is cerise, and so is the binding of the hat. Needless to say, the result is charming, and one that would suit the most particular of maidens.

HOW to KEEP the HOUSE CLEAN

"A Stout, Coarse Flannel Bag for the Broom."

Rugs Should Be Shaken Hard Weekly."

THERE is but one way of avoiding the semi-annual housecleaning, abhorrent to John and a crucifixion of nerve and muscle to his wife. That one and only way is—never to let the house get dirty.

This bit of practical wisdom was poured into my youthful mind a half century ago by an old maid who had no house of her own to keep and abundant time in which to criticise the methods of her married sisters.

The principle she enunciated was sound. It holds good in numerous other spheres of human endeavor. It is easier to keep from evil-doing than to pay the penalty of sin. Easier to keep well than to suffer from illness and to meet doctors' bills. Easier to use a blotter upon a freshly written page than to erase the ink blotches when you have neglected the precaution.

Easier, finally, to keep a house decently neat than to have a periodical general delivery of rubbish that in accumulating has marred the comfort and endangered the health of the household.

"DUST AND DISEASE"

Neither the oracular spinster nor my credulous self had, at the time I speak of, read Tyndall's "Dust and Disease." The book is at once the most interesting and the most depressing volume I own. From it I learned that dust begets disease by harboring evil germs. I learned at the same time that the atmosphere we breathe is laden with dust; that the only way of dispelling it for one minute is by burning the air itself and creating a black vacuum in which we could not breathe at all.

Since I began this article, my attention was diverted from the paper to a grayish film on the polished stand beneath my typewriter. As the said stand is a desk with a sliding cover that closes down over the machine when the latter is not in use, and is dusted carefully every morning, the grayish film had collected under cover, and within ten hours. I wiped it away with a white cloth, and found a black deposit by contrast with the whiteness of the duster. The room is heated by steam; it has a polished floor and is lighted at night by electricity.

My housemaid is a paragon of neatness, and every inch of the room was scrupulously clean yesterday afternoon. Yet here is the black dust in evidence of the contrary. Where did it come from? I must have taken in an inconceivable quantity of the same with each inhalation of air that tastes and smells pure. To put the case in a nutshell, I must be coated within and without with the impalpable bacilli-breeding and unescapable powder. Agreeable reflection for a woman who is a bit of a crank upon the daily bath and the Christian duty of deep breathing!

AN INCESSANT FIGHT

Pushing the matter further, I may conclude that every square foot of the home in which I live joyfully and at ease is similarly infested.

And yet I sit down in cold blood to tell my fellow-sufferers in one and the same breath that they can no more get away from dust than they can live without breathing, and that they must keep their houses clean if they would live healthfully and provide things decent in the sight of matrons, spinsters and husbands.

One thing is patent from the first: The fight with dust, like that we wage with inbred sin, must be incessant, and it will last until we lie down to be resolved for all time into what we hate and would destroy while we live. My old colored mammy had a way of saying to us restless children when our noise tried her patience to the limit:

"Lor,' chillen! ef yo' ken't be easy, be easy as yo' ken!" I parody the injunction: If we can't be actually clean, let us be as clean as we can!

CARING FOR CARPETS

Carpets are not cleanly floor-coverings. Yet they are undeniably comfortable. "Naughty, but nice!" using "nice" and "convenient" and "warm" as synonyms. They harbor dust and scatter it abroad. It rises viewlessly but certainly at each step; the broom raises it in clouds. The carpet that has not been lifted for a year offers breeding grounds for moths and flies, to say nothing of the germs of divers diseases that may have strayed in at various times. Take it up every spring, have it beaten out-of-doors and fumigated as well. Burning sulphur in a broad pan, over which the carpet is held, right side down, and passed slowly along until the fumes reach every thread is a simple and effectual way of doing the work. Before relaying it, swab the floor and the uttermost crack and crevice with wood alcohol in which have been dissolved six ounces of gum camphor to a gallon of alcohol.

Rugs should be shaken hard weekly, brushed daily with a whisk dampened with salt and water or with alcohol, and beaten monthly in the open air.

Dip Your Duster into Hot Water and Scald Your Broom.

For Furniture Use a Cloth, either for Dusting or Polishing

Hardwood floors require daily attention. A flannel cloth—stout and coarse—made into a bag and shirred about the handle, inclosing the brushy part of the broom, is the best utensil for sweeping hard boards. It, too, works best when slightly dampened. It takes up instead of scattering the dust.

For furniture use a cloth—never a feather-duster. This last abomination in the eyes of the intelligent housewife sends the powder visible and unseen by the naked eye flying all abroad to colonize and propagate. By the time the brisk Abigail has gone through her rooms the dust is in place again, and the morrow of the swept and garnished spaces is as yesterday, and yet more abundant.

Which leads straight to the most important morsel of housewifely counsel you will find on this page:

Burn your sweepings!

I have told you how Tyndall got rid of dust for one instant. If you cannot get an open fire in grate or chimney, kindle an auto-da-fe for the express purpose of cremating the contents of the dustpan. And do it at once. Don't set the pan of noxious rubbish in a draught that will carry infusoria, etc., into new hunting-grounds. Beat your duster over burning coals, or dip it into hot water and hang in the sun to dry. To cram it into closet or drawer is to make a fungus bed.

"Brush the Rugs Daily with a Dampened Whisk."

Let down curtaint that are looped back, and shake out the folds every few days. Do this before you sweep. Cover furniture and beds with sweeping sheets and hang the same before open book shelves preparatory to plying broom and duster.

A finical bachelor I once knew married at fifty, and built a house for his bride that had not a closet in it. He called closets and cupboards "dirt holes," and declared them "fit for slovens and not for decent people." The first house built for me after I entered the domestic field had fourteen rooms and eighteen closets. Were I to reconstruct it, I should double the number of places where things may be shielded from dust by doors and glass. One of the methods for keeping as clean as we can lies in shutting out all the flying particles that compose dust which can be excluded by mortal care.

Closets must be watched jealously, lest the ubiquitous particles I have aforetime and continually objurgated quicken into active life. Beat clothing and draperies out-of-doors on sunny days; sweep down walls and wash shelves. If you have reason to suspect moths, burn sulphur in the spray with gasoline and closed for a day before what you have taken out.

The price of (comparative is eternal vigilance.

THE HOUSEMOTHERS' EXCHANGE

CAN I get a book that will teach me to make fancy icing, and also give pictures showing how the cakes look after they are decorated?

Where can I get the fancy ornaments which are sometimes used for decorating cakes?

I saw a notice some time ago that it was intended to establish a woman's exchange in this city. Was the intention carried out? Mrs. L. B. W. (Atlanta, Ga.).

I refer all of your queries to those who are better able to answer them than myself. I hold your address and will forward whatever information I receive upon any of the subjects you name.

"Polished" Rice

I read with interest your article upon rice, and I venture to send some facts not set down in that paper.

While it is true that rice is the chief food of one-third of the population of the globe, it is not always the same as our "rice of commerce." If you will look for it, you will find a little nick in the end of a rice grain. The germ, which, as in wheat and other grains, holds so much of the nourishment and minerals as to make rice "a perfect food," is wanting from the rice we buy in this country. All of our rice is polished to present an attractive appearance, and the process removes the germ and most of the valuable salts. "Rice polish," the part removed by this polishing, is estimated to contain elements nearly twice as valuable for food as the polished grains.

I quote the following:

In 100 pounds of "rice polish" there are 4 pounds of protein, 7½ pounds of fat, 5½ pounds of minerals, besides starch.

In 100 pounds of polished rice (the rice of commerce) there are 7¼ pounds of protein, .08 pounds of fat, .04 pounds of minerals, besides starch.

The rice the Orientals live and grow strong upon is the unpolished grain, and it is the flavor in the fats and organic salts, lacking in our pearly white grains, which makes travelers speak of the delicious rice eaten by them in Oriental countries.

Might we not, through the Exchange, create a demand for the nutritious food in its highest form, so that it may be bought here as easily as we get whole-wheat flour? Mrs. C. B. M. (Davenport, Iowa).

Our intelligent correspondent gives us matter for serious thought. I recall, in reading her admirable letter, what a traveled friend told me of the rice served in Japan without butter or meatr. When I objected that it must be flavorless, she declared that it was "simply delicious—utterly unlike any I have ever tasted at home." The facts just stated may account for the difference. I wish it were possible for us to agitate the subject until importers should be compelled to bring to our doors the best quality of the valuable cereal.

"For Drawback"

I observe the query relative to the label, "For Drawback," printed upon flour sacks. You will find this to be the correct answer: The jute from which the sacks are made is imported, and a duty is paid on it. When woven, made into sacks, and filled with flour or feed or anything else, then re-exported, the government refunds a certain per cent. of the original duty. J. P. (Findlay, Ohio).

The same explanation has been sent in by five other correspondents. Out of the mouths of so many witnesses the matter is established.

A Mother's Recipe

May I contribute my mother's recipe for fruit cookies? (Also, remark, incidentally, that that chocolate pie was delicious?)

Fruit Cookies.

Two and a quarter cups of sugar; one scant cup of butter; two eggs; one and one-half cups of cream and one level teaspoonful of soda. (Or, instead of this last you may use a cup of condensed milk, one-half cup of water, and three teaspoonfuls of baking powder.) One and a half cups of chopped raisins; two teaspoonfuls of cinnamon and one of grated nutmeg. Sufficient flour to make a soft dough. This makes 100 cookies.

Here are three good recipes for cements.

1. For wood, metal or earthenware, mix litharge with glycerine to the consistency of thick cream, or you may use thin putty. If allowed to harden for a week it will resist the action of intense heat, also of hot or cold water.

2. To make transparent cement, grind rice as fine as flour, add boiling water and cook to a thick paste. When cool, add a little alum or oil of cloves.

3. Waterproof cement for repairing marble or porcelain is made by mixing white glue with milk. Unslaked lime and the white of an egg make a good cement for ordinary use, as does, also, plaster-of-paris worked into a cream with the white of an egg. Mrs. J. R. H. (Carrisozo, N. M.).

I thank you for recipes which are good in themselves, and are, moreover, told pleasantly, as if you had written them for the love of helping your fellow-housemothers.

Wants Recipe for "Health Bread"

Can you get for me the recipe for "health bread," otherwise known as "Father John," or as "knife bread"? If you have it on hand, kindly print it in your next issue. W. H. H. (Milwaukee).

I am sorry that I cannot supply you with the "health bread" recipe you desire.

For Young Housekeepers

Will you accept one or two tiny items that may help some young housekeeper?

I make the hems of sash curtains for kitchen and bathroom of equal width, top and bottom. Then the curtain may be reversed when it is washed, and it will wear evenly at both ends.

2. Cut off the feet of black stockings when they are worn into uselessness; make a thumb-hole in the lower part of the leg, and take a few stitches at regular intervals to make casings for the fingers, and you have a pair of long mitts to wear on hot days when you hang out clothes. They likewise make excellent sleeve protectors while you are doing housework. They may be used for dishmops. Stitched into squares on the machine, they may be wrought into iron or kettle holders in less time than I am taking to tell you of it.

3. Cut off the feet of stockings of large size, insert gussets and set them in a band, and you have a pair of child's underdrawers.

4. A friend of mine cut down lengthwise and stitched together enough stocking legs to make a good bathing suit for herself. Mrs. L. G. M. (Chicago).

The longer I live the more strongly is borne in upon me the conviction that, in the working of a household, the waste should be next to none. It is amazing how much that used to be considered as rubbish may be utilized in some form. The frugal manager is constantly on the lookout for suggestions in this direction. After reading the foregoing collection of "tiny items" we will not consign cast-off stockings to the ragbag.

Compounding Mince Meat

I do not quite comprehend the phraseology of the recipe for mince meat given some weeks ago. Should I have two pounds of meat and four of apples—or what?

I am very anxious to get it right. J. J. M. (Pensacola, Fla.).

I do not recall the exact recipe of which you speak. I can tell you, however, the rule to be observed in compounding mince meat after the olden style. If you have four pounds of "meat"—as it used to be called—two and a half of it should be chopped apples, and one and a half lean beef, boiled, left to get perfectly cold, then minced.

Olden Lays

I make room for a letter that will interest mothers and daughters, although it does not directly concern the cook, or touch upon culinary operations. Yet why should not a strain of music or a murmur of poetry steal across "the heated term" now and then?

To those who have made request for old-time songs, or others who would be glad to get them, I would say that I have a song book of my mother's containing some of the oldest and sweetest songs I ever heard. She died at the age of 84. The songs were written out when she was a schoolgirl—as early as 1834. She had a very sweet voice and the pathos of her signing would bring tears to the listeners' eyes. Here are the titles of some of them:

I'm Sitting on the Stile, Mary; The Rose of Allandale; Red Jacket's Farewell; Highland Mary; Lily Dale; The Rose That All Are Praising; The Last Link is Broken; The Minstrel's Return From the War; The Lavender Girl; The Exile of Erin; Canadian Boatman's Song; The Old Arm Chair; I Won't Be a Nun; The Dog and the Gun; The Indian Hunter; Old Dog Tray; The Child and the Snowbird; O'er the Water to Charlie.

Later, in my own schooldays, I knew some which I will add to the list: The Farmer's Girls, or Up in the Early Morning; The Little Octoroon; I Had a Gentle Father; Do They Miss Me at Home?; The Three Angel Visitants; Widder Bedot; On Long Island's Seagirt Shore, etc.

If any of our readers who love to recall old songs should find one dear and familiar, or half-forgotten, here, or think of and wish for one I have not mentioned, which I may have, I should consider it a pleasure to supply a copy. To one who is so old-fashioned as to cherish early associations, it is sad to see the increasing disposition to ignore everything not strictly "up-to-date"; to lay away upon a shelf, clean out of sight, whatever might awaken a tender memory in a heart that may be longing

"For the touch of a vanished hand,
And the sound of a voice that is still."

S. K. S. (Lake Geneva, Wis.).

I suspect that you may have cause to regret your generous proposal before long. Every one of the songs you name is familiar to those who "took music lessons" fifty years agone. Every girl who had any ear for music played and sang more or less in those days, and every child was taught to sing by note. The evenings went by brightly and swiftly when we young people got together. "Primitive?" Perhaps so, but "like the music of Carryl, pleasant and mournful to the soul" in the retrospect. Nowadays, no woman who is not "a performer" dare touch the piano, guitar or harp, for fear of adverse criticism from connoisseurs, and ballads have "gone clean out."

All the same, you will have a run upon your stock of the olden lays. I prophesy, furthermore, that nine out of ten of the applicants who are on the sunny side of 40 will excuse their requests by pleading that the antiques are wanted to gratify the whims of old mothers and fathers.

Wants Recipe for Goulash

If you have a good recipe for Hungarian goulash—the original and real article—please let us have it at your earliest convenience. B. D. (Philadelphia).

The request is referred to those among our readers who can certify to the genuineness of the recipe for preparing this one of Hungary's national dishes. We have plenty of imitations. The original must be somewhere.

HANDSOME "FANCY FREE"

PERHAPS you may think your pussy is just as pretty as "Fancy Free," whose picture you see here. But I venture to say that your pet is hardly valued at [illegible], as is "Fancy Free." He is a handsome Persian, of remarkable form and color, and belongs to Mrs. Orr.

He was only one of many beautiful and valuable cats on exhibition at the last cat show, held at Westminster, London. "Don Quixote," owned by Mrs. Stanford, cost the same price.

You can imagine what care is given these aristocratic cats. Yet I'm sure they don't enjoy themselves half as well as the other pussies who can roam about wherever they like and go mousing for a little fun and excitement.

You would laugh to learn of the many curious names possessed by these haughty members of the cat aristocracy. At the last cat show in London there were, among other pussies, "[illegible] of Springtime," "Song of May," "Don Pasquale of Thorpe" and "Light of Life." How very common the unassuming name of "Tabby" seems, compared with these high-sounding titles!

Story About Kipling

KIPLING, as a lad, was noted for his pluck and audacity in mischief. When he was very small his father took him on a sea voyage. The father became quite seasick, although the boy suffered not at all. Late in the afternoon a sailor rushed dramatically to where the suffering father lay and panted:

"Please, sir, call your boy. He's crawled out on the yardarm, an' if he lets go he'll drown."

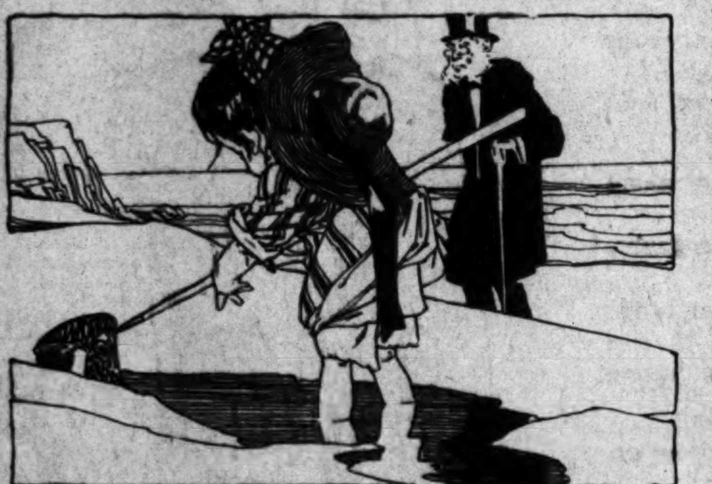
"He won't let go," feebly murmured the parent of the reckless youngster, as he sank back on his pillow.

Perfectly Frank.

Discouraged Golfer—I really don't believe there's any worse player than myself.

Caddie—There may be worse than you, sir; but they don't play.

Ellie and Tom, the "Water-Babies"

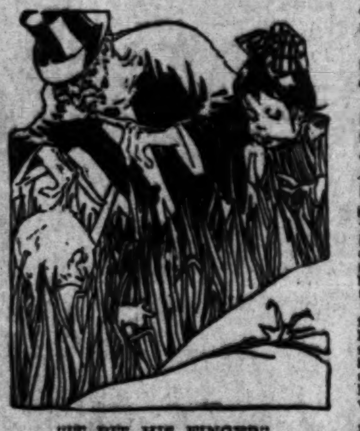


"THEY MET A KIND OLD GENTLEMAN"

(Adapted from Charles Kingsley's "Water-Babies," a children's classic that is ever popular).

ELLIE'S mother took her down to the seaside to spend the summer. She was a good little girl and everybody loved her. Many happy hours she spent fishing on the rocks with her nurse. One day she took her fishing net and went out on the rocks to spend the afternoon. They met a kind old gentleman, who said he would go fishing with them. He told Ellie many wonderful stories about the sea and the things that live in it. Ellie asked him if there were any children in the water, as there used to be. "If there are, I should like to see them," said she.

"Why, you strange little girl," he said, "there are no children in the water."



"IT BIT HIS FINGER"

"Yes," said Ellie, "I know there used to be children and mermaids, too, and mermen; I have seen them in pictures."

"No, no, my dear," he said, "you are mistaken."

But Ellie was not convinced by what he said. "Why are there no water-babies?" she asked.

"Because there are not," said he.

Just at that moment he felt his net get very heavy under the weeds. He lifted it out quickly.

"Dear me!" he cried, "what a queer pink thing is this! It has eyes—why, it is a wonderful thing!"

"It is a water-baby!" cried Ellie, and, of course, it was.

"Water-fiddlesticks, my dear," said the old gentleman, and he poked the queer pink thing with his finger. It bit his finger until it bled.

"Oh!" he exclaimed. He dropped the pink thing on the seaweed and it dived into the water.

"But it was a water-baby and I heard it speak," cried Ellie. "Ah, it is gone!" And with that she jumped down off the rock to try to catch it. As she sprang she slipped and struck her head on a sharp rock. The old gentleman tried to waken her, but she would not waken. He carried her home in his arms. She lay quite still, only now and again she woke up and said something about the water-baby, but no one knew what she meant, and the old gentleman did not tell.

One moonlight night the fairies came flying in at the window and brought her such a pretty pair of wings that she could not help putting them on. She flew with them out the window, up through the clouds; and nobody heard or saw anything of her for a very long while.

Of course, the queer pink thing that Ellie and the old gentleman had caught in their net WAS a water-baby, and a very lively one, too. It was a boy, and his name was Tom.

When the old gentleman dropped him he slipped away off the rock into the water. He could not help thinking about Ellie, although she was so much bigger than he was, and he wished he could have her to play with. As he was walking along the rocks, away down under the water one day, he saw a round, green cage. Inside sat a lobster twiddling his horns, instead of thumbs.

"What! Have you been naughty? Have they put you in the lock-up?" asked Tom.

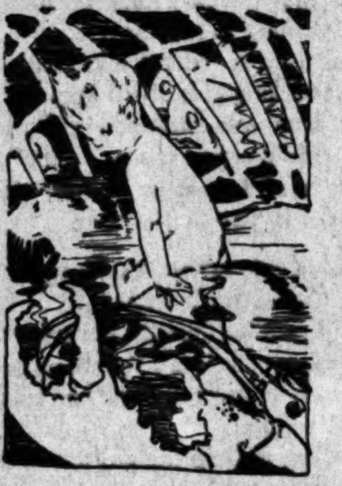
"I cannot get out," the lobster said in a sad voice.

"How did you get in?" said Tom.

"Through that round hole at the top," said the lobster.

"Why do you not go out?" said Tom.

"Because I CAN'T!" and the lobster twiddled his horns. "I have jumped upward and backward and sideways, and I cannot get out; I cannot find the hole."



"ON THE OTTER'S BACK"

Tom looked at the trap and saw it was a lobster-pot.

"Stop a bit," he said, "and turn your tail up to me; I will pull you through."

But the lobster could not understand, so Tom reached down the hole after him, and then the lobster was so clumsy that he pulled Tom in head foremost.

"Hullo! here's a pretty business," said Tom. "Now, you take your great claws and break the points off those spikes and then we can both get out."

"Dear me! I never thought of that," said the lobster.

They had not half got the spikes out when a great, dark cloud came over them and they saw it was an otter. How she did grin and grin when she saw Tom!

"Ah," she said, "I have you now, you little wretch!" and she crawled all over the pot to get in.

Tom was horribly frightened, and still more so when she found the hole in the top, and squeezed herself right through it, all eyes and teeth. But no sooner was her head inside than the lobster caught her by the nose and held on. And there they all three were, in the pot, rolling over and over. The lobster and the otter thumped and squeezed poor Tom so much that he surely would have been killed if he had not at last got on the otter's back, and safe out of the hole. He caught the lobster's tail and pulled with all his might, but the lobster would not let go.

"Come along," said Tom. "Do you not see she is dead?" and the otter was quite dead. That was the end of the wicked otter. But the lobster would not let go.

"Come along, you stupid stick-in-the-mud!" cried Tom, "or the fishermen will catch you."

But the lobster would not let go.

Tom saw the fishermen haul him up to the boatside, and thought it was all up for him; but when the lobster saw the fishermen he gave such a furious snap that he snapped out of his hand and out of the pot into the sea.

But he had left his claw behind, for it never came into his head to let go.

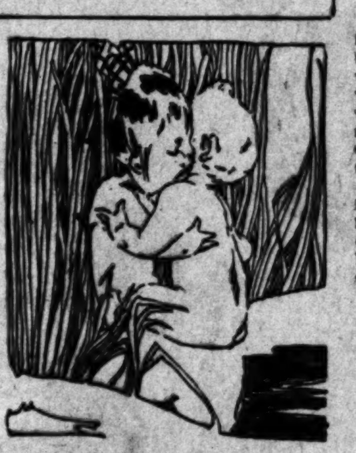
And now a wonderful thing happened to Tom. He had not left the lobster but a few moments when he came upon a water-baby—a real, live water-baby—sitting on the sand.

When it saw Tom it cried:

"Why, you are not one of us! You are a new baby. How glad I am!"

And it ran to Tom and Tom ran to it, and they hugged and kissed each other.

"Oh, where have you been all this time?" Tom said at last.



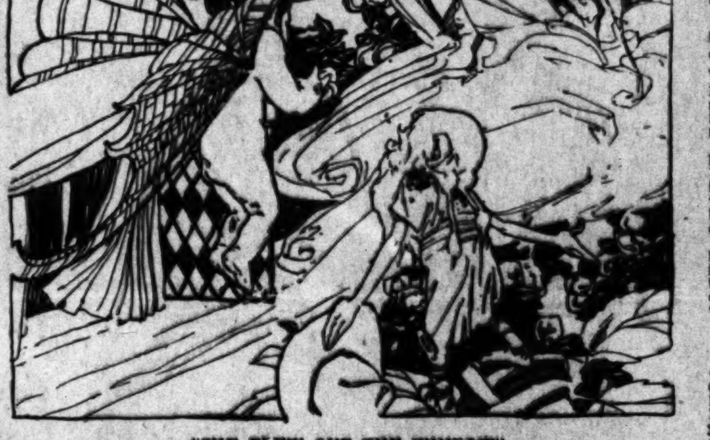
"THEY HUGGED AND KISSED"

"I have been here for days and days; there are hundreds of us about the rocks."

Tom looked at the baby again, and then he said:

"Well, this is wonderful! I have seen things like you again and again, but I thought you were shells and sea animals. I never took you for water-babies like myself." Tom looked again at the water-baby and saw that it was Ellie, the little girl about whom he could not help thinking, and he was very happy.

"Come," said Ellie. And, hand in hand, they went to the home of the water-babies. And there they found dozens and dozens of water babies, all dressed in white bathing suits. They welcomed Tom with hugs and kisses, and no one was ever so happy as poor little Tom.

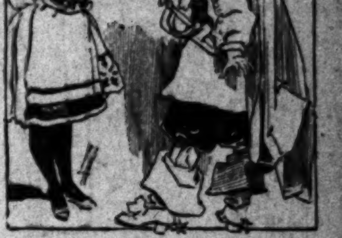


"SHE FLEW OUT THE WINDOW"

FRIENDSHIP UNMASKED

BEFORE Geoffrey accepted the invitation to be present at the masque party he made careful inquiries as to whether Elsie was to be there. He was informed that she was going away on a visit for several weeks. Geoffrey and Elsie, you know, were at one time the greatest friends; now they were enemies. The cause? Only a hasty word or so, spoken between them—the usual trivial reason.

Geoffrey went to the party, attired in the handsome costume of a cavalier. Never was there a more picturesque gathering of boys and girls. Pierrettes and French baker boys, Colonial lassies and Spanish bullfighters romped and danced side by side. And they all had the merriest time imaginable.



BOTH WERE ASTONISHED

A demure little miss dressed as a Swedish peasant girl attracted Geoffrey's attention. He approached her, bowed in true cavalier fashion, and, disguising his voice, engaged in conversation with her. The two found one another very interesting, indeed. The more so, inasmuch as neither was able to recognize the other.

The cavalier devoted himself to the Swedish peasant girl during the remainder of the evening. When refreshments were served he escorted her to the table. Meantime he was growing more and more anxious for the time of unmasking. Yet his curiosity was equaled, if not surpassed, by the little peasant girl. Then they unmasked. Perhaps you have already surmised what happened. Yes, there sat Elsie and Geoffrey facing each other! For a moment they were overcome with astonishment. Then both laughed heartily. Who could have done otherwise?

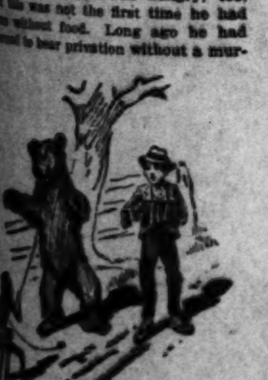
Of course, after that the two became friends again. Geoffrey and Elsie unite in declaring they were friends all the time, only their friendship was "masked" for a while. But the "unmasking" was the happiest kind of a joke.

The King's Gift.

King Edward recently sent the queen of Spain a little English doggie. This doggie traveled all the way from England to Spain in a comfortable basket. But comfortable though the basket was, you may know that he was very glad to reach the end of his journey.

Charming a Bear

JOCKO cried and whimpered pitifully, for he was hungry. His little master, Guiseppo, hugged the little animal still closer to his breast and trudged on toward the village that lay before him. Guiseppo was hungry, too, but this was not the first time he had been without food. Long ago he had learned to bear privation without a murmur of complaint. It was different with Jocko; he was only a monkey and could hardly be expected to suffer patiently.



JOCKO SEIZED THE CHAIN

The outskirts of the town gained, Guiseppo unslung his accordion and began playing his liveliest tune. Strange to say, not a person appeared in the street. He fancied he saw faces peeping from behind half-closed shutters, but no one was in sight. Guiseppo did not know that not more than an hour before, the villagers had been warned to be on the lookout for a fierce bear which had strayed from a menagerie traveling thereabouts. Whereupon all the townspeople had immediately taken to shelter; nor had they any intention of coming forth until news was brought of the bear's recapture.

Ignorant of this, Guiseppo plodded dejectedly through the street and out into the woods beyond. Wearily he threw himself down under the shadow of a tree, trusting that in sleep he might forget his hunger for a while. Jocko nestled in the crook of his arm. Soon master and beast were wrapped in slumber.

Guiseppo was having delightful dreams of sumptuous banquets, while Jocko found himself in a dreamland where cocoanuts were heaped about in mammoth piles, when suddenly the monkey awoke with a start. The next moment he was chattering volubly and tugging at his master in great alarm. The lad grasped the situation at once, and was hardly behind Jocko in climbing the tree beside him. Well might he, for not more than a few yards away was a huge bear eyeing them ferociously.

The bear stationed himself underneath the tree and glared savagely up at the two. For a long time the boy sat astride a limb, with Jocko perched upon his shoulder. Then an idea came to him. And a bright idea it proved to be!

Guiseppo began playing his accordion; at first softly, and then swelling out into a burst of melody. Immediately the bear became all attention. Soon his fierce look disappeared; the cross old bear became a merry, hilarious bruin. Changing the tune to a merry jig, Guiseppo was pleased to see the bear rear upon his hind legs and dance.

The lad now took courage to descend from the tree. He continued his playing, however, and the bear still kept up his antics. Then what did the impudent Jocko do but seize hold of the chain to which the bear was attached. Together they led the bear back to the menagerie from which it had escaped.

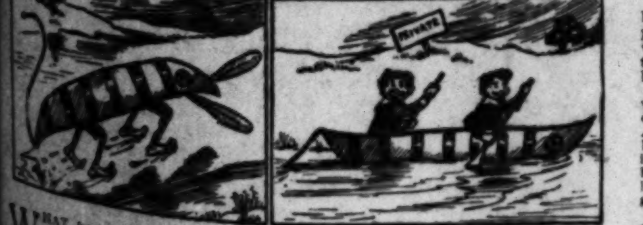
You may be sure that Guiseppo was well rewarded, and that he and Jocko dined well that evening—better than they had done for many a day.

Appropriate.

The small son of the minister had been banished from the table for naughtiness and was compelled to sit at a little side table. When the time arrived for him to say grace, he ransacked his memory for Scriptural quotations, and made use of the following, which he recited loud enough for his father and mother to hear:

"O Lord, I thank Thee that Thou hast prepared a table for me in the presence of mine enemies!"

The Canoe Bug



WHAT horrible thing does now approach,
An insect almost like a roach;
A beetle, perhaps, of giant size
It is that sudden greets our eyes.
But don't be too quick to make up your mind.
Just wait awhile; the bug, you'll find
Is taken apart, without much ado,
And transformed into a canoe.

DOLLVILLE'S BUSINESS VENTURE

THE DEPARTMENT STORE IS DESERTED

PERHAPS you may remember how the toys of Dollville played all sorts of games to amuse Little Girl and Little Boy. Clever little Anabelle, the French doll, it was who thought of most of these games. And she it was who decided that Dollville surely must have a department store, such as all big cities possessed.

So Anabelle pleaded with Little Girl, who, although a Mortal, was ALMOST as good as a doll. And Little Girl pleaded with Father, who was an "out-and-out" Mortal. But even Mortals are sometimes kind, as Anabelle was obliged to admit when Father returned that evening with a delightful toy he had purchased during the day. That toy was nothing else than a splendid doll's "department store."

The very next day Anabelle put all Dollville to work, furnishing the store. Right well the various departments were stocked, too. There was everything, from French gowns and hats to kitchen utensils.

Then came the day for opening this wonderful store. The place was thronged with the inhabitants of Dollville. And Little Girl, who watched the Teddy Bears mischievously roll down the moving stairway, thereby scattering would-be customers and sightseers right and left, vowed it was the most delightful game the toys had ever played for her.

But soon Anabelle, the manager of the store, found herself confronted by a most disturbing problem. For word came to her from the doll saleswomen that, although many of the people visiting the store wished to buy, they had no money. In vain Anabelle endeavored to think of a way out of this difficulty.

"It is certain," said she to Little Girl, "that we can't give our things away. You must ask your Father to buy you some toy money."

Little Girl spent over a year trying to induce Father to bring home toy money. Nor could she understand for a long, long while that no toy money was ever made. In the meantime, all the people of Dollville, having had one look at the department store, gave it no further consideration, since they were unable to purchase any of the nice things displayed. So there it stood deserted, save for two footmen, who guarded the moving stairway and prevented the troublesome Teddy Bears from sliding down.

Anabelle shook her head again and again, and exclaimed, "Mortals are so very stupid. They make all kinds of toys, and yet never think of making toy money!"

A Trick Wager.

Jim—I'll wager all my marbles that you'll come down from that chair before I ask you twice.

Joe—I'll bet you all mine that I won't.

Jim—Come down!

Joe—I won't.

Jim (turning to go)—Then stay there until I ask you again.

(And Joe made up his mind he'd best "come down.")

A Bit of Wisdom.

Howard—You know, they say that a little learning's a dangerous thing, and I've found it to be true.

Harold—Why, old chap?

Howard—Oh, I'm learning roller skating, and if you don't believe it's dangerous just look at the bumps on my head.

Indian Myths

AMONG the Micmac Indians, of Canada, the chief divinity is known as Glooskap. They believe that when Glooskap first made the animals, he made all of them very large. Then of the great moose, Glooskap asked: "What would you do if you should meet an Indian?" And the moose, who was as tall as the highest pines, said: "I would tear down the trees on him." "You are much too strong," replied the god Glooskap, so he made the moose smaller and weaker, in order that the Indians might kill the animal.

Then to the squirrel, who was the size of a wolf, he said: "What would you do if you saw an Indian coming?" "I would scratch down the trees on him," fiercely replied the squirrel. "You, too, are stronger than you should be," murmured Glooskap. Thus saying, he took the squirrel in his hands and smoothed him down to his present size.

Afterward he asked the great white bear: "What would you do to the Indian?" And the great white bear answered: "I should eat him at once." Glooskap shook his head. "I shall put you in a vast, desolate waste, where you shall see but few Indians," said he.

And so the wise god placed all animals where they might best serve the purposes of his subjects, the Indians.

of the latter. All that is required is a swift, steady jerk in a direction parallel with the edge of the coin—but you will find this by no means easy of accomplishment.

The Very Worst Man.

A little boy was asked whom he thought was the most wicked man mentioned in the Bible.

"Moses," responded the boy, after some reflection.

When requested his reason for the strange choice, he said:

"Moses must have been the worst man, because he broke all the Commandments at once."

Fitting Himself for His Position.

Father—My boy, when you see a man loafing about street corners what do you suppose he is fitting himself for in life?

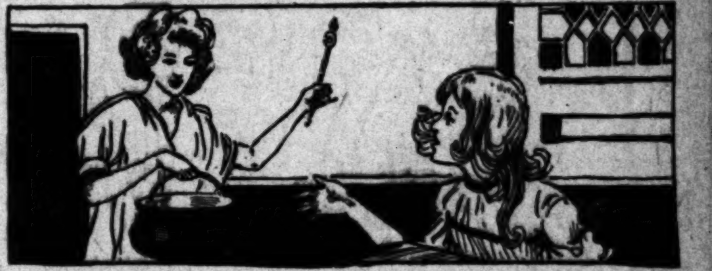
Son—To be a policeman, sir.

The Magic Pot

"I DO wish I had some good broth or soup to give mother," sobbed Gretchen, burying her head in her arms.

Gretchen did not care so much for herself. But, you see, her mother lay ill in the next room, and the last of the food had disappeared. The little girl began to despair. She knew her mother would not like to have her beg food; yet what else could she do?

All by themselves dwelt Gretchen and her mother, in the little cottage that stood on the very edge of the village. The mother gained a livelihood by sewing for the more well-to-do people of the town. She was paid very little, however, and since she had fallen ill the scanty hoard of savings had vanished quickly. Nor did any one come to her relief.



"Poor mother is weak for lack of food. I must get her something!" and Gretchen wept afresh.

"My dear, you shall have all the soup you wish," said a clear, sweet voice.

Gretchen raised her tear-stained face in astonishment.

There stood the nicest, dearest little fairy—oh, so much nicer than any her story-books ever told about!

"Now, Gretchen," said the fairy, "dry your tears and listen to what I'm about to tell you. Here is a magic pot for you. Whenever you wish a delicious potful of soup, simply place the pot on the stove and say these words:

"Good little pot, kind little pot, a favor I ask of thee:
Quickly, I beg, a potful of soup have for me."

Before Gretchen could recover from her surprise, or thank the fairy, the sprite from Fairyland was gone.

"And some people say there are no fairies!" joyfully murmured Gretchen.

Soon the pot was boiling merrily on the stove. When it was in danger of boiling over, Gretchen removed it, but still the pot boiled. Then a tiny voice whispered in her ear:

"You must say:

"'Good little pot, kind little pot, my thanks I now give to thee;
The favor you've done, so please stop your boiling for me.'"

The little girl repeated this line. Then she took a nice bowl of soup to her mother. With such nourishing food the sick woman speedily grew better. All this time the magic pot served them well.

But one day, after the pot had boiled for several minutes, Gretchen found, to her horror, that she had forgot the magic verse to make it cease.

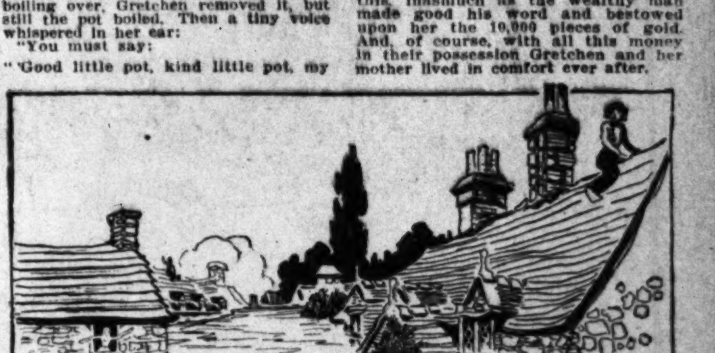
Quickly the pot began to overflow. The soup flooded the cottage; then it ran into the village. Gretchen, who had been alone, fled before the stream to the house where her mother was sewing.

Still the soup rose. Soon the people of the village were compelled to climb upon their rooftops to escape from the waves of sweet soup.

"Child, I shall give you 10,000 pieces of gold if you will save us from this disaster!" shouted the richest man of the village to Gretchen, who stood upon the ridgepole of a house opposite the speaker.

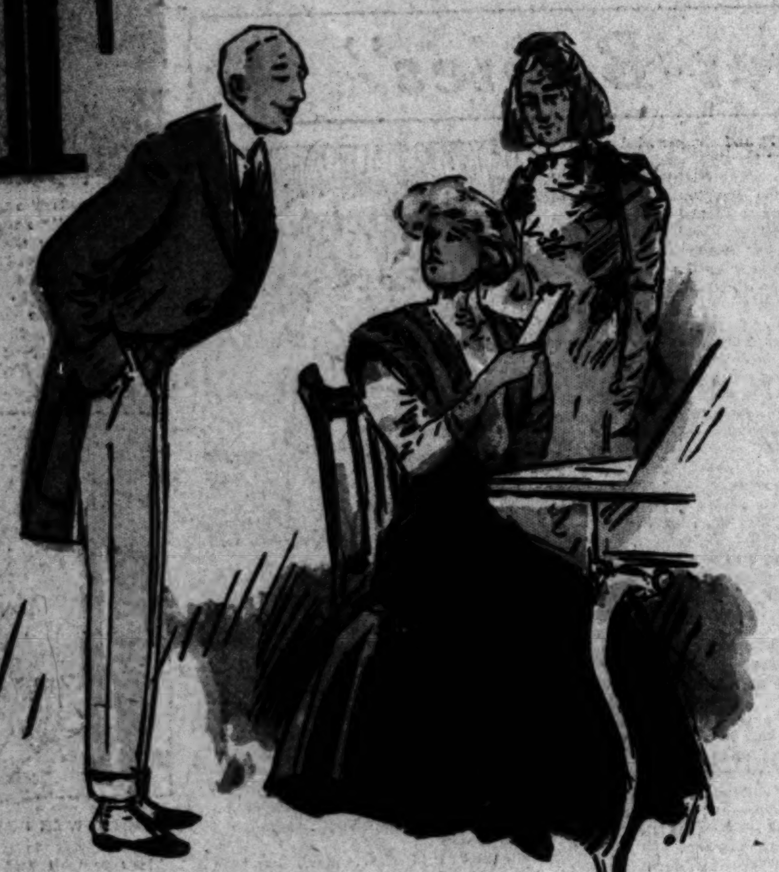
Then all at once there came to Gretchen the correct words of the verse. So nervous was she from fright and the thought of the calamity she had brought upon the people that she could hardly utter them. But her almost inaudible murmur served the purpose intended. Immediately the flood began to subside; and, strange to say, within ten minutes not a trace of soup remained. Thus the village was saved, for within an hour the town would otherwise have been submerged and every one drowned in soup.

It was a curious fact the pot was not to be found after the accident. Doubtless the fairy had taken back her gift. But Grechen cared little for this, inasmuch as the wealthy man made good his word and bestowed upon her the 10,000 pieces of gold. And, of course, with all this money in their possession Gretchen and her mother lived in comfort ever after.



FLUFFY RUFFLES

Drawings by Wallace Morgan



Miss Fluffy Ruffles wasn't long in making up her mind—
(See last week's paper, if you please, and there I think you'll find
That Fluffy's uncle left to her a very large estate
The sole proviso being that her aunt should be her mate).

Well, as I said, she wasn't long in making up her mind.
She'd scarcely known her maiden aunt, but found her very kind;
A little queer in speech and dress and anything but gay,
But fond of Fluffy and not bent on having her own way.

The first check Fluffy Ruffles drew on coming to her own
Was used to found a reading room for working girls she'd known.
Her aunt was pleased and Traddles said (He'd called to say 'Hullo'),
Your heart's so large I hardly dare to ask for it, you know"——

He blushed carnation pink and Fluffy said "Now that's enough,"
And Traddles thought her treatment was, to say the least, "quite rough."
But soon with Fluffy and her aunt in amicable chat
He went to help the girl to choose a stylish Easter hat.

"Say, try this on," said Traddles, and to please the awkward youth
She tried it on and, strange to say, she almost looked uncouth.
"Now try on this," the maiden aunt with antique gestures said.
And Fluffy, with good nature, put a bonnet on her head.

The milliner remarked "Eet's not your style. Now here's ze sing Zat's going to be ze proper mode of hat zees coming spring."
But Fluffy shook her head and said, "Please make me one like this."
She donned an untrimmed hat and looked quite sweet enough to kiss.

"A bow, a feather—something here—" The milliner said "Oui."
The result was a creation (as the picture makes you see).
And very few on Easter morn from villa, manse or flat
Created a sensation like the Fluffy Ruffles hat.

Exciting Nose and Nose Finish in the Second Heat of the Free-for-All Pace.

NECK AND NECK.

GREAT FINISH IN THE PACE.

Moy, Siegfried and Cleopatra Have Splendid Race.

Driving Club Matinee Furnishes Fine Sport.

Sensational Contests Show Good Classification.

Amid the cheers of the onlookers, Moy, Siegfried and Cleopatra passed under the wire, neck and neck, in the second heat of the free-for-all-pace at the Los Angeles Driving Club matinée at Agricultural Park yesterday. Moy was declared the winner, but he only won by a nose. The heat was one of the most sensational ever run here. The time was 2:11.

The horses started off in a bunch, but Cleopatra quickly forged ahead until, at the three-quarters, it looked like an easy win. Siegfried seemed unable to get into his stride and, at the half, was fully six lengths behind the other two. On the stretch he picked up and, like a solid phalanx, the three magnificant animals came down the track.

Only those in line with the judges' stand were able to see the order in which the horses finished and when the result was announced the enthusiasm was intense, cheer after cheer ringing out. All of the three drivers were enthusiastically congratulated as they drove to the stables and experts pronounced the heat an epoch marking event.

The programme was excellent from start to finish. With one or two exceptions every event was frought with interest and the time was, in most instances, fast enough to satisfy any one.

The track was rather slow and, in places, was cuppy. It would not have been surprising had the pacers fallen short in their performances, but such was not the case.

One of the features of the matinée was the work of President W. A. Clark, Jr., who acted as starter. It has been a long time since the horses have been started with as little trouble as they were yesterday. To be sure the small entry list in the different events had something to do with it, but Mr. Clark showed himself an expert with the bell and megaphone.

EXCITING RACE.

The second heat of the free-for-all trot was exciting. The three horses, Helen Dair, Hazel McKinney and Romeo, passed under the barrier together. Ten feet beyond the starting point Romeo broke. Helen Dair took the lead and maintained it to the half where she was passed by Hazel McKinney. At the three quarters Helen Dair again took the lead, but, on the turn, broke and let Hazel McKinney pass in front of her. On the stretch the two horses came neck to neck, but Helen Dair finally forged ahead again and won by three lengths.

The free-for-all pace was a close contest in every heat. Four heats were required to decide it as, at the end of the third heat, each entry had one victory to its credit. Moy and Siegfried tied for third place finally, each having one first, two seconds and one third to its credit.

The fourth heat was very interesting and Cleopatra showed up remarkably well. The mare is as steady as a piece of machinery and, though her driver brought her home under the whip, she never flinched and showed no inclination to break. Siegfried finished a good second, though he broke just under the wire.

Race No. 5 proved easy for Shecam. Only two heats were required as the Levy entry was an easy winner in both. In both heats Zomwolsey and Wild Rose finished second and third respectively.

Zomwolsey showed that he has the speed in him but his driver was unable to keep him down to the ground and he broke repeatedly.

The only poor race of the day was the first, the 2:40 mixed. There were but two entries, Rex and Gray Bess. Rex was never in it for a minute and his opponent wandered under the wire, an easy winner, in both heats.

Rox showed occasional bursts of speed but he could not resist the temptation to turn the race into a running match, and in the first heat he galloped half way around the track.

GARLAND'S DRIVING.

One of the interesting features of the day's entertainment was the remarkable driving of William Garland. He won four heats, all of them hotly contested, and showed himself to be not only an able horseman but an accomplished jockey as well. Though all of the heats were run at a killing pace he

NATIONAL.

RECORDS GALORE ARE BROKEN.

PASADENA Y.M.C.A. TRACK MEET BECOMES FAMOUS.

Merriam, Gibbs and Hendricks Set National Marks, While Dodd, Smith, Merriam and Carus Shatter Coast Marks—Wonderful Performances at Tournament Park.

Records, both Coast and national for the Y.M.C.A., were smashed yesterday afternoon at the Southern California Y.M.C.A. field and track meet held at Tournament Park, Pasadena. The Pasadena Y.M.C.A. won the meet with the big score of 61 points. Long Beach Association was second with 31 points, and the Los Angeles boys managed to score 4 points. Several of the events were hotly contested.

Robert Merriam, representing the Pasadena Y.M.C.A. broke the national Y.M.C.A. high jump record by clearing the bar at 6ft. ⅝in, the former record being 5ft. 8in. In the broad jump the national Y.M.C.A. record of 21ft. 11in. was shattered by Elliott Gibbs of Pasadena, who cleared 21ft. 11¾in. In the hammer throw Harry Hendricks broke the national record of the Y.M.C.A. by throwing the hammer 132 feet. The former record was 130½ feet.

In the half-mile, Dodd of Long Beach broke the Pacific Coast Y.M.C.A. record making the distance in 2m. 3s. The Pacific Coast record in the 220 low hurdles was broken by Elliott Gibbs of Pasadena, who cleared the sticks in 27s. flat.

Paul Smith of Pasadena broke the quarter-mile record for the Coast by making the run in 55s. Warren Smith of Pasadena broke the Coast record in the 100-yard dash by covering the distance in 10 2-5s. The Coast Y.M.C.A. record was broken in the pole vault by Merriam and Carus of Pasadena, who cleared the bar at 10ft. 4⅛in., Carus winning on a toss-up for place.

The Pasadena boys had the best team for point winning, but the boys from Long Beach showed themselves strong in the distances. Medals were distributed among the individual winners and the schools competing in the relay races were presented with Oak shields after the old Greek fashion.

The only protest heard during the day was that made in the one-half-mile grammar school relay race, which was won by the Washington School team in 1m. 44s., but was given to Wilson School on account of one of the Washington entrants being over 14 years of age.

The results:

The 120-yard hurdles—Kern, Pasadena, first; Bentley, Long Beach, second; time, 17s.

The 100-yard dash—W. Smith, Pasadena, first; Gibbs, Pasadena, second; Gallop, Los Angeles, third; time, 10 2-5s.

The 440-yard run—P. Smith, Pasadena, first; McMahn, Long Beach, second; Middough, Long Beach, third; time, 55s.

The 220-yard dash—W. Smith, Pasadena, first; Kellog, Los Angeles, second; McMahn, Long Beach, third; time, 24s.

Mile run—Dodd, Long Beach, first; Stone, Long Beach, second; Williams, Pasadena, third; time, 4m. 55s.

Half-mile relay — Pasadena High School first, La Spada, Gibbs, Tyler and Smith; Throop second.

OBSTACLES.

SNOW CHANGES ENTIRE ROUTE.

NEW YORK-PARIS CONTESTANTS WON'T CROSS ALASKA.

White Barrier Is Declared to Be Insurmountable and Cars That Would Reach Paris Must Travel Another Road Than That by Way of Valdez. American Car Still Leads.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, April 11.—A change of programme in the New York to Paris automobile race is likely to occur, according to advices received here. The American car, which was far in the lead, has found the snow fields of Alaska an impassable barrier to further progress in that direction, and is therefore returning from Valdez to Seattle.

The French and Italian machines are on their way to Seattle by steamer, but they are bound up in the south, having reached San Francisco only a few days ago, hundreds of miles behind the American car. The possibility of such a change in plans was foreseen some time ago by the directors of the long race, when the cars were so greatly delayed by the exceptional weather conditions encountered in the United States.

It was feared that the Alaskan Territory might be found impassable at the approach of warm weather, and two weeks ago an agreement was made that in such an event, the leading cars would make the trip by an alternative route. This plan provides that the machines shall go as far as possible over the original route, and then sail from Seattle for Vladivostok, and then proceed by land across Siberia and Europe to their destination.

Close Contest.

The Haas-Baruch baseball nine won from the United Wholesale Grocery team on the Violet-street playground diamond yesterday by a score of 6 to 5. A three-base hit in the seventh scored three runs and tied the score. In the last period the Haas-Baruch squad sent the final score across, winning the game.

ALL OVER.

MISS CHAPIN IS THE CHAMPION.

BRILLIANT YOUNG GOLF PLAYER DEFEATS VETERAN.

Mrs. Alexander Plays Steady Game, but Is Forced to Abandon Laurels. Splendid Contest on Annandale Links Is History Maker in Southern California.

When contestants gather in future matches for the Woman's Southern California championship, the great game in which Miss Ruby Chapin bested Mrs. W. A. Alexander by 1 up yesterday morning at Annandale golf course will be recalled. It was probably the closest and most fascinating match, as well as the finest exhibition of play ever shown by women on the course.

As on Thursday and Friday the weather was ideal and the players were in fine fettle. Mrs. Alexander got away poorly, and showed a bit of nervousness. Miss Chapin played her steady game going out, and by the time the ninth hole or "turn" was reached her record was 44, and she had Mrs. Alexander 2 up. Just prior to reaching the seventh green the little champion was three up on Mrs. Alexander, but the veteran recovered one flight, and made it only two up.

Quite the most sensational play of the match came when Mrs. Alexander made a drive on No. 3, and laid her approach in the bunker. She was dead to the hole, and then came her remarkable feat of making the hole in three shots and halving the third hole with Miss Chapin.

Miss Chapin lost her ball on the approach of the thirteenth green, and Mrs. Alexander gained another score, making Miss Chapin lead by one up. The fifteenth hole was made by both in body, which was exceptional work, considering the approach is on the down grade.

In driving for the sixteenth hole, Miss Chapin drove low, and the ball struck squarely on a post, bounding back within a few feet of the Fifteenth green. Here the caddy made a mistake by not giving her a lofting iron, and Miss Cahpin tried to loft with her driving club, the ball landing only a few yards distant in the Eagle Rock road. This cinched the sixteenth green for Mrs. Alexander, and the match was a tie.

Both made wonderful drives, Miss Chapin for the second time driving a full 180 yards. Mrs. Alexander drove into the bunker and was forced to play safe to the side. Miss Chapin easily won the approach on five strokes. Then came the eighteenth hole, the final end of the match and the possibility of a tie.

Miss Chapin drove out low and landed in the stream. She claimed "casual water" and then placed her ball. As the eighteenth hole is out of sight from the approach, the players judged by the flag. Both were cautious and Miss Chapin gained an advantage by playing up hill. Mrs. Alexander was more fortunate in landing on the green, however, and the last approach was halved, giving the match and the championship to Miss Chapin by 1 up.

The winner was congratulated and yesterday evening was presented with the Southern California championship cup on which her name will be placed. This trophy was first presented in 1900. It was won that season by Mrs. J. W. Bowers at the Los Angeles Country Club. Mrs. Bowers won it again in 1901, and in 1902 Miss Ada N. Smith of the San Diego Country Club won

SURPRISES.

BUNDY BEATEN BY GARDINER.

McLaughlin Defeated by Los Angeles Player.

Sinsabaugh Almost Gets in the Singles Final.

Rogers Defeats Dawson for High School Honors.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NORDHOFF, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Carl Gardiner of San Francisco defeated Tom Bundy of Los Angeles in the open singles of the Ojai tournament, today, 3-6, 6-2, 6-1.

Rogers beat Dawson, both of Los Angeles High, in the Interscholastic singles, 3-6, 6-4, 6-2.

May Sutton and Sinsabaugh defeated Freeman and Mrs. Farquhar, in the mixed doubles, 6-2, 6-3.

Bundy made a hard fight in the first set against Gardiner but his earlier contest against McLaughlin had worn him down, and he lost the last two sets to the San Francisco man.

Maurice McLaughlin, Pacific Coast tennis champion and hitherto invincible with the racquet, met his Waterloo today at the hands of Tom Bundy of Los Angeles.

The defeat of the 'Frisco boy came as a greater surprise, as McLaughlin was counted as a sure winner and had been mowing down everything in his way, while Bundy had been playing an indifferent game during the tournament, and was himself as much surprised as any one at the outcome. The victory was won in two straight sets of 6-2, 6-2.

The champion may have felt the extreme hot weather which has prevailed at Nordhoff for a week, for he seemed listless throughout the match. Things went well wrong for him. He had no control over the ball at all. His drives curved up instead of down, flying far out the back lines, his smashes found the net and his lobs went everywhere but where he intended they should. His service was bad and faults frequent.

But it was not alone the poor play of McLaughlin which did the business. Bundy played in fine form and with remarkable coolness. His service was like old times and his smashing the best ever seen on the courts. At no time did he allow himself to be overtaken in the score.

While the Nordhoff courts are not record courts, the victory ranks Bundy with the very best of them.

While this semi-final match was going on there was another semi-final almost as exciting between Carl Gardiner and Simpson Sinsabaugh on the adjoining court. Gardiner and McLaughlin had already won the open doubles, and it was thought they would have everything their own way in the singles. Gardiner won against Sinsabaugh at last, but he knew he had been in a game before he got his victory. Sinsabaugh took the first set, after the hardest kind of scrapping, the score being 7-5.

The games frequently went to deuce, as did the set itself, and every point was bitterly contested. In the second set the lanky San Franciscoan let out a link or two, and old stand-by Sinsabaugh concluded to take things easier, and Gardiner captured the set in a hurry, 6-0. Then there was a rest, and each player, with a wet cloth about his head, started in for the final set. Like the first set it was a tough fight from the start. There were deuce games in plenty, and it was a long-drawn-out fight. Gardiner finally took it with the score of 6-5.

The Los Angeles High School get all the interscholastic honors of the tournament. Rogers and Dawson defeated Hollywood this morning in a brisk battle for the doubles trophy in two straight sets of 6-3, 6-4.

In the girls' schools singles, finals, Miss Ryan of Marlborough defeated Miss Murray of the English classical, 6-1, 6-0.

Miss May Sutton is, of course, still woman champion of the Nordhoff courts, as well as of the world. This afternoon she handily defeated her sister, Mrs. Bruce, in ladies' singles, finals, with the score of 6-1, 6-0.

Girls' Baseball.

The Pomona High School girls' baseball team yesterday defeated the Hollywood High School girls' team by a score of 11 to 3.

The Pomona girls have a strong team, and easily outclassed the Hollywood nine. Although Hollywood has fair team work it is poor with the bat; this probably is due to the fact that the players have had little practice. Pomona made most of its runs in the early part of the game, and no doubt if they had kept up the good playing they opened the game with the score would have been much larger.

ON OCEAN'S EDGE.

RACE ON LONG BEACH SANDS.

Will Hold Auto Meet When Tide Is Low.

◆

Two and One-Half Mile Course Available.

Local Dealers Will Enter All Classes of Cars.

Automobile races under the auspices of the Long Beach Automobile Dealers' Association will be held at Long Beach on April 24. On that day the tide will be lower than on any other day of the year, and there will be uncovered by the receding water a stretch of beach one hundred yards wide and two and a half miles long. Not only will this afford a hard packed track hard to match anywhere in the world, but it will also provide excellent accommodation for the onlookers. The upper sands form a natural vantage-point from which it is possible to view the entire course.

Local automobile dealers have been asked to take part, and already the responses assure a good entry list and large attendance. There is great interest in the coming meet at Long Beach also, and the many automobile owners of the seaside city are working hard to make the affair a success.

The committee plans to start the races at 10:30 o'clock in the morning. This hour was unanimously decided upon after consultation with auto men in this city. The morning hours are said to be the best for speeding. At that time the tide will be almost on the turn.

The list of events have been carefully made up, and opportunities for almost every class of car will be presented. There will be at least two attempts for world records for the shorter distances.

GOOD CARS ENTERED.

There is a possibility that the Apperson Jackrabbit—the car which gave such an excellent account of itself on the Pasadena-Altadena hill climb will be sent over the sands in an effort to lower the mile record.

The Haynes roadster is a likely entry in the two-passenger class. The Stoddard-Dayton must also be reckoned in among the speeders. A Franklin and a Packard will be among the fast flyers it is hoped.

An Oldsmobile is one of the first entries in the touring car class. A six-cylinder Peerless is also among the entries.

Motorcycles will take an important place in the Long Beach meet. The bikes will have an excellent opportunity for speeding, and here again it is expected a world mark will be made. P. J. Q. Derkum, who has never yet had an opportunity to show what he can do on a straightaway course, will probably drive against a time for a new mile mark. It is Derkum's ambition to lower the record made by Curtis on the Ormond Beach course when that rider flew over the mile stretch in 44 2-5s.

THE EVENTS.

The first event is for two-cylinder runabouts, free of all, cars to carry two passengers. The committee offers a silver cup as a prize.

The second event is for two-cylinder touring cars, also free for all; cars to carry two passengers. The Long Beach Elks will give a cup for this race.

The third event is for four-cylinder touring cars, free for all; cars in the twenty-forty-horse-power class, to carry two people.

The Chamber of Commerce of Long Beach has offered a handsome cup for the free-for-all touring car class, which is scheduled as the fourth event.

The fifth event is for speedsters carrying two passengers.

The sixth event is for motorcycles, open to all comers. This should be one of the fastest races of the day.

The other events will include motorcycle, touring car and roadster races.

HANG OVER PRECIPICE.

Auto Party Saved from Peril on Calabasas Grade When Rope Is Attached to Tree.

An exciting experience on the Calabasas grade on Sunday almost resulted in a tragedy. William Vaughan and a party of friends undertook to cross the steep hills of the Malibu into the little town among the mountains. As the two-cylinder car reached the stiff ascent leading to the summit, Vaughan turned aside to allow a team to pass. As he did so the soft earth in the side of the bank gave way and let the car settle over the side of the incline.

Hanging over a sheer descent of several hundred feet Vaughan strove to hold his machine to the grade, but the car continued to slide toward a point where the grade ended in a steep declivity. In the nick of time the passengers in the car, and men who had been driving the team held the wheels until a rope was fastened to a tree.

On the side of the grade, only a few feet from the sheer drop the car hung on the rope. Then the team was used to pull the machine back to solid ground, where the run was resumed into Calabasas.

MOTORCYCLE LIKE AUTO.

Big Six and One-Half Horse-power Reading-Standard Is Built for Long Road Runs.

The twin-cylinder 1908 Reading-Standard motorcycle which arrived yesterday is one of the most interesting of the larger machines on the market. The bike is on exhibition at the John T. Bill Company. It is one of the speediest machines in town, and is handsome in appearance and attractive in style. The motor is six and one-half horse power, and the big motorcycle is built like an automobile; in fact, the two-wheeler approaches more nearly a motorcar in type than any other machine of the kind turned out by a factory.

One of the most interesting parts of the mechanism is the mechanically-operated vales, which are exactly like those of an automobile. Though the machine is one of the largest made, it does not seem clumsy, but rather gives the idea of great speed, combined with endurance. It answers a long-felt desire for a motorcycle which will hold up for long-distance road riding. Many who have awaited the arrival of the big bike will be glad to have an opportunity to look over its fine points.

ANGELENOS MISTAKEN FOR FOREIGN RACERS.

George Cline and Brother in Packard Runabout, Have Novel Experience on Journey to San Francisco. Townspeople Along the Route Insist on Demonstration.

Mistaken for one of the contestants in the New York-Paris race, George Cline and his brother Harry were greeted by thousands of people as they passed through the smaller towns on their way to Oakland. They returned from the round trip to San Francisco on Friday, having made the journey in two days. They left Los Angeles a week ago to bring another brother, William Cline, back to this city.

After leaving Los Angeles the Packard was greeted first at San Luis Obispo, where an effort was made to give the two Angeleños a reception. Cline protested, but an enthusiastic individual thrust a telegram into his hand. The dispatch was addressed to the driver of the French car.

After leaving San Luis Obispo the Packard was sent over the grade to Paso Robles, and here again the townspeople prepared to fete the crew of the machine. As the Packard shot into the main street there was a mighty cheer, and Cline realized that for a second time he was in danger of traveling under false colors. He drove up to the hotel, at which Edmiral Evans is staying, and there explained matters satisfactorily.

Cline followed the coast route on his run to the Bay City. He made the journey in easy stages, and had no accident on the entire trip. Pulling out of Los Angeles early in the morning he drove to Santa Barbara, and then by way of Los Olivas, across the Santa Maria Valley. The roads were found to be in fine condition, and the car made good time. The party reached San Francisco the second day out from this city.

Only a short stop was made in Oakland, and on Wednesday Cline pulled out of the city by the sea for the run south. Almost to the edge of Los Angeles county the roads were found to be in fair condition. The three brothers pressed toward their journey's end, making few stops.

Enthusiastic over the journey, Cline declares the run to San Francisco is one of the best which can be taken. He has outlined the course which, he says, can be made easily and comfortably in two days.

The autoists found the roads from here to Santa Barbara poor. On the top of the Casitas Pass they paused to enjoy the view. Then the run down the grade was resumed.

The hill-climbing ability of the car was tested on the steep Gaviota grade, but the machine made good, and gave no trouble. Down into Los Olivas they hurried, and the jaunt through the Santa Maria Valley was speedily made.

The poorest stretch of road on the entire journey was found between Los Olivas and Paso Robles. The highway has not been repaired recently, and is full of deep chuck holes.

From Paso Robles north the roads were fine. Good time was made through Salinas and on into San José. This stretch of the ride is declared to be most enjoyable.

NEW ROUTES SURVEYED.

Automobile Club of Southern California Overhauling and Replacing Road Signs.

The Automobile Club of Southern California is now overhauling and replacing all mutilated signs and changing those which have already served their purposes in getting certain bad spots repaired permanently.

A lot of new routes have just been surveyed by Charles Fuller Gates and M. T. Hamilton of this city for the Automobile Club, and more signs will go up on these roads at once. The first of the new routes to be marked will be the Foothill boulevard, on the Riverside route, from Etiwanda cross road to San Bernardino, 13.3 miles. From San Bernardino the 8.4 miles on to Redlands will be covered, and then five miles north to Highlands.

By the time these roads are properly covered with signs, the best road through Colton to Riverside will be taken up, and then the road from San Bernardino to Highlands and Arrowhead.

The wonderful new mountain drive back of Redlands, known as the Sunset Drive, some nine miles in length, is to be marked at once with the emblematic road direction signs, on account of the many sharp turns and dangerous curves.

This Sunset Drive was built by five of Redlands' wealthy men as an advertisement for Redlands, and is the most scenic drive yet laid out in California. It runs around the Country Cluf golf grounds, and from the various lookouts can be seen four famous snow-capped peaks, the Yucaipe Valley, the San Timaeto Cañon, the San Bernardino and other valleys, and all in all some 2000 square miles of country of all kinds.

No one should go to Redlands without making the circuit of the Sunset Drive, which can be done easily in an hour with any motor car. It vies with Roubidoux Mountain Drive at Riverside and the Mountain Drive at Santa Barbara, and these three drives, with the seventeen-mile drive at Monterey, are the most valuable assets to be found in California to draw motor tourists here from all over the world.

The Spanish postal officials are figuring on introducing motor vehicles for delivering letters and packages in rural districts.

When it attains a good growth he will cut it and mix it in the sand of the roadway. In this manner he hopes to so change the nature of the soil as to make it good for road-building.

WHEEL WITHIN WHEEL.

New York Athletic Club Motorists Form Automobile Section With Large Membership.

There has just been formed in New York City a new automobile club, or, to be more exact, a motoring body among the members of an already famous and old established club. The official title of the new body is the Automobile Section of the New York Athletic Club, and membership in the organization is confined to those who belong to the big club that has its city club-house on Central Park South, at Sixth avenue, and its country club-house at Travers Island. Figures have been compiled which show that 480 cars are owned by the automobilists that are included among the 5200 members of the club, so the organization has a very fair start toward the formation of an automobile section.

More than two hundred members of the club have declared their intention of joining the new section, and this number will be considerably increased in the near future. Arrangements have already been made to secure automobile insurance for members of the automobile section at a reduction of 20 per cent. from regular rates and arrangements will be completed as once to secure supplies and accessories for members at reduced rates. An efficient touring bureau will be established in the near future.

First Big Track Meet.

The Motor Car Racing Association of Baltimore has made application for a sanction for track races to be held at Pimlico Park near that city on Decoration Day. This is the first announcement of a large track meet to be made this season. Pimlico is a mile track and should provide a meeting place for a successful series of contests. The presence of several high State and city officials is promised and the meeting will be largely a society event. The entry blanks have not yet been issued but the programme is said to be a long and varied one.

Another Autodrome.

According to a report from Brussels a syndicate of French automobilists and financiers is making plans to establish an automobile race course on the high plateaux above Spa. It is planned to have the circuit about fifteen kilometers, or nine miles, around and when not being used for racing purposes it may be used as a public highway.

TWO RECORDS FALL TO CAR.

Motor Non-Stop Test Is Successful.

Machine Goes on With Another Goal in View.

New Crew Takes Charge for the Coming Week.

With a world's record and a Pacific Coast record to its credit already, and still greater records in view, the two-cylinder Reo car which is undergoing a motor non-stop test under the constant observation of representatives of The Times, is still running steadily and consistently. It has already covered in seven days a distance equal to that across the continent, and at the present rate of travel will accomplish the unattained and much-coveted five-thousand-mile mark early Wednesday morning.

At 6 o'clock yesterday morning the car completed 3010 miles without a stop of the motor. This feat gives to the car and drivers two records—the world's two-cylinder motor non-stop record, and the Pacific Coast motor non-stop record. The former world's record was held by a Maxwell car, which covered part of a mile over 2000 miles before it was brought to a stop. The Pacific Coast record was held by a Cadillac, which covered 1808 miles.

There is some confusion about the world's motor non-stop record for any class of car, and it is possible that the performance of the Reo entitles it to claim that record also. Leon T. Shettler, owner of the car, does not wish to claim anything he is not entitled to, and pending an appeal for a decision made to the Automobile Club of America and the American Automobile Association, he contents himself with the two records about which there can be no question.

Yesterday the drivers who have been handling the car for the past week gave way to a new team, who will carry the car toward the 5000-mile mark. The drivers who have been in charge are J. A. Nikrent and Louis F. Nikrent. They have been working in six-hour shifts ever since the start was made on Saturday morning, April 4, and are completely worn out by the constant strain. In eastern tests of this kind there is generally available a good stretch of country road over which to send the car, and in many cases some great highway between two cities has been the scene of attempts on the non-stop record. The Reo drivers tried this scheme, but the condition of the roads around Los Angeles is such that they were in constant danger of dropping into a chuckhole and stopping the engine. This was especially true at night, when it was difficult to see.

Consequently the running has been done on city streets, mainly in the southeast part of town. In doing this, one danger has been exchanged for another, for wet pavements and the necessity of turning corners in traffic are nearly as bad as concealed chuck holes.

The team now in charge of the car are C. H. Bigelow and August Oberlin. Since taking charge of the car yesterday morning, they have added up to 6 o'clock last night, 188 miles, bringing the total up to 3198 miles.

At 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon the triumphant progress of the run was nearly stopped by a peculiar accident. As the car came down Central avenue, near Thirtieth street, a Santa Fé train crossed the street. The car was slowed down for the passage of the train, and started on again. Eldrick Anderson, a small boy, was riding on the railroad train, and swung off in front of the Reo. In dropping from the moving train he lost his balance, and fell directly in front of the motor car. Bigelow attempted to stop, but before he could do so, the car passed directly over the lad. Fortunately, he was inside both wheels, and although the pan of the machine struck him, the car passed over him as he lay in the road without inflicting anything but a slight bruise.

SOME FIGURES.

The mileage of the car affords some food for thought. On the first day it did its best total, when the drivers were fresh. This was 503 miles. On the second day, 440 miles were covered, on the third the total dropped slightly to 421 miles, and on the fourth day the total was increased to 450 miles. On the fifth day the mileage dropped again to 398, and on the sixth day still farther, to 284. On the seventh day it was increased to 408, and with a fresh crew on at the present time, it is probable that the eighth day will show another gain.

The average daily run of the machine has been 430 miles, and on the basis of elapsed time, the car has maintained an average of eighteen miles an hour. The engine has consumed, on the average, one gallon of gasoline for every seventeen miles traversed. The astonishing part of the record is that for the 3000 miles completed yesterday morning, only one quart over three gallons of water have been required for the cooling system.

Spark plugs have been changed several times, a feat which points to especial cleverness on the part of the crew. On several endurance runs and non-stop contests, spark plugs have been changed in four-cylinder cars without stopping the engine, but at best it is a ticklish job. Changing a plug on a two-cylinder car is a feat to be proud of.

Essay on the Auto.

Secretary A. R. Davis of the Garford Motor Car Company tells the following about a little ten-year-old Cleveland girl who was ordered by her teacher to write a 250-word essay on the automobile. This is what she substituted to her teacher after much deliberate thought: "My papa has bought an automobile and he goes on some very long rides. The other day it busted way off in the country at the bottom of a very big hill. This is about fifty words. The other 200 are what my papa said when he walked back home, but, as my mamma says, they are not fit for publication."

BIG UNDERTAKING.

IN MOTOR CAR SEA TO SEA.

Pasadena Family Will Essay Transcontinental Trip.

Fully Prepared for Camping and Rough Work.

Expect to Make Long Journey in Two Months.

J. M. Murdock of No. 252 Madison avenue, Pasadena, will shortly take his family across the United States in his seven-passenger Packard touring car. He intends to drive every mile of the long journey and will start two weeks from tomorrow. The party will consist of Mr. and Mrs. Murdock, their three children, Alice, Lillian and J. Milton, Jr., L. L. Whitman, who drove a Franklin across the United States in fifteen days, will pilot the party as far as Ogden.

There is every reason to believe the party will make the long journey successfully. Fully equipped with provision box, tent, and bedding, the big machine is ready to leave at a moment's notice. Should the party be obliged to camp out for a week, they will not be inconvenienced.

The two revolving seats have been removed, making room for the long box in which eatables will be stored. On top of this box will be a large roll of bedding, pillows, and cushions. The articles are stored so as to make plenty of room in the tonneau for the women of the party.

Mr. Murdock's home is in Johnstown, Pa. He has spent the past three winters in Pasadena. His desire to drive across the continent was inspired by conversations with the veteran autoist, Whitman, who declares the trip can be easily made. Though many have started few have completed the journey. Only one car has made the run from Los Angeles to New York. P. F. [illegible] and David Fassett, crossed the continent in a Reo, driving from San Francisco by way of Los Angeles. The mark made by Whitman when he drove a Franklin from Stockton to New York in fifteen days, two hours and ten minutes, has never been equaled. The Pasadenan holds the record for the cross-continent jaunt.

There is no desire on the part of Mr. Murdock to break any record. He does not intend to drive fast over any part of the road, but he says he will not linger along the way, as he desires to reach his home early in June.

If experience counts, Mr. Murdock is the man who should be able to make the journey. He spent the past winter in Europe, and drove 6000 miles over all kinds of roads. He handled the car himself, and for days was far from any auto repair shop or garage. He says he is not a mechanic, but he has a knowledge of a car which few owners possess.

The big car will carry a windlass, ropes and levers for emergencies. Should the car drop into a sand pit in the desert, the windlass will be put in commission, and one man can pull the machine out of almost any hole. The apparatus, which has been designed under Mr. Murdock's direction, has been patented, and is likely to render signal service to the voyagers.

The drum is much like that used by [illegible], but is smaller. Two iron arms, which fit into the drum, are carried on the side of the car. With ropes attached to the front axle, it is expected the machine can be pulled out of a bad place and carried over sand ground without great effort. One man handles the ropes while the other works the arms on walks around the drum.

For the past week in Pasadena Mr. Murdock has been amusing himself by running his car into the worst sand and dust holes he can find. With the machine buried to the hubs, the device has never failed to lift the car back to solid ground. The device is a success.

In addition to the drum, there is a coil of rope which will probably prove a friend in need. Practice has made Murdock an adept at handling the drum and rope. He dropped his machine into a sand pit yesterday afternoon from which it was impossible to drive under its own power. The drum was fixed into the ground with two iron rods which will also be carried, then the machine arms were put into position and the drum was turned and the car came from its bed none the worse for the experience. Unlike most motorists Murdock has been hunting for bad places in the roads.

Every preparation is now complete for the journey. Letters have been sent ahead along the route proposed and where necessary supplies of gasoline have been ordered. A complete set of springs and tires will be shipped to Ogden. Oil supplies for 1000 miles will be carried.

Under the footboards will be a tank for extra gasoline supply. This will be found to be particularly necessary in crossing some of the long stretches of the Middle States.

The route by way of Barstow and [illegible] was decided upon after careful consideration. The Packard will go across the desert to Ely and thence to Ogden and will follow from there Whitman's route into [illegible].

As the time for the start approaches there is no anxiety on the part of the family who are to drive the machine. Practically everything possible has been done to make the run successful. Instead of two tires, three will be carried. The car, however, is practically the same machine which came out of the factory the early part of this year. It has been driven almost 5000 miles.

Newspaper clippings of the route taken by the American and foreign cars in the New York-to-Paris race are treasured by Mr. Murdock, who has a complete set which he consults from time to time. He has the entire route mapped out and knows where he should stop every night, barring accidents on the way.

The other members of the Murdock family are enthusiasts. All are anxious to begin the long run. Every effort has been made by Mr. Murdock to keep the fact that he intends to make the long journey a secret.

"The reason I did not want to say much about this," said Mr. Murdock yesterday, "is because I may fail. I don't want to say I'm going to drive across the continent and then have to ship my car almost the entire distance. I expect to go clear through, but there is no telling what may happen."

J. M. Murdock and His Son, in Packard touring car, in which he will drive his family across the continent to his home in Pennsylvania.

Score of Fresno Automobile Enthusiasts,

[illegible] from their home to Los Angeles for the festivities of fleet week, stopping for a rest on the sand at Pizmo.

STARTLING.

MAKE MOVE TO ABANDON SHOW.

TRAVELING AUTO EXHIBITION IS PROPOSED.

Committee of Management of American Motor Car Manufacturers' Association Discusses Scheme of Displaying Models All Over the Country in Special Train.

It was expected that some sort of an announcement on the show question would be made after the meeting of the Committee on Management of the American Motor Car Manufacturers' Association, and the prediction has been fulfilled with interest. Nothing less than the abandonment of the annual New York exhibition is proposed, and while this action has not yet been definitely settled upon a special committee was appointed to make a report on the matter at the next meeting.

In place of the annual show at New York, and also the one at Chicago, it is proposed that the independent makers have a transcontinental traveling automobile show, so that instead of asking prospective purchasers of cars to visit New York to inspect the new models the show will be taken to their towns during the selling season, when people are ready to buy cars. Present plans call for participation by all of the fifty-two automobile manufacturing firms that are members of the American Motor Car Manufacturers' Association.

The idea outlined at the meeting of the Committee of Management would require a special train or trains of thirty freight cars to carry the automobiles and a train of Pullmans for the salesmen and demonstrators. The plan provides for a trip of at least three months, a day or two being spent in each city having a population of more than 100,000 inhabitants. Estimates which have been secured from the contracting agents of the railroads place the total expenditure at about $100,000.

If the plan is adopted the start will be made from Detroit and the cities to be visited will include, Cleveland, Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, Utica, Albany, Springfield, Worcester, Boston, Providence, Hartford, New Haven, Bridgeport, New York, Newark, Atlantic City, Trenton, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Richmond, Charleston, W. V.; Pittsburgh, Columbus, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Des Moines, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Milwaukee and Chicago.

In addition to exhibiting the cars, it is planned to hold hill-climbing events and other contests in the different cities so as to give practical demonstrations of the serviceability of the different cars. Cars ranging in price from $500 to $9000 are made by members of the association, and it is quite possible that if the traveling show idea is carried out visitors to it will be able to inspect cars between these two extremes of selling price.

SOMETHING DEFINITE.

NEW RULES BY RACING BOARD.

AMATEURS AND STOCK CARS ARE DEFINED.

American Automobile Association Formally Passes on Several Vexed Questions, and Also Adopts New Rule Which Provides for Four Bases of Classification.

At the recent meeting of the racing board of the A.A.A., the racing rules were revised and the status of an amateur was clearly defined. The most interesting of the definitions passed upon were:

Amateur—A man who has never driven or raced a motor car for pay, either in cash or any other valuable consideration; who has never competed for a cash prize; who does not make his livelihood, or any part of it, as a result of racing or driving, either as a demonstrator, tester or chauffeur; who has otherwise not received financial reward for engaging in a competition; who has never been declared a professional by any sport governing body, in connection with that sport over which it has jurisdiction, or who, having been so declared has been reinstated, either by such body or by the racing board of the A.A.A.

Stock Car—A motor car completely described in the manufacturer's catalogue for the current or any preceding year, which is manufactured in quantities of ten or more, which is on sale by the regular selling representatives of the manufacturer and is manufactured ready for delivery to buyers.

Stock Chassis—A chassis which, without any changes whatsoever, except that lighter rear springs may be used, can, by adding the necessary parts, be assembled into a complete stock car, for which it is designed.

Touring Car—A car provided with a tonneau and seats for at least five adults, two in front and three or more in the tonneau.

Touring Runabout or Tourabout—A car provided with seats for two persons side by side in front and one or two permanent seats withtout tonneau for one or two persons in rear.

A new rule provides for a basis of classification as follows:

A—Piston displacement class 1, over 550 cubic inches; class 2, 301 to 550 cubic inches; class 3, 151 to 300 cubic inches; class 4, 150 cubic inches and under.

B—Horse power: Class 1, 75.1 horse power and upward; class 2, 60.1 to 75 horse power, inclusive; class 3, 40.1 to 60 horse power, inclusive; class 4, 24.1 to 40 horse power, inclusive; class 5, 15.1 to 24 horse power, inclusive; class 6, 15 horse power and under.

C—Price: Class 1, $4001 and over; class 2, $3001 to $4000; class 3, $2001 to $3000; class 4, $1251 to $2000; class 5, $851 to $1250; class 6, $850 and under.

D—Weight, in pounds: Class 1, over 2204; class 2, 1432 to 2204; class 3, 881 to 1432; class 4, 551 to 881.

SEA-TO-SEA TOURS PROPOSED.

California State Automobile Association Will Run Personally Conducted Trips.

The California State Automobile Association contemplates running two transcontinental tours this summer, to be personally conducted by a motorist, who has crossed the continent several times on automobiles of various makes.

As contemplated, one tour would leave either this city or San Francisco in late May or early June and journey by easy stages in a party to Omaha, beyond which point the cars would be allowed to scatter as much as they pleased. On the western half of the trip an emergency car would accompany with extra tires and parts and prepared to supply meals at any point when it might be necessary to camp out over night on account of accident or unavoidable delay.

A liberal entrance fee will be charged to cover necessary expenses for the personally conducted management, and a pro rata for the emergency car and suplies. A month would be required for the trip between ocean and ocean and many famous points of interest would be visited.

It is partly planned to start the cars from Los Angeles or San Diego and run up the Coast to San Francisco and then over the mountains to Reno Nev., Salt Lake City, the Mormon capital, and Denver would be on the route and a visit to the Garden of the Gods and Pike's Peak.

One prominent motorist favors a route through the goldfields from Los Angeles, visiting Death Valley, Bullfrog, Goldfield, Tonopah and then through the farming country of Southern Utah.

An entrance fee of one hundred dollars has been partly decided upon and any wishing to take part in such a transcontinental tour should apply to Charles Fuller Gates, who is the Southern California representative of the State Automobile Association, or to L. P. L. Lowe, the president, in San Francisco.

TO SUBSIDIZE MOTOR TRUCKS.

German War Department Will Get Fund of Half-Million for Auto Transport Corps.

The French army officers were among the first to become interested in the possibilities of employing motor-driven vehicles as army transport wagons, and the head of the French War Department has shown great interest in the heavy vehicle trials in this country for several years past. Last summer the French War Department bought a number of the cars that made the best showings in the heavy vehicle events, and it will do so again after the contests have been concluded this year.

Now it is Germany that is going in for the utilization of heavy motor vehicles for the use of its army and the Budget Commission has decided to report favorably on a bill to authorize a fund of about $500,000 to provide for the organization of an automobile transport corps for the army. It is not planned to use all of the money in buying vehicles outright, but rather to create a reserve force of these heavy vehicles that will be at the call of the army in time of need. The idea is to make arrangements for the reservation for the army of the heavy vehicles used by express companies, wholesale merchants and dealers who have heavy hauling done by motor-driven wagons and trucks. The plan includes a subsidy arrangement, under which manufacturers and owners of such mechines would keep them in readiness to be used in emergencies by the government and to have the vehicles used during the regular army maneuvers, after which the owners would again assume control of them.

STUDEBAKER ATTRACTS.

Late Arrival on Gasoline Row Makes Strong Bid for Attention, Is Stylish and Speedy.

One of the late arrivals which is attracting attention on Gasoline Row, is the 1908 thirty-horse-power Studebaker which came to town Tuesday. The machine is built on straight lines, has a trim appearing body, and is stylish. The Lord Motor Car Co. has the car on exhibition at its new garage.

The machine has a 104-inch wheel base, and is equipped with a float feed automatic carbureter. All valves are mechanically operated. The sliding gear transmission is of the progressive type. The car is equipped with three speeds forward and one reverse, and is controlled by one lever with the direct drive on third speed.

The semi-elliptic springs in front and rear add to the attractiveness and easy riding qualities of the car. The 34-inch wheels are of artillery type. The front axle is drop forged nickel steel. The dash is of concave pressed steel.

White Breaks Record.

At San Francisco the worst hills to climb with automobiles are on Fillmore street for three blocks in a distance of 960 feet, with the last two hills averaging 30 per cent. For years these hills were considered impossible and the grass grows among the cobble stones, showing that wagons very seldom run here. Since the high power cars came to the Coast these Fillmore street hills have been the testing point for power. For some time the record over these three terrors of hills has been held by a 60-horse-power Thomas but last Tuesday a 30-horse-power White steam touring car fully equipped, cut the record to 23 seconds, cutting ten seconds off the previous record.

Gliddens in Jerusalem.

Charles J. Glidden, the globe girdling Boston motorist, and his wife recently visited Jerusalem on their tour of the world. It is declared that the Glidden car was the first automobile ever seen in Jerusalem.

MODERN TRANSPORT.

MANY MOTORISTS TO SEE FLEET.

SCORE COME IN ONE PARTY FROM FRESNO.

In Five Machines They Spend Pleasurable Time in Coming from Interior Valley by Way of Monterey and Coast Route—Dinner Forfeit on Time Made.

Fresno is one of the liveliest automobile towns in California, where even an automobile show was held, though Los Angeles dealers did not feel equal to an automobile show this year. Fresno motorists concluded to put their motor cars to good use and drive to this city, and then on to San Diego to see the great armada first reach California.

Besides the parties in single cars, coming the shortest route, via Bakersfield, a large party drove across the mountains to Monterey, and then down the coast route to this city. This party, made up of over a score, came in three White steamers, a Pierce Arrow and a Premier. Four of the cars started from Fresno a week ago last Thursday, while the fifth, a White touring car, driven by E. E. Waterman, accompanied by A. R. Clarke, Robert Kennedy, Mrs. Kennedy and Miss Kennedy, did not leave till Monday last, overtaking the rest of the party here Friday night.

Fresno motorists spend most of the summer months at Pizmo, Monterey and Santa Cruz, so it was the most natural thing for this party to cut through Pacheco Pass and Hollister to the coast route. At Hotel del Monte the van guard spent two days, having stopped over the first night at Hollister, as one of the cars gave out there.

From Monterey the automobile fleet sailed down the Salinas Valley to Paso Robles, and saw "Fighting Bob" Evans, stopped over night there, and then made the sixty-five-mile run to Pizmo Beach leisurely, enjoying the spring beauty of Casco Pass through the Santa Lucia Mountains.

The roads nearly all of the 600 miles were found in better shape than ever before, and were commented on by all the party. Wild flowers were everywhere, and the purple blossoms in Casitas Pass in particular formed almost a continuous border to the road.

Dr. Montgomery Thomas and his wife had two couples of their friends in his six-cylinder Pierce Arrow, and there was much joking all the way about the wager between Dr. Thomas and Dr. Ira Bennett, who wagered a dinner for the whole party at the Alexander Indian Grill on the merits of their respective cars. In Dr. Bennett's car, besides Mrs. Bennett, was her sister, Mrs. Glascoe and the driver, making a party of four for the twenty-horse-power car, while Dr. Thomas had as guests Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Swift and Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Patterson, the car being driven by Walter Everts.

Dr. J. F. Maupin made the run in his thirty-horse-power Premier, having as guests of himself and wife Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Romain. In a big White runabout, Mr. and Mrs. George H. Monroe completed the party.

When the four cars reached Pizmo Beach, the hotel was found closed, and in charge of a caretaker. But the Fresno motorists, all being young people, lookig for variety of experiences, persuaded the caretaker to let them open up the place and play at running hotel, and the party put in two enjoyable days there, including a side trip up into the hills near Arroyo Grande, where part of the gentlemen are interested in some oil wells.

Last Wednesday the Fresno motorists journeyed from Pizmo to Santa Barbara, stopping near Santa Ynez mission at Alamo Pintado for luncheon.

Gaviota Pass begins at Santa Ynez mission and was particularly beautiful last week, with the running water which made the waterfalls active and the little fords full. Santa Barbara was reached early in the afternoon and nearly two days were spent at Santa Barbara. Then the cars were sent on to the entrance of Casitas Pass and the stop over night made at Shepard's.

Friday the run in from Shepard's to this city was made in quick time, the Great Arrow of Dr. Thomas's taking but three and a half hours. Dr. Bennett had come through the day before from Santa Barbara, but was several hours slower than Dr. Thomas, so has to set up the dinner for the whole party, which was celebrated last night in this city.

Today the Fresno armada of motor cars journeyed on to Riverside, where another delightful stop will be made with side trips to the new mountain drive at Redlands, as well as the drive over Roubidoux Mountain.

From Riverside and Redlands the next leg of the itinerary is on to Escondido for lunch and dinner at Hotel Coronado. This will take the party through the 100 miles of mountain roads in the interior from the mesa beyond Box Springs Cañon Pass. At San Diego the great fleet will be seen in its grand approach from the south and then the whole party will visit the missions at Oceanside, Pala and Capistrano, returning to this city and then home through Tejon Pass and Bakersfield, making a 1500-mile tour for the party, including a visit to old Mexico at Tia Juana and many other side trips.

A party of five left Fresno in a White steamer last Monday and followed the same route as the other Fresno party, but made shorter stops and reached this city a few hours later than the vanguard last Friday. E. B. Waterman drove this car, his companions being Mr. and Mrs. Robert Kennedy, A. R. Clarke and Miss Kennedy.

The left Fresno Monday morning and made Salinas that day. Tuesday they drove to Monterey and back and then on the third day to Paso Robles, reaching Santa Barbara on Thursday and this city on Friday.

Mr. Waterman and his party will make a quick trip to San Diego and expect to be back in this city by the middle of the week, to return on the inland route over Cajon Pass to Fresno.

Yesterday Mr. Waterman hunted up his original car, which was built for him in this city eight years ago, being the sixth automobile shown in Southern California, most of the others also being made here as experiments. With all the Fresno cars gathered about this old car it will be photographed this morning before the five big cars start for Riverside.

Protest not Sustained.

Robert Lee Morrell, chairman of the executive board and Rules Committee of the Automobile Manufacturers' Committee which is to conduct the Briarcliff trophy contest for stock cars in Westchester county on April 24, has announced that he has a cablegram from the Automobile Club of Italy assuring him that at least ten Isotta-Fraschini cars had been built of the type that has been entered in the Briarcliff event. This definitely disposes of any protest against the three Italian machines.

Deliver Coal by Auto.

Motor driven coal wagons equipped with eighteen-horse-power engines are giving good satisfaction at Berlin, Germany. The bodies are made so they can be tipped up by using the power of the engines.

SPEAKING OF RECORDS

DO YOU KNOW

That no motor car on the market can show such a varied list of successes as the OLDSMOBILE?

For instance—

The Oldsmobile Model M won the $3000 class in the last Pasadena-Altadena Hill Climb. This car easily outclassed every touring car in the Hill Climb.

THIS PROVES THE POWER AND THE HILL CLIMBING ABILITY of the OLDSMOBILE

The Oldsmobile holds the Los Angeles-Santa Barbara record, 3 hours and 57 minutes. 115 miles over two mountain ranges. Two attempts were made last week to break this record but both were failures.

In the big track meet at Boston the Oldsmobile was entered in two events, 50 and 100 mile races. It won the 100 mile race from a field of the leading American and foreign cars, breaking the world's record. It was also victorious in the 50 mile race, again breading the world's record.

THIS PROVES Beyond All Question the SPEED of the OLDSMOBILE A SPEED WHICH NOT MORE THAN ONE OUT OF FIFTY OWNERS WOULD EVER DESIRE TO USE

Then comes that supreme test of roadability. And right here is where the Oldsmobile shines. The public still remembers that race, or rather walkover from Los Angeles to San Francisco in which the Oldsmobile reached San Francisco before its competitor, the Pope-Hartford, had completed one-third of the journey. The race took place at the worst season of the year when the roads were feet deep in mud, when bridges were washed away and small creeks had risen to the size of rivers. Three times the Pope-Hartford tried to reach San Francisco. Not once did it get half way. Three times the Oldsmobile tried it and three times it went through successfully, establishing a record of 32 hours for the inland route which has never been beaten.

Does Not That PROVE the ROADABILITY of the OLDSMOBILE TO YOUR ENTIRE SATISFACTION?

The Oldsmobile also made a hundred other records last year, among them, perfect scores in 16 endurance runs, track victories in a dozen Cities and Hill Climb Championships in Kansas City, New Haven, Minneapolis, Los Angeles and elsewhere.

But this is not all—

Of late you have heard a lot of talk about records to Bakersfield and records to Fresno. Watch the Oldsmobile. We mean to go after this record in the very near future. And when we do, to the sagebrush with these would-be record holders. We will put the mark so low it will take an air ship to get it.

This is no bluff. Just Keep Your Eye on the OLDSMOBILE--"The Car That Does Things

TOO MANY ERRORS.

LOCALS WIN VERY HANDILY.

Have no Trouble in Beating Pitcher Carnes.

Blonde Twirler Retires from Game in Sixth.

New Coast Pennant Raised by Manager Berry.

Los Angeles, 9; Oakland, 3.

The locals chased their old comrade, Carnes, to the bench yesterday, in the sixth inning and before the third man was put out, five runs had been made in the inning and the game was over from that moment. Over 1000 fans saw the performance and aside from the timely batting of Brashear and a left-handed spear of a liner by Haley, the game was devoid of sensational features.

Bush Koestner did the pitching for Los Angeles and while he was a trifle groggy at times, he finished the game on the right side and kept the enemy from doing any great amount of damage. Carnes go thin wrong in the middle of the game and Van Haltren finally threw him out and stuck in Jimmy Smith, and although Jimmy did not allow any more slaughter, he could not call back the one that had taken place.

The game was full of errors and yet there were many pretty plays, Delmas, Haley, Altman and Jud Smith doing the best work. The Oaks, however, were beaten early and probably became careless when the score went against them, for they had no hearts after the locals made three easy runs in the third inning and they gave up entirely after the sixth. Carnes was wild at times and was hit at the right moments and this tells the story briefly.

Oakland jumped off in the lead in the first with a run. With two out, Heitmuller swatted one to left, and when Ellis booted the ball, Heit ran to second. He advanced to third on Eagan's hit to center and scored when he and Truck worked the old-time double steal. Their next two runs started with Oakes's muff of a short fly between first and second bases. Brashear, Bernard and Oakes all ran for this and as they met, all hesitated, and then Oakes tried to get the fly and muffed it. This put Quick on first base, and then Altman and Haley followed with hits and Dashwood's long fly to Ellis helped make two runs.

For Los Angeles, passes to Hogan and Bernard, Oakes's fielder's choice that forced Bernard at second, Dillon's single and Brashear's hard double to the left fence made three easy runs. In the fifth Oakes's hit, Dillon's sacrifice and Cook's muff of Jud Smith's long fly to the left fence made another run.

In the sixth Carnes walked Delmas, Hogan sacrificed, Koestner was passed, Bernard hit to Haley, who juggled the ball and tried to force Koestner at second, but made a bad throw. Then Oakes bunted toward third base and Dillon followed with a sacrifice bunt in front of the plate which Dashwood juggled. After this Van Haltren threw Carnes out of the game and put in Jimmy Smith, and Brashear hit him for a two-horse swat over first. There was nothing brilliant about the game as a whole, but the fans got the worth of their money, watching the locals use up Carnes.

Just before the battle, mother, Manager Berry went through the process of raising the pennant Los Angeles won last year. The Oakland players formed two abreast and marched past the grand stand. Behind them came Manager Berry with the pennant, and behind him were the Los Angeles players, marching by twos. The procession filed past the grand stand and out to a pole beyond the left foul line, and there the pennant was raised.

SEALS SHUT OUT.

COULDN'T HIT PINNANCE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] After suffering six successive defeats, the Beavers finally turned the tables on the Seals by the score of 7 to 0. The way they waded into Henley's curves was a fright. The fifteen hits they made only tells one-half the tale of the awful slaughter. On the other hand, Pinnance, who was on slab duty for Portland, had the Seals guessing all the time, and was never in danger. During the first few innings the game had all the earmarks of a prolonged pitchers' battle, but once the good work started, nothing could stop the onslaught.

It was in the fourth that the fireworks commenced. Danzig opened up with a single to right, was sacrificed to second by Johnson, and came home on Bassey's single. He in turn stole second, went to third on a fielder's choice, and scored when Williams dropped Henley's easy throw to first.

The Seals managed to escape further disaster in the fifth, but in the sixth Portland added another run on hits by Cooney, Walsh and Bassey. Ragged playing and three more hits accounted for two more in the seventh, but even this didn't satisfy the Beavers, and the final carnage came in the eighth. Bassey opened with a single and stole second. Walsh struck out. Pinnance showed he could find them, too, by lining out a single, and both came home when Raftery doubled to left. The next two men were easy outs. This ended the scoring of the day, though Cooney reached third.

On the Seals' side there was nothing doing. Pinnance held them safe at all times, and the team behind gave him gilt-edged support. The dope follows:

BERKELEY WINS.

VERY CLOSE CONTEST.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERKELEY, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The University of California 'varsity nine defeated the Stanford baseball team by a score of 2 to 1 in the second game of the intercollegiate series on California Field this afternoon. California won by the same score today that she lost by in the first game a week ago. Today's game was the first 'varsity victory that California has taken from Stanford in over a year and makes a third game necessary. The match was played in fast time and the fielding for the most part was clean and snappy. Thiele had slightly the best of it in pitching honors, as he fanned four to Jordan's two. Each pitcher allowed five hits, and walked one man. With the exception of a muff by Ganong, Stanford played an errorless game. California made three misplays, but all of them were on difficult chances. Fenton and Butler fielded the best, in that they had the most chances, but there were no particular stars.

In the third inning Stanford lost a chance to score when Fenton Witmer, who ran for Thiele, attempted to score. R. Myers made a perfect assist to C. Myers and Witmer was tagged at the plate.

The scoring started in the first of the fourth, after Witmer, running for Thiele, had reached second on a fielder's choice and a steal. Cary Owen drove a hot single to center, where Solinsky made a difficult stop. Witmer came home on the swat, and the score was 1 to 0 for Stanford. When California came to bat the next inning, Lewis, the first man up, walked. Smith followed him with a single to right, which Ganong muffed, and Smith went to second, while Lewis took third. R. Myers followed Smith, and hit the first ball pitched to deep center, scoring Smith and Lewis. Wirt made a long throw to the plate, but could not catch Lewis. Mitchell made a quick peg back to Fenton at second and caught Myers before he reached the bag. Each team reached third base but once after this. The score:

LOS ANGELES WINS.

BEACH TEAM LOSES FIRST.

The Los Angeles High School defeated the Santa Monica High nine by a score of 2 to 1. The game was close throughout, and both teams played fine ball. The L. A. lads have been working hard for several weeks to be in good shape when they met the Santa Monica squad, for upon their success in this game decided whether or not they would meet the Polytechnic nine again. In their previous games the Los Angeles boys had considerable trouble batting, but Coach Oliver has developed several good hitters, and when the team meets Poly again the fans should see some good batting.

A feature of the game was a home run made by Pitcher Beamer, of the L. A. team. Beamer hit a low ball, which passed both fielders and scored the first run for his team. This is the first defeat the beach team has had this year, and they are now tied for first place in the county league with Los Angeles, and Polytechnic.

PASADENA LOSES.

VERY CRUSHING DEFEAT.

The Polytechnic ball nine won from Pasadena High School on the Crown City diamond yesterday in a one-sided affair by a score of 18 to 1. The Pasadena aggregation played a very ragged game and Wachob, the catcher, who did the pitching in the absence of Boynton, was given very poor support. The basemen divided eight misplays between them, while the outfielders added four more. Pasadena secured their lone score, when Daily singled, stole second, and crossed the plate when Pratt misjudged Wachob's long fly to left.

PROFS. WIN GAME.

DEFEAT OCCIDENTAL TEAM.

The Los Angeles school teachers' baseball team took the Occidental College nine into camp on the Harvard campus yesterday afternoon, by a score of 5 to 4. The game was a rather tame affair, save for an occasional wild heave by some members of the twig-benders' infield, while both sides experienced considerable difficulty in locating the opposing twirlers.

The collegians performed in a rather listless manner, and managed to break into the error column for seven discredits. McKinney was the worst offender in this line, having three misplays charged against him at third base. Thacker opened the game for Occidental, and was supplanted by Patterson in the sixth. Rheinhardt was on the slab for the teachers, and with the exception of the fourth inning, kept his hits well scattered. The teachers scored in the first and second. They added another in the fifth, and paraded their remaining two runs across in the first of the sixth. The fourth and fifth favored Occidental with a run each, while tallies in the eighth and ninth completed their run getting.

ROWING AT STANDSTILL.

Los Angeles Athletic Club Athletes Will not Take to the Water Until May.

Rowing at the Los Angeles Athletic Club is at a standstill because of the poor condition of the club course at Playa del Rey, and it is probable that no work will be done until May 1.

The Naples Athletic Club is desirous of having the Los Angeles men train at Naples, but the local aggregation has been slow in accepting the propositions proffered by the Naples club.

From present indications the Los Angeles boys will not meet any outside clubs this year, unless one or two men enter the singles which are scheduled to be held at some of the beach towns for the benefit of the sailors.

HIGH SCHOOL BEST.

HOLLYWOOD CLUB.

High School baseball team won from the Hollywood Club yesterday, by a score of 5 to 6. The teams were evenly matched, and up to the last of the tenth inning the score stood even. This is the second game the two teams have played this year, each nine taking one.

The Hollywood High lads have a good team, and have won all but two of the league games. The club boys did good batting and ran their bases well, but they often erred in the field. The Hollywood lads have improved noticeably since their last Saturday's game with the Los Angeles High School, and with some improvement with the stick they would have as good a team as any in the league.

LONG BEACH BEATEN.

MANY ERRORS PILED UP.

The Harvard Military Academy baseball team and Long Beach High School played a fast ten-inning game on the beach diamond yesterday. The game went to the soldier boys by a score of 5 to 3. Newman caused the breaking up of the affair in the first half of the extra session. With two men on bases the Harvard catcher drove out a two-base hit, which sent two men across the rubber. During the first three innings both teams made several misplays, after which they settled down and played good ball. Stoll and Doyle, the opposing twirlers, were hit often by their opponents. The local team however, was more successful in placing their bingles, and gathered a total of eleven safeties off Doyle's delivery. The pitchers divided a total of six strike-outs between them, with the result that the infielders had a very busy day. Both twirlers had good control, and neither issued any passes. In the seventh inning P. Frazier of the High School team completed the circuit on a two-base hit, assisted by two errors on the part of Outfielder Coughran. The results:

ALL-STARS BEATEN.

YOUNGER SAINTS PLAY WELL.

The St. Vincent's High School nine defeated an all-star team picked from several local high schools on their own diamond yesterday morning by a score of 11 to 2. Lack of team work resulted in the stars going to pieces in the fifth, with the result that five runs were scored against them in that period.

The Stars collected their two runs in the second and seventh. The Vincentians gathered a total of thirteen safeties off Damerel, while Cunningham allowed but four bingles.

INDIANS LOSE.

DEFEATED IN FINAL GAME.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

RIVERSIDE, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] In a close, exciting game at Chemawa Park this afternoon, the Pomona College baseball team defeated the Sherman Institute nine by a score of 3 to 2.

The feature of the game for Pomona was the pitching of Gally. He allowed several hits, but they were well scattered. Sherman's star playing was by B. Smith, who made two three-base hits. The Indians' first run was on Smith's three-base hit and Ardillo's single. In the fourth inning, Pomona succeeded in scoring twice on a wild throw by B. Smith over second baseman Merrick's head. In the same inning, the Pomona pitcher threw wild and allowed one Sherman man to cross the plate. Pomona's last run in the fifth inning was earned. Time of the game, 1:55.

The game was one of the fastest ever played here, and will probably be the last Sherman will play this year. Under Scholder's able coaching, Sherman has won the majority of its contests this season.

Score by innings:

Sherman	1 0 0 1 0 0 0 0 0—2
Pomona	0 0 0 2 1 0 0 0 0—3

SOUTHERN STATE.

DOUBLE-HEADER TODAY.

The Southern State League has scheduled a double-header for Joy Park this afternoon. The Eagles and Christopher-Levys will play the first game, which is called for 1 o'clock. The second game will be between the Salt Lakes and the Morans. Lordsburg and Dyas-Cline will not play. Line-ups:

COUNTRY GAME.

ONTARIO OUTCLASSED.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

ONTARIO, April 11.—The local High School team was defeated here today by the crack San Bernardino team in a very one-sided contest, the game ending by a score of 15 to 5 in favor of the visiting team.

Ontario was outplayed at every stage of the game and did not have a chance to win.

The batting was a feature of the Gate City team, as they succeeded in touching Childs for fourteen hits, and most of these came at the proper moments. Ontario secured eight hits off Pace.

The fielding of the Ontario team was very poor, while that of their opponents was fast and showed the advantage gained in playing against the Oakland team last week.

By the showing made here today by the visiting team they have a very good chance of defeating Pomona and winning the Citrus Belt championship.

WHITTIER BEATEN.

U.S.C. DENTALS WINNERS.

Whittier went down to defeat yesterday afternoon in her first baseball game of the season, before the strong team from the dental department of the University of Southern California, the score being 8 to 7, at Whittier. Short pitched a good game for the home team, allowing the visitors only seven hits, but his support was ragged at times, several costly errors being made. The Dental team made ten errors to the Quakers' five, but they were made at times when they did no damage.

The Quakers started the ball rolling in their half of the first inning by making four scores. In their half of the second the Dentals made two scores.

In the third the Whittier team went to pieces, allowing four of the Dentals to cross the plate. In the fifth, the Quakers made two tying the score. In the sixth, Whittier forged ahead one point. and in the eighth the Dentals made two. After this neither side was able to score. The line-up was as follows:

GLARNER SHOWS CLASS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERKELEY, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The first annual relay carnival of the University of California was successfully held on the California track this morning. All the events were run in fast time. One world's record went to the bad when Glarner of the Olympic Club did 900 yards in 2m. 1 2-5s., lowering the former mark held by Sheppard of the New York Athletic Club, by 2-5 of a second. Fred Lanagan of Stanford tried for the world's record in the pole vault but after getting over twelve feet, strained his ankle and had to stop.

The results:

Grammar school—Championship relay, 100-yards heat, won by Franklin of Oakland; time, 1m. 10 4-5s.

Interdepartment relay of U. C., 220-yards lap: Won by College of Commerce: time, 1m. 36 3-5s.

The 100-yard dash—Won by Gehrhardt (O.C.;) Crossfield (U.C.,) second; Schafer (Santa Clara,) third; time, 10 2-5s.

The 900-yard run for world's record—Won by Glarner (O.C.;) Padilla (O.C.,) Dowd, Leggett and Healy (U.C.) also ran; time, 2m. 1 2-5s. Former record. 2m. 14-5s., held by Sheppard (N.Y. A.A. C.)

the trophy. In 1903 it fell to the lot of Miss Mable B. Higgins of the Pasadena Country Club.

Miss Florence Borden won the trophy in 1904 and Miss Higgins won the trophy again in 1905. In 1906 it fell to the prowess of Miss K. C. Harley and last year Mrs. Herbert Munn of Coronado Beach Country Club won the trophy. It must be won three times before it becomes the property of any particular owner.

Miss Chapin has been a player in Annandale Country Club for some time, and is the protegé of Albert Naylor, the professional golfer, who has charge of the course at Annandale this year. Miss Chapin began playing four years ago at Harbor Springs Country Club in Michigan. She has improved rapidly, and her victory yesterday was unexpected. She possesses a fine eye for distance, and rarely loses her nerve, strangely, a thing easily done in a golf tournament. She is hardly five feet in height, and is of stalky proportions. Her drives are bullet-like and accurate in their proportions.

Mrs. Alexander is a veteran of many tournaments, but it is an old saying that even the best will lose. Miss Chapin met a worthy opponent in Mrs. Alexander, and Southern California has a new golf wonder.

The results of the foursomes played this afternoon were as follows:

FAREWELL!

JIMMY BRITT KNOCKED OUT.

Poor Old Pug Outclassed by Packey McFarland.

San Francisco Boy Never Had Equal Chance.

Put Away in Sixth Round After Poor Showing.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, April 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Packey McFarland, the Chicago lightweight, made good today at Colma pavilion.

Absolutely outclassing Jimmy Britt in every part of the game, he fought the Californian to a stand-still in the early stages, all but winding up the fight in the fourth and finally knocked out his opponent in the sixth round, with a succession of straight rights to the jaw, that sent Britt helpless to the floor three times in rapid succession. The final count of ten was spared the timekeeper only because Britt's father jumped through the ropes, fearing lest his son might once more try to get on his feet.

The elder Britt might have spared himself trouble. Jimmy was down for the last time. The instinct to get up was there, but physical power was lacking in the body that had taken a world of beating during the short eighteen minutes and less of actual work in the ring. It was knockout with no "ifs" or "ands" and as his seconds carried him to his corner, the defeated man was still in a dazed condition, barely conscious that he had lost the fight.

The eclipse of Britt as a fighter in California had come. He was downed fairly and squarely and so helplessly whipped that even Spider Kelly in his corner stopped shouting advice to him after the first round. Every one knew that Britt was in for a decisive licking. His old stamina and whirlwind rushes were lacking. He couldn't land on McFarland and at the same time was unable to guard himself.

It was the spectacular showing of McFarland, far more than the downfall of Britt, that stands out prominently in this fight. The West, and with good reason, had come to be wary of importations and slow to praise them. Nor was McFarland over boastful. He had said that he would win and explained that he could fight far better than he could box. Once McFarland had proved to the satisfaction of himself, as well as that of the crowd, that Britt could do him no harm, he demolished with a few well-placed punches the theory that he couldn't hit hard enough to break an eggshell. At the beginning of the second round Britt, in desperation, began wild rushes with swings, but he couldn't connect with his left to the stomach nor could he come back with his right to the jaw. Packey blocked every blow and when Britt swung wild Packey hit him as he passed and in clinches upper-cut Britt fiercely. All through this round, Packey measured Britt with his left and hit him at will with left and right to the face and jaw. Then he would vary this with heavy half-arm jolts to the stomach and upper-cuts that shook Britt.

In the third Packey began forcing the fighting, following Britt around the ring and hitting him viciously with left and right straight jabs to the face and in the clinches, got in uppercuts that brought blood to Britt's nose.

BRITT PUT DOWN.

In the fourth round, after following Britt around the ring and now and then forcing his man to the ropes, McFarland sent in a right swing clean to the jaw that dropped Britt. Jimmy rolled over on the floor and it looked that the contest was ended then and there. Four seconds were counted when Harting rang the bell for end of the round. That gong and nothing else saved Britt from being counted out as he lay stretched with face down.

His nerve and the desperation that was partially born of the wild pleadings of his brother Willis to fight and fight like a demon, was what helped the loser to last through the fifth. But he was fighting on his nerve and with no results. The early part of the sixth told the end of the story. Relentlessly forcing Britt into a position that favored him, McFarland measured with the left and crashed into an unprotected jaw with his right. Britt dropped like a log, partially turned over and just as Welsh repeated the ninth second, all the while holding back McFarland with his right hand, Britt struggled up.

Packey was waiting for him and at short range, sent in another straight right to the same spot. For the second time Britt writhed on the floor and with the grit and determination that has marked many of his other fights, finally stood on a pair of legs that tottered under him. For the third time he was met with a right to the jaw and it was evident that he was out for good.

Four seconds had been tolled off when Father Britt rushed through the ropes and bent over his son. The counting was stopped and the fight awarded to McFarland, who danced a war dance as he rushed toward his corner to receive the congratulations of his friends.

First round—The men did not shake hands. Britt was short twice with left leads, and a third attempt was also futile, McFarland shooting his left twice to the face and right to the body. Britt hooked his left to the nose, and they went in close, fighting carefully. Britt swung hard with left and right, nearly going to the floor from the force of his onslaught. He was in quickly, and shot two lefts to the body. Britt swung left to the head and both mixed it at close range, McFarland putting his right to the head and Britt countering with left to the head. McFarland planted two left swings to the jaw as the bell rang, and went to his corner smiling. A thin stream of blood seeped from his nostrils as he sat down.

The round was about even. The men were fighting all the time and both showed great footwork.

Second round—Britt hooked two lefts on the body, and as they closed in McFarland uppercut with right to the jaw. Britt was wild with his left, and a moment later landed it on the body. As they clinched McFarland got a stiff right in over Britt's heart. McFarland danced about his man, but Britt shot a hard left to the body. McFarland at close range shot two lefts to the face and put in a powerful right punch to the body. He then rocked Britt's head with two left hooks to the jaw, and a moment later sent a straight right to the face, Britt retaliating with a left hook to the body. The bell clanged with Britt looking anxious as he took his chair. McFarland had the advantage.

Third round—McFarland was cheered as he came up, and he jabbed light left to face, but Britt retaliated with two lefts to the body and a right hook to the jaw. Both men looked very determined, and McFarland forced Britt against the ropes, landing a left on the face. Britt brought his left to the body, and McFarland smothered several well-intended lefts. They clinched, and mixed it without result until parted by the referee. Britt jabbed a left to the face, but McFarland drove in a succession of left and right arm swings that made Britt's head rock. He followed his advantage, shooting right and left to the face, Britt backing against the ropes. McFarland landed two powerful punches on the jaw as the bell rang, and Britt went rather wobbly to his corner. McFarland's round.

Fourth round—McFarland shot two lefts straight to the face, Britt countering with left to the body. The men mixed it to a clinch, and Britt shot a hard left to the stomach. They fought head to head, McFarland landing two lefts to the face. Britt fought with poor judgment, his blows missing by a foot. McFarland waded in and sent Britt to the ropes with well-timed short-arm right and left arm jolts to the jaw. Britt backed away, McFarland landing a left to the face and three stiff rights to the jaw. Britt fought back wildly, only to be sent to the floor with a straight right flush to the jaw. To all intents and purposes Britt was clearly out, but the gong rang in the nick of time and he was carried to his corner. The police had hard work to keep Willis Britt out of the ring.

Fifth round—Britt recovered and went at his man wildly, seeking to land a telling blow. McFarland was too clever by far. He got Britt against the ropes and planted right and left hard on the jaw. They worked to the center of the ring and McFarland drove two fearful rights to the jaw and Britt stalled. At close quarters, McFarland drove Britt to his corner, but failed to land.

McFarland going in close, forced Britt against the ropes, landing several straight rights on the jaw. Britt broke ground with McFarland right on top of him. McFarland landed two straight rights on the jaw as the bell rang and again Britt looked like a beaten man as he fell into his seat.

Sixth round—They went in close with Britt swinging with right and left for the jaw. McFarland, however, was too fast and he rocked Britt's head with right and left to the jaw. A right hook sent Britt to the floor for the count of nine. He wobbled to his feet but was immediately sent down again by a similar punch. As he was struggling gamely to his feet, his eyes glassy, the bout was stopped and McFarland was given the decision. It was virtually a knock-out, as Britt was clearly out and unable to gain his feet.

The preliminary between LaGrave and Hardy went the limit, LaGrave being given the decision at the end. LaGrave played with his opponent from start to finish, and always enjoyed a good lead. Hardy's face was badly cut and he was all but out when the final bell terminated the contest.

Among the giants on the diamond this season is Murch, one of the Brooklyn recruits. He stands 6ft., 4in., and weighs 220 pounds.

MATINEE RACES.

brought his horses under the wire in fine condition. Every appearance of his gray head was the signal for enthusiastic applause from the grandstand.

Though there were but two entries in the last race, three heats were required to settle the question of supremacy. Claval and Glennetta are evenly matched and the time for each of the heats was 2:19.

Claval is the more brilliant performer but he has not the steadiness of Glennetta, or at least did not show it yesterday.

In the first heat Claval passed under the wire first, finishing in fine style. His front legs worked like piston rods and, coming down the stretch, he looked more like a magnificent piece of machinery than a creature of flesh and blood. The second heat resulted in a victory for Glennetta, Claval breaking at a critical time.

Although it was nearly 6 o'clock before the second heat was finished it was decided to let the horses run off the tie. Fifteen minutes was granted them in which to rest up and then the starter rang the bell for the final test of speed and endurance.

Both horses came up strong for the start and got away nose and nose. Claval forged ahead slightly at the start but, from start to finish, it was a case of seesaw. Repeatedly Claval broke but each time managed to regain his stride without losing noticeable ground.

On the stretch the horses came abreast. Then it settled down to a test of endurance. Claval made a brilliant effort but the exertion of his repeated breaks told upon him and he was unable to keep up the killing pace. Withal, his performance was a brilliant one and some of his bursts of speed were little short of phenomenal.

During the afternoon three of President Clark's 11-month-old colts trotted an exhibition mile. With the steadiness of old campaigners, they went around the track and gave every promise of developing into fine performers. Though they are too young to show much speed the effects of a long line of aristocratic ancestry was noticeable and they showed a desire to fight the race out to a finish.

President Clark was missed from among the drivers and the absence of any of his horses left a hole. The other entries made up for the lack, however.

The next matinée will be held on May 2. Many of the horses who ran yesterday will be seen again at that time. Several of the finishes were so close that the question of supremacy could not be determined and the owners, with one accord, expressed their desire for another chance at it.

The directors promise that the next matinée shall be every bit as good as that given yesterday.

Though the attendance yesterday was not as large as it has been on some previous occasions, the grandstand was well filled and the crowd was enthusiastic.

REDONDO ATHLETIC CLUB.

Beach Organization Plans to Hold Weekly Boxing Contests After Securing Charter.

The Redondo Athletic Club has applied for a charter, and as soon as it is received, it is the intention of the club to hold weekly boxing contests among its members and to match its own men against outsiders. A contest was arranged last week for a $100 side bet, but because the club had no charter, the city authorities interferred.

A "booster" banquet was held last week in the club rooms, and the membership is steadily increasing. Thirty names are already on the roll, and twenty more are in sight.

The club has fine quarters in the pavilion at Redondo, and the rooms are being equipped with the best gymnasium apparatus. It is the intention of the club to invite fighters to train in their quarters after the equipment is enlarged.

Walter Barton, Jess Moore, Herbert Culler and Guy Baker are showing up well with the bloves, and after the club receives its charter these men will probably be matched with members of the San Pedro Athletic Club. The club also expects to put a baseball team in the field.

The Redondo Water Polo team will in the future play under the name of the Redondo Athletic Club. The club also expects to organize a water basketball team.

In the new bath-house, which is now being planned, the athletic club has made arrangements for special rooms and baths for the exclusive use of its members. Several of the members are expert swimmers, and the club expects to be represented in all future equatic sports in Southern California.

The officers of the club are: J. Steward, president; Fred Callaway, vice-president; Herbert Culler, secretary and treasurer. There is also a board of control.

Twentieth-street Wins.

Twentieth street's baseball team defeated the Polytechnic Juniors, yesterday afternoon at Washington and Alameda streets, by a score of 12 to 3. Southwell and Lederly of Polytechnic, and Wokurka and Murray, of Twentieth, were the best players.

Officers Appointed to Handle Big Interscholastic Track Meet at Claremont—Few Changes Made in Programme to Facilitate Day's Events—Track in Condition.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

CLAREMONT, April 11.—In spite of the report that the Southern California Interscholastic Field Day would be postponed, the contest will be held on April 18, as originally planned.

It was thought that the coming of the fleet on that date would conflict with the local arrangements, but a special train is to leave for the beach directly after the awarding of banners and medals.

Present indications show that the coming contest will be the largest ever held in the history of Southern California athletics, and the gymnasium features to be held in the morning are adding interest to the day.

Entries for the gymnasium stunts close Sunday night, and already Los Angeles High (second team,) Throop, Los Angeles Polytechnic (second team,) Santa Barbara and Long Beach have registered.

The list of officials includes George W. Braden of the Pasadena Y.M.C.A., as referee, while A. Claude Braden of Pomona will act as starter. Capt. Himrod of this year's track team will be clerk of course, and will have as assistants Morris Taylor of Ontario and Floyd Lorbeer of Pomona.

GETTING ON HAWAII.

Honolulu Sportsmen Believe Their Craft Will Win the Trans-Pacific Yacht Race.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

HONOLULU, April 2.—The launching of the trans-Pacific cup racer Hawaii will take place soon. Work on the yacht is practically completed, with the exception of the installation of the masts and spars. Capt. Alec Lyle will command the Hawaii, with Capt. J. Harris as navigator. Capt. Harris is in the employ of a local steamship company, but has been tendered a vacation for a period long enough to permit of his navigating the yacht in the coming ocean race. The crew is composed of volunteers, and applications are coming in from all sides.

Word has been received here that Sir Thomas Lipton will present a cup or trophy for the trans-Pacific yacht race. Sir Thomas has inquired as to the conditions of the race, and is much interested in it.

Entry blanks for the race have been filled in and forwarded to San Pedro. Already considerable wagering on the race has taken place. A well-known local capitalist has bet $1000 on the Hawaii against the field, and has $4000 more which he is willing to bet on the same conditions. Several other large bets have been recorded on the race, and a syndicate of local sugar men is being formed to send backing for [illegible] to the amount of $25,000 to San Francisco, Seattle, Los Angeles and Victoria, to be covered by fanciers of the other yachts entered.

MITCHELL RESIGNS.

Injuries Prevent Cricket Captain from Holding His Position for Two Months.

The second practice game of the season is to be played this afternoon on the Vineyard Station ground. Wickets will be pitched at 2 o'clock.

J. B. Mitchell, last year's captain of the [illegible] team, sustained such injuries to his left side during the recent football games that his physicians have forbidden him to take part in the opening matches of the inter-[illegible]. Following a severe [illegible] bowling for his side at [illegible] last year, two ribs were dislocated.

His loss is severe, as he was recently elected captain of the Los Angeles Cricket Club for the current season, from which he has resigned. His duties will therefore fall upon Pat [illegible], who was elected vice-captain. With proper care Mitchell says he will be able to resume cricket in two months, and will make a special effort to take part in test matches with Santa Monica.

The M.C.C. of England has just completed its tour in the Antipodes by a game with Westralia. The latter [illegible] in its first innings, to which the M.C.C. replied with the fine score of [illegible] for seven wickets, when the [illegible]. The tour included a total of nineteen matches, of which [illegible] were won, [illegible] lost, the latter [illegible]. G. Gunn heads the batting averages with 51.33, while Blythe carries off the bowling honors with an average of 20.12 for forty-eight wickets.

WATER POLO LEAGUE.

Bimini, Venice, and Redondo Would Form Permanant Organization for Contests.

The water polo teams of Bimini Baths, Venice, Redondo Athletic Club, and the Los Angeles Athletic Club are desirous of forming a league, and it is probable that the new organization which will be known as the Southern California Water Polo League, will be organized this week.

Les Henry is endeavoring to effect the formation of the new combine. The four teams which will make up the league are strongly organized and have been playing among themselves for several weeks. The game is enjoying a high degree of popularity at present, the contests being well attended and the enthusiasm running high over the spectacular plays and team work for which the game affords many opportunities.

In the new league it is proposed to have each team play two games with each of its opponents, one contest at home, and the other in the opposing team's tank. This schedule would occupy about two months. The games that have already been played will not be counted in the league. Each team will start with a clean slate.

Bimini and L.A.A.C. have the strongest teams at present, but Venice and the Redondo A. C. have only been organized a short time, and are developing so rapidly that they probably will be in the same class with the local teams before long. Therefore competition in the league should be keen and the contests exciting.

MOTOR BOAT CONTEST.

Three-cornered Race Is to Take Place at Long Beach Over Two-Mile Course.

A motor-boat race between the Daisy, owned by A. C. Parsons; the Water Wagon, owned by Joe Pugh, and the Prima Rosa, belonging to Shurley Ward of Naples, has been arranged to be held at Long Beach on the morning of April 24. A course of about two miles, beginning and ending opposite the Virginia Hotel, is to be laid out for the event.

The boats entered in the race are among the fastest on the Coast, each being capable of twenty-five miles an hour. The Daisy is a sixty-horse-power launch, and is expected to win the race, barring accidents.

The Naples Athletic Club is making arrangements for a swimming, rowing and motor-boat regatta on its course, July 4, to which athletes of San Francisco and San Diego will be invited. The club has been steadily increasing its equipment since last season, and the boats are in excellent condition.

LIGHT TACKLE MEN.

Six-Ounce Rods and Six-Thread Lines Are Proving Popular in Catalina Fishing.

A lively interest has arisen in the six-ounce, six-thread fishing at Catalina, partly owing to the great increase in sport made possible by the refinement in tackle. Bass, barracuda and whitefish, which are brought in all too quickly with even the nine-ounce rods, put up a pretty and diverting fight upon the smaller tools, which are essentially the same as those used by the eastern black bass anglers who have carried their sport to the highest point in angling science.

The only objection to the tackle is in the matter of hooking fish, the rods being hardly powerful enough to seat the large hooks generally used in yellowtail fishing, but this is being offset by using a longer-pointed, finer wire hook of smaller size which takes hold more quickly and does not require so much force to embed in the mouth of the fish. By slacking line to the fish at the moment of striking, and then throwing in the hook with a quick turn of the wrist, it has proved possible to secure a deeper and better hold by the fish swallowing the bait.

Even for heavy spoon-trolling the six-ounce rods hold up in surprising shape and take little or no "set."

The Tuna Club is going ahead with its clubhouse and by the opening of the angling season proper expects to have its own home.

TO SHOOT AT SCHUETZEN.

Southern California Rifles to Begin Elimination Trials for Fleet Matches.

The Southern California Rifles will hold their regular shoot at Scheutzen Park, today, when it is expected the 500-yard target will be in use as well as the 200 The score will be shot at both ranges, after which a team of five or ten men will be picked from the Rifles to shoot a competitive score with the Rangers, who are expected to be out in force.

The scores made today are to be used in selecting the men for the team which will compete with the teams from the fleet.

Lieut. Von Weber has been appointed officer of the day and will have the entire supervision of the shoot.

The Redondo company of the Rifles has made arrangements to shoot a match with a team from one of the battleships which will anchor at Redondo. The following men are among the best shots and will no doubt be members of the team: Weddington, Norman, Lechner, Payne, Hanson, Hamlin, and Klassen. Three others will be selected from the best scores made in the elimination shoot.

The Glendale company of the Rifles will probably be called upon to furnish a team to take part in one of the matches with the navy.

A shoot was held yesterday at Glendale with the good results. The scores were:

At 500 yards—W. C. Beatty, 40; H. N. Tracey, 35.

At 200 yards—H. N. Tracy, 41; C. Addison, 39; T. Andrews, 37; R. E. Beers, 36; W. C. Beatty, 35; Dr. R. E. Chase, 32.

Another shoot will be held today at Glendale.

Soldiers Couldn't Shoot.

Gen. George W. Wingate of New York, popularly known as "the father of rifle practice" in this country, because of his long devotion to it, said recently: "The Spanish War was worth more than it cost, because it pointed out that the United States was living in a fool's paradise. We had all the resources of a rich, intelligent and energetic country. We had all the men and all the money we could use. Yet Gen. Shafter told me that when the Seventy-first New York reported to him at Tampa, to form part of his expedition to Cuba, after being in a camp of instruction for some two months, he was horrified to find that it contained 400 men who had never fired a shot from their rifles. The volunteers who were first sent to the Philippines were equally unskilled, with the exception of those from Tennessee and from a few western sections, who had used the rifle from boyhood."

Ready for Regatta.

Halifax has decided to hold a local trial of four-oared crews and send the winning crew to St. Catherines, Ont., to compete in trials for a place on the Canadian crews for the Olympic regatta. Halifax will also be represented in the single sculls trial at St. Catharines, as St. Mary's will send John O'Neill, and St. Joseph's will send William Duggan. A new boat for the latter has been ordered from London.

LONG BEACH CHAMPIONS.

Excellent Record of High School Girls' Basketball Team for Two Seasons.

Long Beach High School has been the first school to win the championship of the Woman's League of Southern California twice. This was accomplished Wednesday at the Marlborough court, when the girls won from U.S.C. with the score of 13 to 5. A year ago they won the championship game from Los Angeles High School.

This year's team has on it only two of last year's players, while U.S.C. has two of the former Los Angeles High School players. U.S.C. had beaten the Alhambra team, the winners in the County League, and Alhambra had defaulted to Long Beach. Santa Ana had won the championship of the Interscholastic League, but rather than play either Long Beach or U.S.C., drew out of the Woman's League, and would not play for the championship of Southern California. So Long Beach and U.S.C., with a long string of victories behind them, were up for the final match game, which resulted in a decisive battle for the Long Beach team.

The individual playing was excellent, but where the Long Beach girls had the advantage from the start was in their snappy, clock-like team work, in which they had been carefully coached by Miss Gertrude Upton. Miss Mae Lingman, the captain of the team, has often been called the best guard in California. Miss Myrna Taylor, as the other guard, though this is her first year at basketball, has already equaled if not outclassed her two sisters, who were known as the famous Taylor guards on the interscholastic championship team of 1905.

Miss Laura Mrown, as center, for the second time got the best of Miss Shepherd, who played on the L.A.H.S. team last year. Miss Brown and Miss Lingman are seniors. Miss Verna Tinklepaugh, though but a freshman, has by her quickness and strength, won the place of forward on the team. Miss Lily Kingcade, though the smallest member of the team, is such a little whirlwind for speed and accurate goal throwing, that it takes a better guard than she has yet met to keep her and Miss Tinklepaugh from making their excellent machine-like team work end with a goal. Miss Ethel Howe, also a senior, plays standing center in the games where six players are used. Miss Anna Mussetter of last year's championship team is the manager.

The coach of the team is Miss Gertrude Upton, teacher of mathematics in the Long Beach High School. Miss Upton played on the University of Colorado basketball team three years.

NEW YORK—PARIS RACE

BULLETIN

$1,000.00 REWARD

All We Ask Is a Square Deal and No Favors

While many competitors are fair and realize our victory benefits the whole American industry, certain knockers, to boost their sales and injure ours, have made false and malicious statements that the Thomas Flyer was not a stock car, that cylinders were changed, and that the car was necessarily rebuilt during the race. We hereby notify them that their statements are false and malicious and must cease, or they will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law.

We make the following statement in order that our friends and the public may know the truth, and we offer $1,000.00 reward for proof to the contrary.

WE HEREBY CERTIFY that the Thomas Flyer in the New York-to-Paris race, IS ABSOLUTELY AN ORDINARY STOCK CAR, selected only six days before the race, and was not especially prepared or tested. Furthermore, it is identical in motor, clutch, driving shaft, radiator, carburettor, transmission gears, frame, wheels, bearings, and in all other essential features of its mechanism with hundreds of Thomas cars now in use by Thomas owners.

WE ALSO CERTIFY that the Thomas Flyer ran from New York to Cheyenne, a distance of 2,028 miles, almost entirely over roads made practically impassable by snow and mud, climbing mountains, plunging through ruts and fording streams, without overheating once; without repair or replacements of cylinders, spark plugs, transmission, radiator, bearings, clutch, carburettor or other mechanical parts—except at Buffalo, not having time to do so before shipment to New York, a regular stock axle, such as Thomas owners have been using for two years at Tonopah and Goldfield, was substituted for the dropped type—which, however, was in perfect condition. In fact, the only breakage was two chain links, easily replaced, and a sprocket housing.

Detailed reports beyond, have not been received, but telegraphic reports state repairs were insignificant and that the car arrived in San Francisco in splendid condition, ready to proceed on the long journey, a feat unparalleled in the history of automobiles—the longest and severest endurance contest in the history of the world, and one that makes the Glidden Tour on well traveled roads, between large cities, pale into insignificance by comparison. The Thomas was only entered because we believed it to be a reflection on the American industry to have five foreign cars carry five foreign flags across the American continent without an American car contesting for American supremacy.

Los Angeles and Fresno by the long route, 303 miles over terrible washed out mountain roads in 14¼ hours on 22 gallons gasoline. HOPES CENTERED ON WATLINGTON.

LOS ANGELES SWIMMER MAY GO TO OLYMPIC GAMES.

Southerners Are Strongest in Distance Races While San Francisco Men Are Fast in Dashes—Four Track Athletes Are to Accompany the Water Athletes.

Entry blanks will be issued by Les Henry, tomorrow, for the swimming try-outs to be held at Bimini Baths, April 23, 24 and 25, to select two men to represent Southern California in the Olympic Club try-outs in San Francisco, May 9, where a western team of three swimmers will be picked to compete in the London Olympic games in July.

Ben Watlington of the Los Angeles Athletic Club and Wilbur Kyle of San Diego appear to have the best chances to win first honors in the local try-outs, but Elt Brown, "Kenny" Kellogg of Occidental College, and Holboro are first class men and will be important factors in the preliminaries. Kyle is not in good favor at present among the local promoters of swimming on account of his alleged unsportsmanlike conduct after his defeat by Watlington a few weeks ago, and the San Diegan has asserted that he will never compete in Los Angeles again, but it is believed that he will fall into line and enter the try-outs for the Olympic games.

The events in the local try-outs will be the 50, 100, 220, 440 and 880-yard races. In the shorter distances, the southerners probably will not have much chance to win in the north, as Leary and Bromley of the Olympic Club are conceded to be faster short distance men than any the south is able to produce. However, a 1500-meter race will be held in the San Francisco trials, and the supporters of Watlington believe that if he is successful in the local try-outs he can swim the long race in San Francisco and make a place on the London team.

The local try-outs will be held under the auspices of the Southern California Swimming Association. Ribbons will be awarded to the winners in the various events.

The London team that will be selected in San Francisco will compete under the name of the A.A.U. There will be two similar teams selected in Chicago and New York, and while the three teams will compete for the Amateur Athletic Association, they will enter the English games as separate organizations.

Four track athletes will accompany each set of swimmers. The western men will be selected at a try-out at Stanford on May 9, the same date as the swimming try-outs in San Francisco.

National Rifle Club.

WASHINGTON, April 5.—The headquarters of the National Rifle Association of America have been removed to Washington, where they will remain permanently hereafter. The relations between the War Department, National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice, and the National Rifle Association, are such that coöperation is essential. While the headquarters will be under the direct charge of Lieut. Albert S. Jones, who has so long been secretary of the association, Gen. James A. Drain, president of the association, will also remove to Washington.

BASS, POMPANO AND HERRING AT SANTA MONICA.

Angling Party Drives in Auto to Malibu Ranch for Bass—Few Black Perch Hooked at Various Points. Pelicans Drive Schools of Herring to the Piers.

SANTA MONICA, April 11.—Bass were biting freely during the latter part of the week, and one of the attractive fishing grounds is in the kelp beds off the rocky points of the Malibu ranch, about twenty miles up the Coast.

A party left here Thursday morning on a pleasure jaunt of a few days, going by automobile and being fully provisioned to remain as long as the sport proved exciting and the members of the party had appetites for barbecued fish. Among the excursionists were W. E. Devore, H. R. Gage, M. R. Eager, G. D. Snyder, Bert Carter, Charles Anderson, A. B. Davidson, George Peasegood and Robert Bungay.

The pompano began a lively run all along the bay Thursday. They made their appearance all of a sudden at about 11 o'clock, when everybody who had the right kind of hooks and shark bait in the water began to make good hauls. At Venice no less than 1000 fish were caught before the school was dismissed and migrated to deeper water.

Similar good luck attended the fishermen who cast their lines at Pier avenue, North Beach and Playa del Rey. The same programme was repeated Friday, and for a few hours the sport was lively. At the same time a number of black perch were hooked. Fish of this variety are not numerous in these waters, but during the past few days at least 100 pounds of that variety have been taken.

The herring season opened in real earnest at all of the pleasure piers along this bay Thursday. Before that time there had been no run of these delectable members of the finny tribe, but along toward noon of that day millions of the little fellows seemed to swarm everywhere. They were not particular as to whose fishing tackle they attached themselves, and the result was that all who stayed with the game for even a few minutes were well rewarded. Men were as successful as the women in landing fine specimens, and the children had just as much luck as the grown-ups.

The fish seemed to be running close to the shore in frantic endeavor to escape their archenemy, the pelicans. These birds were very much in evidence and had been for several hours before the schools sought shelter beside the piers. Their presence and unwonted activity had indicated to the weather-worn angler that something was going on off shore, but the sudden coming of the myriad of fish to the shallow waters was surprising to even the best posted students of fish lore.

Large Organization.

The annual report of the National Rifle Association shows the organization to be in a very flourishing condition. There are affiliated with the association 21 State rifle associations, 56 regiments, 25 separate military organizations, 60 civilian (government) rifle clubs, 6 college and university clubs, and 15 schoolboy rifle clubs, a total of 166 organizations.

He was so poor and suffered so much from the heavy hand of fate that he felt closely allied to the lowest thing in nature that "felt the pelting of the pitiless storm" rather than with creatures whose lives were blessed with comfort.

And this gifted man set by his fellows to gauge whisky barrels God had sent among men to sing "Highland Mary," "The Brigs of Ayr," "The Banks and Braes o' Bonnie Doon," "A Man's a Man for a' That" and "The Cotter's Saturday Night."

"My ways are not as your ways," said the Lord to erring Israel.

Jean Paul Friedrich Richter says: "I would not for much that I had been born rich." His poverty was so great that he had, then, much to be thankful for. His own account is this: "The prisoner's allowance is bread and water. I often had only the water." His philosophy was that "the canary bird sings sweetest the longer it has been trained in a darkened cage." Richter sang sweetly enough, and perhaps his philosophy is right. It may all have come from his only dwelling at times having been a dog kennel in a garden.

So one might go on indefinitely. Christian Gottlob Heine says: "It was in the extremest penury that I was born and brought up. The earliest company of my childhood was Want. And my first impressions came from the tears of my mother who had not bread for her children."

Let that suffice. Why tell of Benjamin Franklin, with his one roll of bread, walking the streets of Philadelphia looking for a job as a journeyman printer before this roll should have undergone the process of digestion and there would be no other roll to fill the vacuum, which in such case is indisputably abhorrent to nature? And do we not all know the story of Abraham Lincoln lying prone on his stomach after a hard day's work splitting rails to fill his mind with legends of past days and to cross Euclid's "Pons Asinorum" by the lurid light of a big log on the paternal hearth?

Fate availed nothing in the conflict it engaged in with these heroic souls. In spite of the heavy weights attached to their limbs and body they read the motto "Excelsior" on the flag amid the ice and snow on Alpine heights of usefulness, they struggled on, scaled the glacier, defied the avalanche and grasped the prize.

How? Because there was something more than human in them. When the prophet would tell Israel of the Messiah he said: "His name shall be called Immanuel." "This being interpreted" is "God with us," or God in us. The Messiah was sent to save the lost. He could not do it "unless God were with Him." No more can any savior of an age, a generation, or a nation. Johnson was sent to save England from cant. Burns was sent to save poetic art from cast-iron, yard-stick paralysis. Richter and Heine were sent to save Germany from bondage to gross materialism, and to shed the heavenly rays of the imagination over the learning of the people. Franklin came as one of the men whose allotted task was to save the New World from the besotted prejudices of the Old. And Lincoln was to break the shackles from the wrists of millions enslaved by white men because it had pleased God to make them black men.

That is an Old World prejudice? No, it is not. No wholly sane man now denies that God is with us in every crisis of history and that He is in every messiah whom He sends into the world to save a people, an age, a cause, an art, a system of government or of philosophy, from a besetting sin. On Horeb the flame of divine inspiration burned with mild, harmless, enlightening effulgence before the astonished eyes of Moses sent to lead Israel out of the "house of bondage." On Sinai this benignant flame set the whole mountain afire, yet destroyed no blade even of the dry grass. That flame was kindled when in Eden God breathed eternal life into the mere physical frame of Adam, and "he became a living soul." It has been a flame that consumes not, but vivifies men even as the rays of the sun do the physical life of the world through all the ages. It may blaze in some poor brush-heap of a man, a Johnson or a Burns, a Heine or a Richter, but it will never consume even the smallest tendril of their nature, but guide like a pillar of fire their steps to the work they are sent to do. Woe to the man who wanders from the burning bush, who runs away from the illuminated Sinai, or walks not in the path of the pillar of fire!

All Old Testament myths? Not a bit of it. It is not a mere Hebrew idea, nor a mere Christian idea. It is a human idea and is found among all men. It is as firmly imbedded in the Greek tongue as in the Hebrew and the English takes it from both. We borrow more from the Greek than from the Hebrew. For Immanuel is only a proper name, while enthusiasm is a word of common use.

Stop one moment and think. Was it not enthusiasm which carried Johnson through all the difficulties of his path and enabled him to grasp the flag on the pinnacle of fame emblazoned with the legend "Excelsior?" What but enthusiasm nerved Burns to sing those tones as crystal clear as the lark's by the banks of Bonnie Doon? Were not Richter and Heine enthusiasts to the tips of their fingers? What but enthusiasm buoyed up the sad heart of Lincoln and what is enthusiasm but an "indwelling God" in the heart of man?

PRACTICAL ETHICS.

JOY OF SPRING.

The butterflies seek the sweet flowers,
  Their ravishing beauty to kiss;
The birds in melodious chorus
  Pour forth their newly-found bliss.

The lover trips light o'er the pathway,
  That leads to the heart he loves best,
The children like lambkins gay gamboling,
  Joy-spirited frolic with zest.

The stars, too, all roguish a-twinkle,
  Made merry by witchery of spring!
And Sol's golden glances urge rapturous
  All life to rejoice and sing!

With every recurring springtime, if we but listen lovingly, intently, to the message of flowers and insects, to the sweet-toned harbingers of fresh young days pulsing with new life, crowned with new-born beauty, bearing tidings of hope and promising re-beginnings—ah, then surely, we too must find gladness in our hearts afresh, to have the joy of participating in the festal changes of a world so wonderful, in a realm palpitating with appealing loveliness and a stirring, fascinating interest on every side.

Why then so much of fierce, distorting wrangle, and cruel, paltry barter? So much of harshness and coarse contending, when more of purity, amity, and serenity might be ours, when the atmosphere surrounding human souls might well be free from nauseous, malodorous breath, and allied to lily bells and richly-perfumed hyacinths, with touch of nature's charm lend poetry and sublimity to even the humblest lives?

Oh, that man could be routed out of the grovelling depths of the joy-destroying commercial underworld. That he could be lifted up by the banner days of buoyant springtime, to the heights of freedom found on Nature's plains of wide expanse, on snow-crystalled mountain peaks, by jewel-crested ocean wave, and in flower-decked fields of vivid, varied hue. Ah, flowers, flowers, the beautiful "thoughts of God," or dreams of nature realized in the matchless mood of beauty-bearing spring.

We, too, were made for rejuvenescence and for joy for the fulfillment of love and beauty in our estate, could we but break the age-long shackles by mankind self-imposed and be with and of Nature more, nearer friend to flowers and trees, in closer union and sympathy to all that lives and moves and breathes and weaves a mighty history for our reading from earthworm, ant, and butterfly, to oriole, robin, wren and mocking-bird. That we are to live in and with Nature more, this is the message of spring's awakening—that we are to live more simply, more honestly, more naturally, more freely! For this, spring calls us back to forsaken fields of glory from which we flee in moil and strife to gather—what? Much of dross and a little gold, in places where Nature has been driven out and man sophisticated to verge of caricature of his high, true being, of his real, noble self, his spiritual light overshadowed by the dimming dust of mill and market place. Man, man, maker—remaker of beauty, of youth, remember thy inheritance, thy potency, as receiver, evoker, and distiller of health and joy from the manifold sources of grandeur and goodness hidden in the heart of every returning springtime.

Man, as the incarnation of supreme intelligence on earth, must not forget the long line of relationships below, above, and beside him; nor the need of contact with all for enlargement, for self-purification, for reanimation and sanctification of his spirit through right communion with all created life in wood and stream, in earth and air. For thus comes the greater fullness and abundance of being which means to be more man, more woman; to have more heart, more soul; more faith in goodness and in truth, more trust in the perennial bloom of Hope, and to live simply, joyously like happy children in the bonny days of spring.

Thus linked by intelligent sympathy to the graceful motion of daintily flitting butterfly; rejoicing with keenly-increasing delight in the heart-gladdening gifts of flowers springing wild and free, or growing in passionate profusion in cultured garden beds, responsive let us turn to the imploring love tunes of silver-throated warblers, while likewise tenderly awake to the bidding of human love—to the calls of love humane—cherishing the lover's care and watchfulness of hearts well beloved, while making ever larger room for the embrace of all lovable things in the wide, wide, universe.

Open then, the eye, the ear, the heart, the soul, O man, to the influx of this enlivening, revivifying stream of beauty, and of balm so richly flowing from the treasure-laden spirit of glowing spring.

FRIENDSHIP.

[From the French of De Loulay.]

Ev'rything on earth that grows,
  Of the light its portion takes,
Each thorn hath her lovely rose,
  From her sleep the night awakes.

God the meadows fair endowed,
  For the fields created wheat;
Eagles gave unto the cloud,
  Placed, for nests, a thorned retreat.

Trees, in spring, put forth in leaf,
  Each small bee doth gather sweets;
All waves murmur, sob their grief,
  Each lone tomb the glad sky greets.

So, here where all incline them,
  Bending to the better part,
Blowing flowers are for the stem,
  Friends, true friends, are for one's heart.

The Uganda Protectorate. By Frank G. Carpenter.

ON THE EQUATOR.

HOW JOHN BULL GOVERNS FOUR MILLION AFRICAN NATIVES.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ENTEBBE.—Take a seat with me on the mud veranda of the mud hotel at Entebbe and look out over Lake Victoria, while I tell you something of this Uganda protectorate which the British have recently added to their share of the white man's burden. You had better keep your hats on. There are lizards and scorpions in the thatched roof overhead, and some may fall down upon us as we talk. I advise you, also, to tie your shoes tight and by no means to rest your bare feet on the floor. It is true it is plastered with cow dung, and that ought to keep out the ants and the jiggers. The latter insects, however, have a way of crawling in under one's toe nails and laying little sacks of eggs in the skin, which, if they hatch, may cause us the loss of our toes. I have had ten jiggers taken out of my feet since I came into Uganda, and, now, Epifras, my native servant, goes over my toes every morning.

My hotel at Entebbe

Residents of Entebbe.

Do you see that black band moving across the path down there in front? It is made up of ants which will attack you if you come near it. They are the famous warrior ants, whose bite feels like red-hot pinchers and whose heads have to be torn from their bodies before they will let go. They are far more dangerous than that baby lion, which is tied with a clothesline about his neck to a tree near by. He is only about as big as a Scotch collie and is not old enough to know how strong he is. He was brought in last night by a traveler from Lake Tanganyika who also owns the two gray parrots with red tails, which, perched in the tree above it, are alternately whistling and scolding.

On the Equator.

Before we begin our talk let us look around and try to realize where we are. This mud hotel is called the Equatorial. It is situated right on the equator, and by spreading out our legs we could almost straddle the same. Nevertheless, we are about 4000 feet above the sea, and the cool breezes from Victoria Lake make the air as delightful as Virginia in June. There are oranges and lemons growing out there in the garden, great beds of feathery papyrus are waving to and fro on the shores and we can see tall palms with their whispering leaves everywhere.

We are right on the edge of Victoria Nyanza, about as far inland as the western shores of Lake Erie are in from New York and right in the heart of the African continent. That lake was not known to the world until about fifty years ago, and today a large part of the lands surrounding it are unexplored. The equator goes right through the lake, and it is only about sixty miles south of it that the German possessions begin. This part of Lake Victoria belongs to Great Britain, and all the vast territory extending from here to the Mediterranean, including Uganda, the Soudan and Egypt, is practically under the control of John Bull. He has every foot of land on each side the Nile which begins its course by flowing out of Lake Victoria at Ripon Falls, not far from here, and winds its way for 3900 miles, before it empties into the Mediterranean Sea. As the crow flies the distance is farther than from Philadelphia to the Great Salt Lake; and the country contains some of the richest lands upon earth. Every one knows of the wealth of Egypt, which has never been so rich as since the British took hold. The Soudan has vast territories equally fertile; and Uganda, away down here at the Nile's source among the highest of the African mountains, is in some respects richer than all.

The Uganda Protectorate.

Indeed, the English officials tell me that Uganda is the cream of the African continent. I have now been traveling some weeks through it, and I believe they are right. There is no other place where so many valuable crops can be grown. In some of the provinces the natives raise grain with practically no cultivation, in others coffee grows wild, and everywhere there are bananas and other tropical fruits. In another letter I shall write of the great possibilities in cotton, which is already being raised here and there; and shall treat of the stock growing prospects which promise to make Uganda the great meat basket of England.

The land is one of great forests as well as of rich plains covered with grass. It is a land of rubber, and it has vast resources in fibers which may be used for the making of paper, rope and cloth. I have already spoken of the bark blankets which are used by a million or more of the natives as dresses; but I have said nothing of the raphia fiber which is brought here to Entebbe for shipment to England, where it brings as high as $150 a ton. This country can raise hemp as good as that produced in the Philippines, and China grass and sisal are said to thrive equally well.

The Uganda protectorate is rich in minerals. Hematite ore is found almost everywhere, copper has been discovered in the central province and gold is said to exist in some places. There are also deposits of white china clay of great value in certain localities, and the natives themselves make pottery from it.

Uganda as the Sun Sees It.

But suppose we take a look at Uganda as the sun sees it. The country lies on the roof of the African continent. Where it borders Lake Victoria it is about as high in the air as the highest of the Alleghenies, and the crater of Mount Elgon which rises in the central province a little north of that lake kisses the sky 100 feet higher than the top of Pike's Peak. Away off to the east are Mounts Kilimanjaro and Kenia, and at the west are the mighty highlands of Ruwenzori, which vie with those of Kilimanjaro itself. The country is almost surrounded by water. On the south is Lake Victoria, on the west are Albert Edward and Albert Nyanza joined by the Semliki, and farther down is the Nile. On the east is Lake Rudolf, an enormous body of water, and throughout the whole country are beautiful little lakes, ponds, rivers and creeks.

The general nature of the country is rolling. It has many hills and hollows and undulating plains, with swamps in the valleys. The hills are covered with grass and they roll over one another as far as the eye can see. The swamps are often spotted with woods, and one is never out of sight of the papyrus, the tall tassel-like grass of which the Egyptians made paper.

As to the extent of the protectorate, it contains altogether more land than New England added to New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland and Virginia. It has a bigger population than New England and bigger than that of any State of our Union, with the exception of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio or Illinois. The people all told number between 4,000,000 and 5,000,000, and of these considerably over 1,000,000 are Christians. These are the semi-civilized Baganda, in whose country I now am.

The British have divided up this territory into five provinces. Originally they made six, but, within the last year or so, they have taken off the lands lying on of the lake and given them to British East Africa. The province contains the naked Kavirondo, of whom I have already written. It is traversed by the Uganda Rail-way, which terminates on the lake at Port Florence. The five provinces of Uganda consist of the kingdom of Uganda, the central province to the east of it, the western province laying between and Lakes Albert Edward and Albert, and the Rudolf and Nile provinces at the north.

The central province, which is almost directly north of Victoria Nyanza, is fertile to an extreme. It borders on the Kavirondo country, and many of its people go naked. It is densely populated, and its people raise cattle, sheep and goats. They also do considerable farming. One of the most characteristic features of this province is Mount Elgon, which ranks as one of the high mountains of the continent. It is an enormous volcano, whose lower slopes are covered with forests and on whose top are frequent snowstorms, although it is almost on the equator.

Among the curious features of this mountain are its caves, which have been inhabited by the natives for ages. They use them as homes, and as stables for their cattle, sheep and goats. The cattle caves are never cleaned, and the manure of ages beds their floors. They swarm with fleas and the stench is terrible. Roads are now being cut through the central province by the native chiefs, and one would have no difficulty in passing through it.

As to the Uganda province, it is covered with roads made long ago by the natives, and one can go over a great part of it on a bicycle. Many of the English officials here own wheels, and they are gradually coming into use among the richest of the natives.

Western Uganda.

The poorest part of the Uganda protectorate is the north. The country fades out into the desert north from Lake Rudolf, and the Nile province partakes somewhat of the nature of the Soudan. As to the western province, that is high and healthy. It is a broken land, a great part of it a mile above the sea, rising in some places to high mountains. The country is well watered, and a large part of it is covered with a tropical forest filled with monkeys. The people are well developed black negroes who devote themselves largely to stock raising. They have cattle with horns so long that they seem to be leading the beasts. In this region there are pygmies just like those which Stanley describes as living in the forests of the Congo.

These western natives are not so advanced as those of Uganda proper. Many of them go naked, and others are clad only in aprons of bark cloth tied by strings around their waists. These natives ornament their bodies with scars. I have seen some who have their and stomachs cut in such patterns that they somewhat resemble Persian shawls. Many of them file their teeth and altogether they are low in the scale of African civilization.

The Capital of Uganda.

I wish we could send Uncle Sam to Entebbe and show him how John Bull handles these millions of savages. This country has more than half as many people as the Philippines, and some of them have for ages been noted for their war-like characters. John Bull takes care of them all with a few score of officials and about 2500 soldiers. His soldiers are almost all native blacks, and most of them have been recruited from the country itself. There are a few East Indians sikhs, but the army is mainly made up of what is known as the King's African Rifles, who are commanded by British generals, colonels and captains. This force consists of 1500 blacks, and, in addition, there are 1000 native constables. It seems a small army to control 4,000,000 people.

Nevertheless, the country is kept in perfect order, and law courts have been established in all the provinces. There is a Supreme Court to which appeals may be made. The people pay their taxes. In some of the provinces they are establishing schools, and altogether they are far better off than they have ever been before.

Entebbe.

This town of Entebbe is the capital of Uganda. It has the greater part of the white population, which consists all told of just 400 souls, embracing eighty-three women. The men are chiefly British officials. They are well educated young fellows, fond of sport and devoted to tennis and golf, which they play almost every day. The women are, as a rule, fine-looking English girls, the wives and daughters of these officials. They dress as well as our girls at home, and if one could lift up this white colony and drop it down in any city of England or the United States the people would not be out of place.

And how do these people live?

Well, here at the capital they are better off than in many parts of the interior. They have houses of sun-dried brick, roofed with galvanized iron. Very few of the houses are of more than one story, but they have wide verandas and the rooms are spread out over the ground. Many of them are surrounded by beautiful gardens, filled with all sorts of tropical plants and trees. The houses are built far apart along wide roads of the red dirt of Uganda. Some of the roads are lined with flowering trees, the most common being the Cape lily, which is now bearing a great mass of blue flowers. Indeed, there are so many flowers and plants that one seems to be going through a botanical garden as he walks along the streets.

The business part of the capital is given up to the East Indians. There are a half-dozen or more galvanized iron stores filled with goods to sell to the natives. The brown-skinned merchants wear little yellow skull caps, calico pantaloons and long coats, buttoned high up to the neck. They have yellowish-brown faces, dark eyes and curly black hair.

The government buildings are scattered here and there over the hills. They are usually roofed with galvanized iron. They have brick walls and wide porches. There are no native huts in the town proper, and as a rule very few buildings thatched with straw. The police barracks form one of the exceptions. These lie on the western edge of Entebbe, and they consist of rude Nubia huts with cone-shaped roofs.

A Central African Hotel.

The hotel here is about the only one in Central Africa. In most other places one has to have his own tents or to stop with the officials. I am usually able to get in with an official, and this was the case at Kampala, the capital. This new hotel is an oddity. It is made of mud and grass. The main building is, I judge, about [illegible] square and it measures about twenty-five feet to the top of the thatched roof. Its walls are only [illegible] high, but the roof does not begin for several [illegible] them, a space of a yard perhaps being left between the walls and the rafters. This main [illegible] hotel contains a dining-room, a parlor and [illegible]oom, with kitchens off at the side.

The bedrooms are bungalow-like sheds made of mud and thatched with straw. They are some distance away from the hotel itself and run around the walls of the compound. Each bedroom opens out upon a little porch [illegible] floored with mud and coated over with cow [illegible] smoothed down. The bedrooms are floored the same way, but each has a rush mat made of papyrus [illegible] from Lake Victoria running across it. The beds themselves consist of a rude framework of wood, to which are woven strips of antelope skins. Upon these matting is laid, and then a thin mattress of Uganda [illegible]. Every bed has its mosquito netting. This region is very malarious, and no one would think of sleeping here without such protection. As for the food of the hotel, it is fairly good for Central Africa, although it would be poor anywhere else. The chief trouble is the cooking, which is universally bad. As to variety, we had at our last dinner a soup, some fish, fried brains, [illegible], potatoes and green peas. Our dessert began with a slice of papaia, a delicious melon-like fruit which grows on a tree here, and ended with coffee. The hotel rate is [illegible] a day, including rooms and board.

Ruled Through the Chiefs.

During my stay here I have had some talks with officials as to how they handled Uganda. They tell me that they rule as far as possible through the natives. Each [illegible] locality has had its own system of government and its own laws as far as possible, and the machinery is adapted to these systems. In Uganda proper the work is done through the native council and the little king or the officers appointed to represent him. The council or [illegible] consists of twenty chiefs, each of which has his own county or district with his own court. These counties are subdivided and given over to subordinate chiefs and there is perhaps a chief to each village of any size. The chiefs receive money from the British government, and in return they collect the taxes and turn them into the treasury. The taxes are assessed at so much to each hut, the amount being usually about $1 per year. This seems low, but when it is remembered that it requires about a month of good hard work to make a dollar out here in Uganda, it will be seen that it is pretty high after all.

I have met many of the Baganda chiefs during my stay. They are very intelligent. Not a few are able to read, having learned to do so in the mission schools. One has written a book, and all are more than ordinarily bright. Not a few of them are now keeping their court proceedings in typewriting, the native language having been adapted to the Roman letters so that the ordinary machine can be used.

Forty-seven Years Ago.

THE FIRST BATTLE OF THE CIVIL WAR RECALLED.

By a Special Contributor.

FORTY-SEVEN years ago today the first gun, the prelude to the great war drama, the curtain of which fell four years afterward on the dead bodies of over a million of the actors and a loss of billions of dollars.

The echo of the last stroke of four from the historic chimes of St. Michael's had scarcely died away, when a group of soldiers gathered around a mortar in Fort Johnson, Charleston Harbor, and waited, watch in hand, for the moment when the signal should sound the tocsin of civil war and the deathknell of eighty years of peace. A half-hour later, obedient to the orders from Gen. Beauregard, followed a flash of light, the thunder of a gun, and an eleven-inch shell traced its pathway toward Fort Sumter with a long, thin line of fire. Another quickly succeeded, and the chorus of battle began. The first of these shells was fired by Capt. George S. James, the second by Lieut. Hampton Gibbes.

No pen, tongue, or canvas can accurately portray the scenes of that April morning in the city of Charleston, when its inhabitants were startled from their slumbers by the first guns. Lights flashed, as if by magic, from the windows of every house, and in the twinkling of an eye an agitated mass of people was rushing toward the waterfronts of the city. Grave citizens, usually distinguished by their dignity, hurried along the streets, dressing while they ran and madly shouting hurrahs. There were men without coats, women without hats, and children in their night gowns, all hastening to the same points of view.

The fashionable promenade known as "The Battery" presented a conglomeration of persons in dishabille, who, at any other time would not have thought of violating the social conventionalities of attire. And there, with pale faces and eyes sharpened by the strange fascination of the scene, the multitude remained hour after hour, peeping into the darkness and watching the progress of the fight by the flashing of the guns.

In a few minutes all the batteries that environed Fort Sumter had opened fire, or to use the words of Gen. Ripley, the commanding officer on one of the islands, "rung their breakfast bell for Maj. Anderson," but it was two hours before the latter responded to the call.

Hardly, however, had objects of the low coast become well defined among the shadows of the morning, when, as if wrathful from enforced delay, there suddenly poured from the parapet and casements of Fort Sumter a storm of iron hail. The murmur instantly ran through the city: "Fort Sumter has opened fire." The battle now raged with fury, and the fiery messengers from both sides followed one another with spiteful haste. Short, sharp spurts of flame told of bursting shells in and around the beleaguered fortress over which floated the only flag of the Stars and Stripes to be found on the soil of South Carolina, while splashes of spray or clouds of crumbled brick marked the ugly force of round shot striking its face.

Dispatches were received hourly by Beauregard, the commander-in-chief, and communicated to the people by bulletins. At first the proud Carolinians were inclined to rebel at the authority of a strange commander, but there was something in the well-defined physiognomy, the dark eye, firm lip and massive chin of the great Creole that told of hidden power and inspired confidence, and it was not long before the hero of Contreras and Churubusco was enthroned in the hearts of the people.

A curious blending of humanity was to be observed among those who manned the Confederate fortifications. In their shirt sleeves, with heads bare and features smoke-begrimed, working heavy guns, were the gentlemen whom you met only a few days before at the Charleston Club, elegant types of wealth and leisure. Here was a clergyman, and some of his deacons, there a bank president and some of his clerks, and yonder a group of planters who could give you more points on the age and quality of fine wines than on military tactics. Many of these gentlemen never had heard a shotted gun before that day, and yet, with a mixture of chivalry and recklessness, would spring to the crest of the earthworks after each fire to watch the effect of their aim and then cheer for Maj. Anderson as his answering missiles came shrieking back. The aggregated wealth of the companies might have been counted by millions, and the old historic names of the State answered to the roll-call "here."

Col. Thomas Sumter, the grandson of "the game cock of the revolution," after whom the fort was named in 1833, was a private in the Palmetto Guards. The venerable Edmund Ruffin of Virginia, 74 years of age, was a private, and was allowed to fire the first shot against Fort Sumter from what is known as the iron battery.

Fires were kept blazing in Charleston Harbor during the night for the purpose of detecting the launches of the distant fleet, if an attempt should be made to relieve the garrison.

The second day was ushered in clear and bright, and the air was laden with the perfume of early spring flowers. The flags of both of the combatants were flying with stately defiance, and as the first sunbeams touched their folds, the thundering intonations of the heavy artillery told the listening multitude of the renewed strife.

The men of the garrison of Fort Sumter were on their last rations. Their breakfast that morning consisted of pork and rice, the last of the rice being served at that meal.

From Fort Moultrie Gen. Ripley was throwing hot shot, and about eight a tall, steadily-ascending column of smoke was observable on the southern portion of Sumter. First, it was thin and pale, but every moment it grew darker until, shooting out from the base of the black pillar, great yellow tongues of flames could be seen lapping the tops of the barracks and officers' quarters. The first impression was that Maj. Anderson was signaling the fleet, consisting of eight war vessels and 1380 men, which had been sent to the rescue, but had remained idly at anchor and made no sign of help.

At 10 o'clock the fire reached a magazine of shells and grenades, and a terrific explosion ensued that caused many a heart to stand still, for the men in that beleaguered and burning fort had many friends in Charleston who were watching it with the keenest interest. When the explosion occurred, a young girl who was present with a party of her schoolmates was seen to throw her arms wildly in the air and exclaim: "O God! my brother." She was the sister of Lieut. Jeff C. Davis, one of Maj. Anderson's officers, who afterward became a union general.

During all this trying period, while the fort was in flames and the air like a blast from the crater, Maj. Anderson continued to send occasional shots to the different batteries around him, as if determined to show to the world that he "died game." At every flash from the muzzles of his guns the Confederates would send up cheer on cheer for the gallant defender of the fort.

Three times the flag was lowered as a signal of distress to the Federal fleet in the offing, but no response followed, and it was left to Beauregard to tender the merciless assistance for which a call had been made. Capt. Stephen D. Lee, Col. W. Porcer Miles and Roger A. Pryor were dispatched upon this errand.

At 1 o'clock a shot from Sullivan's Island severed the flagstaff and brought down the Stars and Stripes. They were replaced, however, in about fifteen minutes by Private Hart of New York under circumstances of great daring.

At the reappearance of the flag, the boat with the aides of Beauregard who had been sent to offer assistance turned back, but meanwhile ex-Senator Wigfall of Texas, a voluntary aid of Beauregard, accompanied by Private Courdin, of the Palmetto Guard, pushed off from Morris Island in a small boat, and, showing a white handkerchief on the point of his sword, proceeded to Fort Sumter. Being conducted to Maj. Anderson he complimented that officer on his gallant defence, and stated that to continue the conflict under the circumstances would be to unnecessarily risk the lives of the men under his command without commensurate results. Col. Wigfall said that the troops would cease firing as soon as the flag was lowered, and he offered the terms of surrender already submitted by Beauregard. "Then," said Maj. Anderson, "I must surrender; I have no other resource; we are all in flames, and my men will shortly suffocate." Accordingly, at 5 minutes past 1, on the 13th of April, the Stars and Stripes were lowered, firing ceased, and Fort Sumter virtually passed into the possession of the southern Confederacy. The appearance of the fort defies description; at every turn the eye rested upon ruin. Fort Moultrie also bore evidence of the careful attention paid to it by the Federal artillerists. Notwithstanding all this exchange of iron compliments, not a single life was lost. The evacuation of Fort Sumter took place about noon Sunday, the 14th, and the garrison took its departure on the steamship Isabel. Dressed in full uniform and wearing their sidearms, the soldiers marched out to the tune of "Yankee Doodle."

As the steamer moved off, cheer after cheer rent the air. Strict churchmen forgot their afternoon services and shouted with the noisiest of the worldlings; old men and maidens, young men and children, hurrahed until hoarse; people shook hands who had never before exchanged civilities, and fine wines that had been kept for ages were drunk at clubs and dinners.

So ended the first and only bloodless battle of the great Civil War.

Left-handedness.

THIS SUBJECT BEING STUDIED BY GOVERNMENT LABORATORY.

By a Special Contributor.

LEFT-HANDEDNESS is being investigated by the Department of Anthropology, United States National Museum. Lombroso classes this peculiarity among the characteristics which may brand us as degenerates. Other students of the subject believe that right-handedness is merely the result of fashion or imitation; that primitive man had no instinctive preference for the right hand or the left; that right-handedness originated in the early days when warfare demanded, for uniformity in action and formation, the wearing of the shield on one arm and the wielding of the weapon in the other. Had the general who first set this fashion thus arbitrarily selected the left hand instead of the right for the wielding of the weapon, civilized races would now generally be left-handed, according to this theory.

An inquiry as to whether primitive man was instinctively right-handed, left-handed or ambidextrous offers the best means of throwing light on this problem, and the first anthropologist to make such an inquiry is Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, in charge of the laboratory of physical anthropology in the National Museum. Dr. Hrdlicka has examined the hands of nearly 2500 American Indians, from among the most primitive tribes still remaining, upon whom, as well as upon any other existing races, can be based an approximation of the characteristics of early primitive man.

"On the basis of these observations, it is safe to say that right and left-handedness exist in nearly the same proportions among the Indians as among the whites," Dr. Hrdlicka told me. "There are approximately 3 per cent. of male and 1 per cent. of female Indians left-handed. In whites the percentage of left-handedness is estimated at about 3 to 4 per cent. in males and also lower in females.

Right-handedness Began With Animal Ancestors.

"Right-handedness as a characteristic of the average individual originated, it seems, much further back than primitive man. It probably originated somewhere in the life history of our animal ancestors. It may have been as far back as the protozoa. It may have been due to habit caused by environment, such as, in the case of aquatic organisms, the sun or tides. It very likely existed as right-forefootedness in numerous mammals, whose stock is very much more ancient than man. I have myself observed it in red squirrels. If a thorough investigation were made, right-forelimbedness, so to speak, would probably be found much more general than is now supposed. It appears to be a characteristic of dogs and cats, which seem to prefer the right forefoot in striking, scratching or digging.

"This subject of right and left-handedness is not as simple as it looks. Right-handedness appears to be of many grades. What we commonly call right and left-handedness are only those cases where the right or left hand is very much the more used. The observations on human bones and the development of the human muscles indicate that there are numerous degrees of right as well as left-handedness, not all of which, particularly in the case of left-handedness, are usually included in the statistics. Some of these forms might pass [illegible] ambidexterity; but exact ambidexterity does not probably exist, there being always some small difference in the development and power of the two arms. Some right-handedness, furthermore, is what may be termed artificial. There are doubtless instances where a child has been taught by the mother to be right-handed, although it has been born with no great preference for either hand, or has some tendency to become left-handed.

Left-handedness an Inherited Nervous Peculiarity.

"Pronounced right-handedness as well as left-handedness is an inherited condition, depending primarily upon a peculiarity of the organization of the nervous centers. The average individual's greater ease in using the muscles of the right side than of the left means that there is easier and more effective action of the motor centers situated on the left side of the 'larger brain' or cerebrum—those controlling the right side of the body; also that the nervous communication between these centers and the muscles of the right side act more easily and effectively than do those controlling the muscles of the left side. Those of the left side, situated in the right half of the brain, are not idle, but their action is less, unless through some accident or special training they are called upon for more work. In such cases it is noticed that the centers controlling the left side become gradually more and more effective. There then arises a secondary left-handedness, due to injury.

"The right hand and right side are controlled by definite and well-known parts, or 'centers,' in the left hemisphere of the greater brain and the left hand and left side by the right hemisphere, as I intimated before. Generally the left hemisphere of the brain, controlling the right side, is slightly longer and heavier than the right hemisphere, controlling the left side of the body. This difference has a connection with right-handedness. It would be interesting to determine in a large number of pronouncedly left-handed persons how this weight of the hemispheres of the brain differs; but for this there is not sufficient material. The National Museum possesses already the greatest collection of human and animal brains in this country, if not in the world; but it is not as yet large enough to solve these problems. The left brain, controlling the right hand, may owe its greater facility of action to a less complex communication with the right hand and the right side of the body in general than there is between the left hand and the right brain.

"The right arm is the better developed in the average person, and this is due to its more frequent use. That use is the cause of this is evident, because in woman, where the right arm is generally less used than in man, the difference in the two arms is found to be less.

"Left-handedness 'runs' in certain families, but it never extends to all the members because there have been in every family many ancestors who were right-handed. If pronouncedly left-handed women married only equally left-handed men, and this process could, in a definite family or small locality, be long continued there would be a progressive increase in left-handed progeny."

"But to return to ambidexterity—what do you discover about this condition? I have read somewhere that Leonardo da Vinci and Michaelangelo were perfect ambidexters."

"I do not think there could be found a pure case of ambidexterity, or equal use of both hands. If there were the same ease of cerebration and impulse on the two sides, there would still be the [illegible] of habit and imitation. You will not find a person habitually using both hands in exactly the same manner.

"Do you agree with Lombrosa that left-handedness is one of the stigmata of degeneration?"

"No, I cannot. Too few cases among degenerates and criminals have been adduced to make valid any conclusion. My own studies of 1000 delinquent children of the New York Juvenile Asylum contradicted any such assumption. Among these 1000 inmates I found only ten, or 1 per cent., who were left-handed. Among the boys it was less than 1 per cent., whereas for males in general it is between 3 and 4 per cent. Among the girls it was only 1 1-3 per cent., or about the same as for females in general.

"Left-handed people appear peculiar because of their apparent awkwardness. But this awkwardness is only apparent. If you see a number of persons at a table and all but one cuts his food with his right hand, that one person appears to be awkward simply because he is the exception. The exact significance of left-handedness has not yet been determined, but there is no evidence that it means anything very different from right-handedness.

"The Indians studied were all tested with the dynamometer, an instrument which measures the strength of the handgrasp. Each of them squeezed it as hard as he could—under certain precautions—first in one hand and then in the other, the maximum amount of pressure each could thus apply being registered upon a scale attached to the instrument. It was thus found that sometimes a right-handed individual, with both arms equally healthy, was stronger in his left than in his right, and vice versa. These were very likely cases of imperfect right or left-handedness."

"Have we any tendencies toward one-sidedness other than those shown by the hands?"

"Yes. There is a somewhat similar tendency in the lower limbs, but this is seldom given any attention."

Prof. Otis T. Mason, the distinguished curator of anthropology, under whose direction Dr. Hrdlicka's special investigations are being made, also talked concerning his observations on this subject.

"The one-hand implements in the National Museum gives testimony agreeing very closely with what Dr. Hrdlicka is learning direct from the Indians [illegible] in our laboratory of physical anthropology," [illegible] "The Eskimo hunts from his kaiak, a light, [illegible] canoe covered all over with sealskin, with the exception of a small hold into which he inserts his body. [illegible] bottom of his jacket about the rim of this hole, he and the canoe together become water-tight. This delicate vessel is propelled and guided by a light paddle, which in emergency he can manipulate with one hand. It is impossible to use bow and arrow because he can never release his paddle. So he had to invent an apparatus from which his harpoon could be thrown with one hand. This apparatus had a wide distribution throughout America. In Mexico it was called 'atlatl.' There are a great number of these in this museum and in every other of importance in the United States. I have inquired of the curators of these museums, and, including our own collection in the lot, have [illegible] of three of these pieces of apparatus which could be used in the left hand. These all came from the same [illegible] near Mt. St. Elias, Alaska, and I think they were made by the same individual, the only primitive man in whom I have ever seen any evidence of left-handedness.

No Relics of Left-handed Women.

"Again we have many hide scrapers used by women. They have handles of bone or ivory, according to locality, and some can be used in either hand. A great number, especially from the north, can be used only with one hand. We have never yet found one made for a left hand. So far as they go, the [illegible] of these one-hand women's tools, therefore, is [illegible] savage woman of the northwest is left-handed. The mute testimony of these harpoon throwers and skin-dressing tools, therefore, agrees with our laboratory statistics showing that only a small percentage of Indian men and a still smaller percentage of Indian women are left-handed."

"What is your theory as to why the average man is naturally right-handed?"

"It may be because it is the nearer to the heart that the left hand is less used than the right. I have often thought of that. However, it is mere speculation

"Moved Into His Right Brain."

"I have myself developed the 'secondary left-handedness' which Dr. Hrdlicka mentioned. In May, 1898, after a severe day's work preparing our exhibits for the Omaha Exposition, I was felled to the floor by a stroke of paralysis. When next I awoke I felt a fly blister on the left side of my head; then I noticed that I couldn't move the fingers of my right hand. I then realized what had happened, and for several days I lay hopeless and utterly crushed. Then I said to my nurse: "I am a literary man. I make my living with my pen. I will move into my right brain and become a child again.' Then I told her to get me a child's copy-book and, half-propped up in bed, I began, with my left hand, the fundamental exercises in penmanship which, when a child, I had begun with my right—first parallel slants, made on the quarter second, with the rhythm of the clock; then the left curve, the right curve, the loop, the lower loop and so on. On the sixtieth day of my illness I was labeling our unidentified photographs with my left hand, using the engraver's stroke, and now I write most of the pages of my scientific papers with my left hand, and the printer says he likes the copy better than when I used to write it with my right hand. I now write letters and notes with the right, but do all of the grind with my left, which writes back-hand, whereas the right writes in the normal slant.

"I brought together, edited and published my book, 'Aboriginal American Basketry,' a study of the textile art in all ages—the greatest work of my life—after I first moved my ego from my left brain into my right brain, which controls my left hand; and as I told my nurse I would, I became a child again on that moving day, and soon I became a man again in my new quarters."

"And you certainly are looking like a healthy man."

"Yes. When I was a well man I was always sick; but since I have been a sick man I have always been well. I have been trying my moving scheme on others who were in the predicament that I was in ten years ago. We call ourselves the 'Born Agains,' and any member who lets his chin drop is stricken from the roll."

WAITIN' FOR A BITE.

A barefoot boy I stood upon
The little bridge of plank,
Or down beneath the cottonwood
Along the shady bank.

A crooked pole within my hands,
My heart filled with delight;
My eyes agleam upon the stream,
Jest waitin' fur a bite.

What though the nibble never come
To strip my bent pin hook?
'Twas joy enough fur me to be
Down there beside the brook.

An' thus I passed the happy hours,
Half-hidden out of sight,
In idle dream beside the stream
While waitin' fur a bite.

The years hev come an' gone since then,
I've lingered by the brook
Of life where trade goes rushing by
With ready line and hook.

I've stood upon the crowded bank
By day, an' then by night;
I angled there in storm an' fair,
Just waitin' fur a bite.

I've waited fur the fish "success"
To come an' bite my pin;
They come an' sniff, like them of old,
An' then swim off ag'in.

Yet, still I'm standin' on the bank
Frum mornin' until night,
An' I shall stay the same old way
Until I git a bite.

SPRING SONG.

Spring doth invite thee.
Joy calleth blithely,
Time passes fleetly,
Life calls full gladly; oh, seize then, its joys.

Sun shineth brightly,
Waters flow swiftly,
Birds warble lightly;
Nature is singing its spring song of love.

Wind sigheth softly,
Leaves ripple gently,
Joys doth await thee—
Come then, O sad heart, ere spring doth depart.

Heart singeth blithely,
Hands clasp so closely,
Pulse beateth quickly—
And earth sings softly her spring song of love.

Nature weaves strongly
A love charm about thee;
Flowers nod wisely,
Till understanding the spell that she weaves.

MYTHS AND TRADITIONS OF ALL THE YEARS AND PEOPLES.

By a Special Contributor.

ACCORDING to an old tradition, when the Roman soldiers came to the Garden of Gethsemane Christ hid under the olive trees until the treacherous plover cried out: "Buvick!" "Buvick!" "He is hiding!"

But if a Judas among the birds betrayed the Master of men in this hour of need, other faithful feathered folk ministered to him at the darker moment of Calvary. Then it was that the voice of the pitying turtle dove grew so plaintive that never has it regained its lost happy notes. Not only did the swallow perch on the cross and twitter tender words of consolation, but also in its small, sweet way alleviated the sufferer's pain by pulling out a spine from the crown of thorns. And the stork flying over the cross loitered on the wing to call down: "Stryk!" "Stryk!"—"Strengthen!" "Strengthen!"

In certain old English gardens, there is a little spotted-leafed plant with deep blue flowers and red buds, called "Mary's Tears," for in the beginning this grew on Calvary—its flower the blue of the Mother Mary's eyes, the buds red as her eyelids swollen from weeping, and the leaves tear-stained with her grief.

And in the old English garden, too, is found the rosemary that puts forth new blossoms every Friday as though to embalm the body of the dead Christ.

In the passion flower the reverent imagination has discovered not a cross alone, but also the pillar of scourging, the nails, the crown of thorns, and even spots to mark the five wounds of the crucified body.

The Spaniard will tell you that the aspen trembles because that was the wood of the cross. However this may be, there is a delightful old legend concerning the tree out of which the cross was made.

Aged Adam, weary of toil and sin and eager for death, sent to the angel guarding the Tree of Life to beg a boon. The messenger brought back the welcome promise that Adam should die in three days, and the added gift of three small seeds which were mysteriously to be placed under the dead man's tongue before burial.

From these seeds, the quaint narrative continues, sprang three saplings that later united, three in one, symbol of the Trinity. With this miraculous tree Moses and David each wrought many wonders. But King Solomon, his whole heart set upon the building of the Temple, had the tree cut down, intending it for a magnificent beam. Strive as the workmen would, however, nowhere would the beam fit, and, cast aside, it was later used as a bridge across a nearby stream. When the Queen of Sheba made her notable visit she refused to tread upon this bridge; instead, she knelt and worshiped, and having confided to Solomon a vision she had concerning it, the King at once ordered the sacred wood incased in gold and silver, and reverently hung over the door of the Temple. Subsequently, Abijah, son of Rehoboam, coveting the precious setting, had it taken down and after appropriating the metal had the wood buried deep in the earth—so deep, in fact, that a well was dug over it, the famous Pool of Bethesda, the tree of mercy at the bottom giving healing qualities to the waters. Finally, as the time appointed approached, the tree rose and floated on the surface, and the Jews took it and made it into the cross upon which the Christ was crucified.

As some claim the aspen was the wood of the cross, others select the weeping willow for the tree upon which Judas hanged himself.

There is an old legend as sinister as the fatalistic Oedipus myth that claims that before the birth of Judas his mother dreamed that her child would murder his father and betray his God for money. To prevent this tragedy, the babe was put in a chest and cast upon the sea, but was rescued and adopted by a king.

According to tradition, Pilate as well as Judas committed suicide, for upon his return to Rome so indignant was the Emperor over the governor's actions while in Jerusalem that he cast him into prison, a humiliation too great for so weak a spirit to bear.

Weird is the legend told concerning the restless, tormented ghost of him who could wash his hands but not his conscience innocent of offence.

The body of the suicide was first cast into the Tiber, but so turbulent were the storms that immediately followed that it was taken out of the river, carried to Gaul, and thrown into the Rhone. Tempests were the instant result. Again the body was removed, this time to Lake Geneva. The same disasters in its train. Once more an attempt was made to overcome the evil. Surely, in a far-away mountain lake locked in the center of the Alps even the spirit of a Pilate could do no harm. Vain hope. There arose storms of wind and rain so great in fury that flocks and herds were drowned, trees torn up by the roots, and happy-hearted homes washed away to death and destruction.

Then at the call of the emergency came the man of the hour to answer it. Alone He went to the lake, and with the sole weapons of a scholar's knowledge and magic battled with the spirit until it signed an agreement to remain at peace if only it might have one day of freedom during the year.

The storms ceased, but long afterward whoever went to Pilate's Lake on a Good Friday saw an awful specter clothed in a red toga seated upon a rock above the water, "the grim, ghostly figure of him who saw no ill yet permitted it."

The legend of Holy Week that makes the strongest appeal to the imagination, that had been an inspiration to romancer, poet, seer, is that of the Holy Grail, forever endeared to the Anglo-Saxon race by the nobility of thought, the beauty of imagery in which Tennyson has embodied it.

"The cup, the cup itself from which our Lord
Drank at the last sad supper with his own.
This, from the blessed land of Aromat—
After the day of darkness when the dead
Went wandering o'er Moriah—the good saint,
Arimathaean Joseph, journeying brought
To Glastonbury where the winter thorn
Blossoms at Christmas, mindful of our Lord.
And there awhile it bode; and if a man
Could touch or see it, he was heal'd at once,
By faith, of all his ills."

The times grew so evil that the sacred cup was "caught away to heaven," but later when the white chivalry of King Arthur's court graced the world a new vision of the Holy Grail was vouchsafed:

"And all at once, as there we sat, we heard
A crackling and a riving of the roofs,
And rending, and a blast, and overhead
Thunder, and in the thunder was a cry.
And in the blast there smote along the hall
A beam of light seven times more clear than day,
And down the long beam stole the Holy Grail,
All over cover'd with a luminous cloud,
And none might see who bore it, and it past."

A vision dazzling the eyes and hearts of the knights who beheld it, leading them upon strange adventures on that quest after the ideal that ever lures and baffles the soul of man who stands with his feet upon the earth, but with his face uplifted to the stars.

MAY C. RINGWALT.

STOPPED THE NORTH CLOCK.

"While I was out in Iowa not long ago," said a traveling man, "I saw what struck me as a very unusual proof of the disadvantage of a northern exposure.

"I was staying a day or two in Clinton, a town in the eastern part of the State, and I had occasion more than once to take the trolley car which passed the Courthouse. The building has a large central tower with a clock face on each side.

"I have a sort of fondness for public clocks in general and for the big friendly faces which shine from clock towers in particular. So as we approached the Courthouse from the south I looked up and noted the time. I even took out my watch and compared the two. It was about half-past 10.

"It was about an hour later when I came back, and again I glanced up at the clock, this time at the one facing the north. To my surprise it indicated a quarter of 7.

"I couldn't see how that could be. Even if the clock had stopped since I had passed an hour before it could no way have got around to a quarter of 7.

"I was so puzzled that I kept my eyes on the tower as we again spun along past the Courthouse. That brought us past its eastern side, and to my amazement that clock pointed cheerfully to 11:37, the time it really was. When we got further along, so that I could see the south clock, I found that it too was still doing business.

"I couldn't make it out, so I stepped out on the front platform and put it up to the motorman, for I had an idea that he would keep pretty good track of that clock's doings. He knew all about it.

"It seems that the north clock has to take the brunt of all the icy blasts without ever a gleam of warm sun to thaw her out, and she just naturally lies down under the strain once in a while. He said that once in a great while the east or the west side would come in for such harsh treatment at the hands of the weather that it would take to welching, but that the south clock was always as chipper as a cricket in the warmest corner of the hearth.

"The north clock, so he figured, got kind of stiff and numb, just as he did himself when he was going into the teeth of the north wind.

"'And, gee!' he said, 'if her hands get as stiff as mine do I don't blame her for quittin'. I'd do it too if I had to run north all the while.'"—[New York Sun.

KILLING A DEVILFISH.

The task of hitting a devilfish from a fourteen-foot boat was left to the bachelor of the party, the married member explaining that he felt his duty to the ones at home excluded him from anything that smacked so of suicide. Accordingly, when near the next fish, the skiff put out from the stern of the Irene, the spearman standing in the bow while the skipper stood the big boat away so as to give the fish a clear field at the first rush.

The plan developed perfectly—the throw was good, the fish half-filled the boat with his first splash, and then rushed away in a great swinging circle, so that in fifteen minutes it was possible for the sloop to cut across and catch up, when by some maneuvering it became possible to pass the inboard end of the line up to her bowsprit. After that it was a fight to a finish, with the devilfish on one end of the line and the ten-ton sloop on the other. For a long while it seemed as though the devilfish had the better of it. He towed that big boat steadily out into the gulf for three hours and twenty minutes. It was exactly like being in tow of a fair-sized tug. The progress of the boat was not fast, but as steady as if it were being driven by the Irene's own engines.

It may be fair to remark that killing a devilfish entails as much genuine, muscle-racking hard work as any task on earth. It is much the same as pulling for hours against a yoke of oxen who are moving off entirely indifferent to one's futile efforts. The devilfish will not let simple towing tire him. If left to himself he will sound to bottom, and after resting proceed on ad infinitum. It is to prevent such resting that one must work constantly by hauling the tow in close to him, thereby frightening him to constant effort. If he can be strained to the point of weakening, then he may be hauled close enough to harpoon again.—[Scribner's Magazine.

Athletic Fighting Men.

FIELD DAY NOW A REGULAR THING AT ARMY POSTS.

By a Special Contributor.

WHEN the commander-in-chief of the American army and navy issued orders requiring every officer to take long horseback rides at stated intervals, to prove said officer's fitness for active service, it was not intended to confine the athletic tests to the men who wear the shoulder straps. The private soldier, also, must prove his readiness to undertake the most strenuous physical work at a moment's notice, and, for the purpose of determining just what athletic standards can be maintained in the army, "field days" are now held four times a year at all the army posts.

These days of athletic trials of skill and endurance have demonstrated that the regular army contains many exceptionally brilliant athletes. Some astonishing individual records are made in running, jumping, hurdle racing, pole vaulting, and other events that are common to the field days in which civilians participate. In addition to these events there are purely military exercises. The infantrymen show their skill in bayonet fencing, tent pitching, etc., while the cavalrymen go through the exercises peculiar to their branch of the service.

The public is invited to these quarterly field days, because our army officers believe Americans should be impressed with the fact that "the dearest little army in the world," as Rudyard Kipling once called our main arm of defense, is made up of specimens of manhood of whom the whole nation should be proud. Also it is believed that a more general public interest in army affairs will tend to a better understanding of the needs of the service, and will eventually result in doing away with those service shortcomings which have led to so many desertions, and that have kept the most desired class of men from enlisting.

One of the army field days begins early in the morning, soon after reveille has sounded, and the chances are it will not be over until it is nearly time for taps. Everything is done in a spirit of utmost fairness, though the rivalry between companies and battalions is most keen. The field judges, announcer, statistical officer, starter, timekeepers, inspectors, etc., are all chosen from the various officers of each regiment. Some idea of the military celerity and precision with which the events are carried through can be gleaned from the fact that in the last field day at Fort Logan, Colo., where the Twenty-first Infantry is stationed, there were twenty-two events on the programme, yet the last one was finished before sundown. Not a decision was questioned, though for weeks there had been burning rivalry between the contesting companies and battalions, and nearly every soldier had more or less money up in private wagers on the outcome of certain events.

The day opened with a shooting match between teams of four men selected from each company. Each man had twenty shots, and the high scores were applauded by the keenly-interested officers and men. The other events of the morning consisted of a 100-yard dash, 220-yard run, pole vault, and two tugs of war. The first tug of war was between the strongest men in the first and third battalions. The second tug was between the second battalion and the winner of the first event. Hurdle races and the running broad jump, and high jump, completed the non-military features of the day.

Some of the records in the non-military events were excellent, showing that the average regiment in the regular army contains athletes who would make a creditable showing in almost any event of an athletic nature. Private Thayer of Company H won the 100-yard dash in 10 4-5 seconds, and later won the 220-yard hurdle race in 30 4-5 seconds. Private Garrett cleared 7 feet 10 inches in the pole vault, and Musician Savage won the running broad jump, clearing 18 feet. Private Causey negotiated the 220-yard dash in 25 seconds, and the relay race, one mile, was run in 4:11 2-5.

The military events naturally aroused the greatest interest among the soldiers, though evidences of strong partisanship were not lacking in any of the events on the long programme. One of the most novel of the military events, and one in which only the quickest men can participate, is the equipment race. In this race the contestants must form in line, several feet apart, and march about five or ten yards, where the line is halted and each man is ordered to take off a leggin. The leggin is left on the ground and again the line is marched forward to another halting place, where another leggin is dropped. This is continued until the soldiers, who started out in heavy marching order, have divested themselves of rifles, canteens, belts, and other parts of the equipment. Then, at the firing of a pistol, the men start on the return race. Each soldier must pick up his own equipment, piece by piece, and put it on. The first man to reach the starting point, fully equipped, is the winner of the race.

The struggles of the men to get into their equipment rouse the laughter of the spectators, while the deftness of others rouses applause. A man who gains a few seconds lacing a leggin may lose it in putting on some other part of his equipment, and so the race is generally very close. The race at Fort Logan was won by Private Ryan, time 4:11 2-5.

Bayonet fencing is receiving much attention in the army, as it has been pretty well demonstrated in actual warfare that the bayonet is a most effective weapon in the hands of men who know how to use it. The most skilled fencers are selected by the various companies to "represent" in the arena on field day, and the enthusiasm becomes intense as the men meet each other in this strange form of combat. The costume used in this exercise is terrifying. The heads and necks of the men are protected by a veritable cage of heavy wire, and thick padding covers the breast, arms and legs, while the hands are enclosed in padded gloves. The bayonets are of wire, covered with rubber, and bearing heavy rubber tips, so the danger is reduced to a minimum. The score is kept by an officer who stands at the side of the contestants, much after the manner of a prize-fight referee, and shouts "Touche!" when a hit is scored. Some of the fighters go at each other "hammer and tongs," and show great skill in parrying and delivering thrusts with the heavy rifles. Others content themselves more with feinting and "drawing each other out." Skillful work in this strenuous kind of fencing is quickly recognized by the soldier boys who form a ring about the fighters.

Another strictly military event which is made a feature of the army field day exercise is tent pitching. Squads of skilled men from the various companies are selected, and at the firing of the starter's pistol there is a merry race to get the regulation conical wall tents or shelter tents erected. Each man has his work to do, and he goes about it with astounding celerity. Canvases are unrolled, stakes are driven, poles are set, and a little tent city is up in the twinkling of an eye. In the contest at Fort Logan, the conical wall-tent squad from Company A won by getting its tent up in 2:05, while Company B won the shelter-tent pitching contest in 3:1[illegible]

The field day, besides being intended to keep up the athletic standards of the nation's fighting men, is also part of the general scheme to make life more attractive for the regular soldier. It is recognized that the [illegible] routine of army life in time of peace has had much to do with the alarming increase in the number of desertions in late years. The soldier's interest in his work must be maintained and this cannot be done through nothing but routine drills. The sports give the soldier a chance to get his mind off himself. He puts in strenuous work competing for a place on some of the teams, and the athletic benefits are general. Harsh discipline is relaxed in the gymnasium and on the track, and Mr. Private Soldier feels that he is something more than a mere machine. Thus, in the work of bringing our army to its highest standard of efficiency, due credit should not be withheld from those who have brought about the quarterly field day.

"I see by the papers that a man has constructed a heavier than air airship that went from New York to Chicago at an average speed of thirty miles an hour."

"Isn't that marvelous! That practically solves the flying machine problem! It didn't make very fast time, but that is merely a detail."

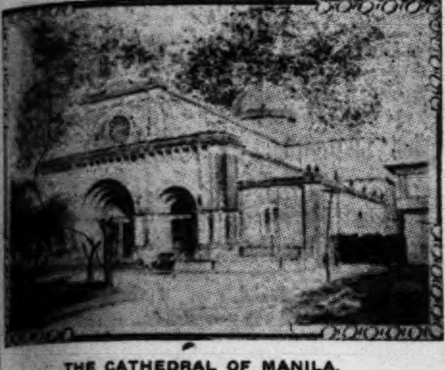
Holy Week in Manila.

WEIRD AND IMPRESSIVE FILIPINO RELIGIOUS CEREMONIES.

By a Special Contributor.

MANILA is preëminently a city of churches. The traveler approaching New York beholds its distinctive skyline broken by the massive temples of finance, commerce and industry. The voyager, as he steams slowly into the anchorage in Manila Bay, beholds a skyline pierced by the towers, turrets and domes of an ancient Christian faith.

One who has spent Holy Week in Manila cannot avoid being impressed by the deep religious feeling permeating the Filipinos of every class. It needs but a glance into the tear-stained faces of the devotees to realize that on Good Friday in the year 1907 their grief over the death of their crucified Lord was as real as if that event occurred but yesterday, instead of nearly 2000 years ago. Mistakes the Catholic church may have made during the period when church and state jointly ruled these fair islands, but it cannot be denied that she bound these people to her in the close ties of a beautiful and sincere faith, which it is to be hoped will grow stronger as the years pass. It would be most unfortunate if the Filipinos, in their sure and rapid advancement in modern nationality, should lose a particle of their faith in the teachings of that church to which they owe their superiority over other Malay peoples. If America succeeds—as there is little doubt she will—in erecting here a strong, vital, self-governing nation, due credit must be given to the builders of the foundation, who planted deep in the character of the people the basic stones of faith and morality. Let us, when admiring the superstructure, not forget those who built the substructure without which it could not stand.



THE CATHEDRAL OF MANILA.

Good Friday is a day of sorrow throughout the Philippines. From early dawn until midnight the churches are thronged with silent, sad-faced worshipers. There are no glimmering candles, no music, no chanting of psalms, no swinging of censers; it is a day of gloom and mourning for the crucified Christ. The beautiful altars are hidden with heavy palls of black silk; the cavernous naves of the churches are dark, save for the single lamp burning before the sanctuary.

The Augustinian church, whose solid walls seem to be [illegible] with the prayers of the countless multitudes [illegible] over 300 years have poured forth their souls beneath its massive dome, is especially effective in its hangings of black brocaded silk with heavy [illegible] and cords.

In [illegible] of the churches, the sacred images, rich in robes of priceless and marvelous embroideries and studded with jewels, are brought from their altars and set up in the nave for the veneration of the faithful.

In the evening, just as the dusk is settling over the land is held the procession commemorative of the death of the Savior. The church band heads the procession, playing a weird and mournful dirge; then follow the bearers of the banners of the various religious orders and of the sacred symbols. There is the cross, the hammer, the nails, the cords which bound the hands, the crown of thorns which pierced the brow of the wounded and suffering Lord. There is the scourge with which He was beaten and the spear with which His side was pierced. The thirty pieces of silver, the price of betrayal, are borne aloft upon a banner. Surrounding and following these symbols are long lines of men, women and children, each bearing a lighted candle, and the effect of these long lines of twinkling lights in the night is most beautiful.

At intervals are floats, brilliantly lighted with candles, decorated with artificial flowers and streamers of crape, bearing richly-robed statues of Christ bearing the cross, the Virgin Mary, Mary Magdalen, etc. Occasionally a choir of priests passes, wailing a chant to the accompaniment of a violin orchestra.

The people march silently and reverently and the progress of the procession is very slow, with many stops that the bearers of the heavy floats may rest or be relieved by others.

Last of all, in a blaze of lights, is slowly borne along a heavy silver catafalque, covered with a richly-embroidered pall, which contains the effigy of the entombed Savior, and as it passes the spectators fall upon their knees, devoutly making the sign of the cross upon forehead, lips and heart.

It is an impressive sight, and even we dissenters, who in our superiority disclaim the necessity of signs and symbols and sacred images, cannot but have a deeper appreciation of the majesty of the story of the crucifix-[illegible]

A striking contrast to the gloom of Good Friday is the joyousness of Easter Sunday. The day is ushered in by the ringing of hundreds of bells and the frequent services in the churches are well attended. The altars are beautifully decorated and are ablaze with candles. The somber black hangings give place to the purple and gold of royalty, the priests are robed in their richest vestments, and the old organs, some of them nearly a century of age, pour forth floods of triumphant melody.

At the cathedral, the Archbishop of Manila, or in his absence the Apostolic Delegate, officiates at a solemn pontifical mass. The music here is an especial feature, the mass being rendered by a male chorus accompanied by the organ and a violin orchestra. The clouds of sweet incense, the twinkling of the myriad candles, the chanting of the priests and the glorious music of the choir and orchestra all seem to bear the soul above the earth and very near to the gates of heaven.

Lore for Landsmen.

SOMETHING FOR THEM TO KNOW ABOUT THE NAVY.

By a Special Contributor.

NOW that the great fleet of Admiral Evans is so near much interest is felt in many of the operations which take place on ship board, many of which are but hazily understood by landsmen.

One of the absolutely necessary things which a shipmaster must know is his position at sea; when, too, you come to think that he must determine it to within a quarter of a mile or less, you will conclude that it is a very important part of his duty, for upon this depends the safety of the ship and cargo and the lives of the crew and passengers.

Doubtless one of the most certainly marked spots in the world is that of the Solar Observatory on Mt. Wilson. Its position has been determined to within six inches of its location on the face of the globe. When you stop and think just what that means you begin to realize that it took mathematical knowledge of the very highest order to arrive at such a conclusion. Another fine piece of work of this character is a little monument which marks the exact center of the State of California. It is located in an alley in Fresno. A shipmaster does not usually do as fine work as either of those, but it is sufficiently close to be a matter of marvel to landsmen.

A part of the operation of finding out is that one called "heaving the log." It is done with a length of rope, a triangular piece of board and a half-minute sand glass. A nautical mile or knot is 6076 feet, a half-minute glass would run out in the one hundred and twentieth of an hour. It follows if the rope is marked into spaces of the one hundred and twentieth of a nautical mile each space will be 50 feet and 8 inches. In the operation the log ship is weighted along one of its angles just sufficient to cause it to float upright in the water. It is then attached to the rope and thrown over the side; it sinks a little way and immediately the log line runs off the reel just as fast as the ship is traveling; exactly at the same instant that the log ship is heaved over the half-minute glass is turned, and when the half-minute has run out, the reel is stopped and the spaces on the line are counted—and so many knots an hour the ship is sailing. This is usually done every two hours, but when near the land it is sometimes taken every half-hour. Taken in connection with the directions sailed as shown by the compass it affords a very fair method of determining the position of a ship at sea.

We are accustomed to think that the compass always points true north; as a matter of fact, it rarely does; so far is it from pointing north that any shipmaster who would depend on his compass, as it reads, would never reach his desired haven. Every ship is provided with at least one compass which is known as the "standard compass." It will be sure to be in error, but that error is certainly known, and this error is always carefully taken into account in the sailing directions.

On the big ships of the fleet not only must the errors caused by the magnetic currents of the earth be known and accounted for, but the local errors caused by such ponderous masses of steel and iron of which the ship and battery are composed must be very carefully determined and the ship sailed accordingly.

Another method of determining the position of a ship is the one commonly called "shooting the sun," which is done with a sextant, a chronometer and a table of logarithms; plain enough to the initiated, but hard to explain to one who is not considerable of a mathematician.

When you go on board the ships you will hear the bell struck every half hour. On a ship the day commences at noon. The bell is then struck eight strokes, half-past 12 is one bell, 1 o'clock is two bells, half-past 1 is three bells, 2 o'clock is four bells, half-past 2 is five bells, 3 o'clock is six bells, half-past 3 is seven bells, and at 4 o'clock it is eight bells again. This is the afternoon watch. The next two watches are called the dog watches, and are two hours each. They are called dog watches because they are a full watch curtailed. The next watch is the first watch, the next is the mid watch, the next the morning watch and the next the forenoon watch, which brings us back to noon again. The half-hour from half-past 11 to 12 of the forenoon watch is more or less than thirty minutes according as the ship is sailing west or east.

Doubtless when you look at the ships from the shore or when on board, you will see a good deal of signaling. You may not understand any of it, but it will be none the less interesting. Some of it will be by flags flown from the ships. Another common method will be that known as "wigwagging," which is done by men with flags in their hands by day, and with lights by night. The messages conveyed by the flags flown from the ships is according to a prearranged code which fully covers all possible needs, running as it does into many thousands of messages; that by the system known as "wigwagging" spells out every letter, punctuation mark and figure, and is able to convey anything in any language.

There is a code of ship signaling known as the International Code, a set of which flags is also on each ship of the navy. It is a code which has been adopted by all maritime powers for the use of merchant ships, and by it shipmasters who cannot speak a word of each other's language can communicate intelligently with each other. Of course the naval code of each power is a profound secret. The book containing it is bound with heavy leaden covers, and in case of wreck or loss of the ship in an action it is the imperative duty of some responsible person to see that this book is thrown overboard to sink in the sea. So, do not ask any one to tell you what the signals mean, for not a single one of them will be divulged. All the boys on the ships and the coxswains of all boats are instructed in the system of "wigwagging."

We are all familiar with that stirring song, "Hold the Fort." That song had its inspiration in a "wigwag" message sent to a sorely beleagured commander by one who was coming to his relief; a message sent in plain sight of the attacking forces, but not understood, for it was sent in cipher. The answer to that message is no part of the song and is not often made public. When deciphered, it literally said: "I am short three fingers and part of an ear, but I will hold this fort till hell freezes over."

You will believe that the seamen of the fleet care something for music when you learn that before they started out from Norfolk they bought twenty-six mechanical pianos for sixteen battleships. There is always more or less musical talent on our ships, and nearly every big one carries a brass band—"wind jammers," the sailors call the musicians. It is the function of these bands to produce music at meal times, balls and public events on board of which music forms a part. These bands are always of a superior order of excellence, and in a most pleasant manner help to relieve the monotony of life on board. They always assist at divine service, and I can assure you that nowhere is there to be heard better congregational singing than by the crew of a big man-of-war.

Amid the howling of the gale, the crash of ships doomed to destruction and the thunders of the surf that bore to death and total loss so many ships and brave seamen in Apia Harbor, above all that fury arose the music of the Trenton's band as it saluted the Stars and Stripes. That music, as its strains were wafted to the people on shore, told of a courage that defied even the elements, and of men who would go to their death if necessary, marching to the music of their national anthem, vanquished but not conquered.

One thing more, don't forget when you first set foot on the deck of a man-of-war to immediately face aft toward the ensign and raise your hat for just a moment. It is a form of etiquette which is the proper thing to do, a salute to the flag of your country; and it will be appreciated by the officers and seamen of the crew.

Naval etiquette is the most punctilious and exacting in the world, and is in no sense burdensome or frivolous. In polite society generally, these matters are liberally arranged, but on shipboard they are rigidly arranged and scrupulously carried out to the letter. In the British navy that punctiliousness reaches even to the position of the buttons on the coat sleeves of the midshipmen. At first they were sewed on the cuff up and down with the length of the sleeve; one day Lord Nelson saw one of his midshipmen wipe his nose on the sleeve of his coat, and he immediately ordered the buttons to be sewed on around the cuff, so they would at least get their noses scratched if they tried to commit so indelicate an act—and all the power of the British aristocracy has never been able to alter that order from that day to this.

TWILIGHT.

The day's long, weary hours are over;
  Soon, soon shall I seek my rest;
Dark, shadowy clouds now hover
  O'er the sun god's home in the west.

See, far o'er the waters, approaching
  The dim mist, in garments of gray,
Soon mountain and vale 'twill be sheltering,
  'Till night gives way to the day,

The phantom-like ships in the harbor
  Steal silently, swiftly along,
While tenderly, faintly from far
  O'er the hills, comes the night bird's sweet song.

E'en the flowers in gardens' seclusion
  Are drooping their dainty heads,
As if wearied with love's adoration,
  Fain would rest in their lowly beds.

HAILSTORMS AND CATERPILLARS.

An army of 200,000,000 caterpillars has appeared in the Krugersdorp district, which recently suffered severely from a hailstorm.

Old colonists connect the visitation with the recent fall of hail, and they recall instances where plagues of insects have invariably followed a phenomenal storm.

It is suggested that the stones carry some germ which is launched into life when the melting process begins, and farmers who have penetrated deeply into the mysteries of the veld, trace the periodical visitations of huge swarms of butterflies and moths and even of the dreaded tick to the evolution of a germ in the hailstone deposited on the ground.

Venerable Free Staters now resident in the district have vivid memories of frightful storms in the late '60s, and in the early '70s, when similar caterpillar plagues devastated the crops in the conquered territory, and they also recall the interesting fact that when the black insects arrived the locusts disappeared.—[Rhodesia Herald.

Japanning the Orient.

CHAPTER V.

ABSORPTION OF KOREA BY JAPAN.

TWO weeks after the landing of the Japanese troops in Korea, the power of the Mikado had been made supreme. Not the slightest attention had been paid to the neutrality proclaimed by Korea, and it was considered a good time to place on record some of the results, and the Japanese were not slow in coming to the point and letting the Koreans know how matters stood. The following protocol was concluded with the Korean government, that is, the Japanese say that it was concluded with the Korean government, but any one who studies the facts soon learns how little the Korean government had to do with the matter. In fact, the very life of the Emperor and all his ministers depended on their doing as they were told, and signing such papers as were presented to them:

"Hayashi Gonsuke, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of His Majesty, the Emperor of Japan, the Major-General Yi-chi-yong, Minister of State for Foreign Affairs ad interim of His Majesty, the Emperor of Korea, being, respectfully, duly empowered for the purpose, have agreed upon the following articles:

"Article I. For the purpose of maintaining a permanent and unalterable friendship between Japan and Korea, and of firmly establishing peace in the East, the imperial government of Korea shall place full confidence in the imperial government of Japan, and adopt the advice of the latter regarding improvements in administration.

"Art. II. The imperial government of Japan shall, in a spirit of firm friendship, insure the safety and repose of the imperial house of Korea.

"Art. III. The imperial government of Japan firmly guarantees the independence and territorial integrity of the Korean empire.

"Art. IV. In case the welfare of the imperial house of Korea, or the territorial integrity of Korea is endangered by the aggression of a third power, or internal disturbances, the imperial government of Japan shall immediately take such necessary measures as circumstances require, and in such case the imperial government of Korea shall give full facilities to promote the action of the imperial Japanese government.

"The imperial government of Japan may, for the attainment of the above-mentioned object, occupy, when circumstances require it, such places as may be necessary from the strategic point of view.

"Art. V. The government of the two countries shall not, in the future, without mutual consent, conclude with a third power such an arrangement as may be contrary to the principles of the present protocol.

"Art. VI. Details in connection with the present protocol shall be arranged as the circumstances may require between the representatives of Japan and the Minister of State for Foreign Affairs of Korea."

Thus did Japan make her first step in the subjugation of Korea, and surely a long step in attaining her object it was. What a history-making document it is, and one that should have drawn the indignant attention of every power in the world, war or no war. It is almost impossible to believe that this destruction, absolutely and completely, of a sovereign power should have made not a ripple on the surface of world politics. The most remarkable feature in it is that it shows how Japan was playing with the powers and contradicts even itself in attaining what the Japanese were after, and, at the same time, easing along the powers and the Emperor.

Article I says that Korea "shall" adopt advice of Japan in regard to the administration of her government. Article IV gives Japan authority to interfere with armed forces, when she (Japan) so desires; it also gives Japan the power to occupy any part of Korea when she wishes to do so. Article V refers to the "government" of the two countries, as though they were one and the same, also it prevents Korea from appealing to any other power for aid. Yet, for no other purpose, evidently, than to play a joke on the powers, the threadbare and long-defunct Article III is inserted, saying: "The Japanese government firmly guarantees the independence and territorial integrity of the Korean empire." Stuff and nonsense! The Japanese also reassure the old Emperor by promising, in Article II, to let him live, although divested of all his tail feathers, it being understood, of course, that he must behave himself, and do as he is told.

The real worth of this protocol, and the same applies to those that follow, must be considered from the method in which it was secured. It is a rule in private law, and the same thing ought to apply in international affairs, that a contract or agreement secured by force is invalid. What are the circumstances under which this power was secured by the Japanese in Korea? Korea was flooded by Japanese troops; the Emperor, afraid for his life, had taken refuge in a small house adjoining the American Legation, and was begging our minister to allow him to move over the wall. Of course the American representative could not agree to this, as it would be looked upon by the Japanese as an unfriendly act. The minister was in constant fear that the Emperor would come without an invitation, and it is said that the guards in the American compound had orders, that if they saw the Emperor climbing the wall, to force him back, gently but firmly. Japan had seized the posts and telegraphs, in fact, everything of power and authority in the empire. The government had proclaimed neutrality, but was powerless to enforce it. Consequently, it is natural to suppose that this protocol was signed freely and willingly by the Koreans? In fact, that it was signed at all, has sometimes been denied. Such a little thing as an omission of a signature would not worry the Japanese much, nor affect their plans. Thus the Japanese made another step forward, and then looked around to see how the world took it. Everything quiet. So Japan concluded that the powers either approved or were asleep. Greatly encouraged, she prepared to further push her plans along.

Continued success of her armies in Manchuria filled the Japanese with enthusiasm and belief in the justice of her desires, and the support of the admiring English and Americans. Korea had been divested of all her powers, but the deeds, signed and sealed, had not been delivered for all the property. Japan was now ready for her next humiliation of the Koreans, and it came as follows, on August 22, 1904:

"Article I. The Korean government shall employ a Japanese recommended by the Japanese government, as an adviser to the finance department, in order that anything concerning financial matters may be decided by his advice.

"Art. II. The Korean government shall employ a foreigner recommended by the Japanese government, as an adviser to the foreign office, in order that any important matters relating to foreign affairs may be decided by his advice.

"Art. III. The Korean government, in regard to the making of any treaty, conducting any diplomatic intercourse, or concerning any franchise or contract to a foreigner must consult the Japanese government in advance."

By the same manner as before, this protocol was signed and ratified, and Japan became the de jure as well as the de facto government in Korea. What authority in constitutional law can be found that will say that Korea had left to her one vestige of sovereign power under this protocol? Why carry on the farce any longer and still call Korea a nation? Why cannot Japan be honest and proclaim Korea to be a Japanese province in name as well as in fact? What fools Japan must consider the foreigners to be who have been deceived by her assertions of disinterested and humanitarian motives in Korea.

Article I turns over to Japan, absolutely, the financial affairs of the empire. It does not say simply that an adviser shall be appointed by the Japanese governmen to advise, but it says, distinctly, "that anything concerning financial matters may be decided by his advice."

Article II, in like manner, handles the foreign affairs, using the same form of expression, and consequently just as strong.

Article III shows the real power of the Japanese and the contempt they have for the foreign opinion, and interests, except when it can be made profitable to them. By this article Japan assumes the regulation of all foreigners' business operations in Korea. It says that all contracts and franchises must be approved by the Japanese government.

How western nations could stand quietly by and see the interests of their citizens thus turned over to Japan is beyond understanding. Japan has since translated this clause to be ex post facto in its power, and to permit them to step in between foreigners and the Korean government in all business enterprises, and in a number of cases franchises given before the landing of the Japanese troops have been canceled by them. As American interests are greater than those of any other nation in Korea, America is sure in time to suffer the most, and the American government ought to be doing some thinking regarding this situation. So far our government has done nothing, and Americans are wondering where they stand. It now looks as though all the American interests would pass into the hands of the Japanese; the railroad, American-built and long operated, has been sold to them, and I understand they are negotiating for the purchase of the street railway system of Seoul, but are not willing to offer a proper price. The Japanese doubtless will find ways to freeze us out in time.

New enterprises will find it most difficult to obtain franchises in the future. The operations in Korea and Manchuria show the Japanese policy includes the development of the resources of the territory occupied, and that the various Japanese companies interested in this work are closely connected with the government. Every company employé is a collector of news, in other words, a spy for his government; every government employé renders every assistance to the companies; free transportation, remission of duties, and unlimited protection and coöperation of the police and other officials, give the Japanese companies a handicap hard to overcome. If a foreign company desires a franchise, its full plans must be filed with the Japanese government in Tokio; here the Japanese will have access to the papers, and if the prospect looks promising, the franchise will not go to the applicants, but a Japanese company will promptly carry out the idea.

It would seem that Japan had now secured everything that she could ask for from a prostrate and helpless government, but lo and behold! in November, 1905, Marquis Ito appeared in Seoul with the final document to date. This is known as the "Suzerainty Protocol," and reads as follows:

"The governments of Japan and Korea, desiring to strengthen the principal of solidarity which unites the two empires, have with that object in view agreed upon and concluded the following stipulations to serve until the moment arrives when it is recognized that Korea has attained national strength.

"Article I. The government of Japan, through the Department of Foreign Affairs in Tokio, will hereafter have control and direction of the external relations and affairs of Korea, and the diplomatic and consular representatives of Japan will have the charge of the subjects and interests of Korea in foreign countries.

"Art. II. The government of Japan undertakes to see to the execution of the treaties actually existing between Korea and the other powers, and the government of Korea engages not to conclude hereafter any act or engagement having an international character, except through the medium of the government of Japan.

"Art. III. The government of Japan shall be represented at the court of His Majesty the Emperor of Korea by a resident general who shall reside at Seoul primarily for the purpose of taking charge of and directing the matters relating to diplomatic affairs. He shall have the right of private and personal [illegible] Majesty the Emperor of Korea. The Japanese [illegible] ment shall have the right to station residents [illegible] eral open ports and such other places in Korea [illegible] deem necessary.

"Such residents shall, under the direction [illegible] dent general, exercise the powers and functions [illegible] appertaining to Japanese consuls in Korea [illegible] perform such duties as may be necessary [illegible] carry into full effect the provisions of this [illegible]

"Art. IV. The stipulations of all treaties [illegible] ments existing between Japan and Korea [illegible] tent with the provisions of this agreement [illegible] tinue in force.

"Art. V. The government of Japan undertakes [illegible] tain the welfare and dignity of the imperial [illegible] Korea.

"In faith whereof the undersigned duly [illegible] their governments have signed this agreement [illegible] affixed their seals.

tentiary.

This protocol is generally considered the most [illegible] tant and binding of all; it really was the official [illegible] tion to all the other powers that Korean indep[illegible] was a thing of the past; it placed a Japanese [illegible] general in charge of the sovereign powers of Korea [illegible] did not even leave a Korean as a figurehead. Un[illegible] protocol the United States and the other powers [illegible] drew their diplomatic and consular officers [illegible] Korea and transferred them to Japan, thus [illegible] ognizing Japan as the sovereign power in Korea [illegible] protocol also shows that Japan intends to stay [illegible] for it says that these provisions shall stay in [illegible] Korea "has attained national strength." Who is [illegible] when Korea has attained national strength? [illegible] course. And is it natural to believe that [illegible] restore to Korea any of her lost powers?

The presentation of this protocol caused [illegible] excitement among the Koreans. When Marquis [illegible] rived in Seoul, the Emperor secluded himself [illegible] took a week before a meeting could be arranged [illegible] shi Gonsuke, the Japanese Minister, and the [illegible] of the country, called a meeting of the Korean [illegible] to consider the protocol.

The meeting was held in the Japanese Le[illegible] it was with the greatest difficulty that a [illegible] Cabinet were collected. When they heard what [illegible] pected of them a number withdrew and joined [illegible] peror with such of the old Korean guard [illegible] collect. Thousands of Japanese troops were [illegible] lected in Seoul, the Emperor, the Cabinet [illegible] him, and other influential Koreans were practically [illegible] prisoners, and then the Japanese proceeded [illegible] signatures they desired, one at a time. [illegible] means were used in each case, the Japanese [illegible] would prefer should not be known, but at last [illegible] nese announced that they had secured the [illegible] natures of the Cabinet and of the Emperor, [illegible] the official seal had been placed on the document [illegible] is probably no record in all history of a more [illegible] method employed to negotiate a "treaty" [illegible] so-called sovereign nations, who are at peace [illegible] another. Several of the signers immediately [illegible] suicide, or were assassinated by the Japan[illegible] would be difficult to prove how many of [illegible] were genuine, but the Emperor some time [illegible] that he never signed the protocol, and that [illegible] ment seal was taken by the Japanese [illegible] used. Just what all the circumstances [illegible] the protocol were the world will probably [illegible] but it certainly was not negotiated in a [illegible] good will. An appeal made by the Emperor [illegible] ington, at this time, under our treaty of 18[illegible] consideration.

On January 29, 1906, the Korean Emperor [illegible] statement to the world, promptly suppressed [illegible] Japanese, in which he stated that his si[illegible] Suzerainty Protocol had been forged, as well [illegible] some of his Cabinet, and begged the powers [illegible] joint protectorate over the empire. Here [illegible] peror hit the nail on the head and suggested [illegible] which would preserve the open door in [illegible] This matter will be discussed to some extent [illegible] chapter.

Mr. Asakawa, writing in the Atlantic [illegible] November, 1905, in speaking of this treaty [illegible]

"After her quick entry to Seoul at the [illegible] war, Japan found herself precisely in [illegible] which she had long desired to establish. [illegible] joint non-intervention in Korean affairs [illegible] upon between Japan and Russia in 1896 and [illegible] had again and again resulted in competitive [illegible] tion, had proven disastrous to the interest of [illegible] of general reform; but now Russia had [illegible] drawn from Seoul, and Japan found herself [illegible] alone. Thereupon, she hastened to impose [illegible] Korean Foreign Minister a treaty of alliance [illegible] ruary 23, 1904, which laid the foundations of [illegible] subsequent conduct in the peninsula."

This article by a Japanese writer presents [illegible] of interesting points. It says that Japan[illegible] of Korea was not simply a military necessity [illegible] consummation of a long desired scheme of [illegible] cupation. The statements that Russia had [illegible] withdrawn" and that Japan "found herself [illegible] cidedly humorous under the circumstances [illegible] strongest admission is the statement that [illegible] was "imposed" on the Koreans. When the [illegible] themselves admit that the treaty was [illegible] Koreans why should the "Banzai League" [illegible] say that the treaty, and those that follow[illegible] willingly and legally agreed to.

A Holy-Week Pilgrimage.

A WOMAN'S ADVENTURE IN MEXICO DURING HOLY WEEK.

By a Special Contributor.

I HAD been told in Mexico City that Holy Week was a most unpropitious time in which to make the pilgrimage to Amecameca, where is located Sacro Monte, or the Sacred Mountain. It was my avowed intention to secure photographs, not only of the shrine of Guadalupe, which is built on the top of the mountain, but of the religious procession that, on Good Friday, winds up the stone causeway to the place wherein is cherished an image of the Christ of the Holy Sepulcher. The populace, I was warned, would be in a state of religious frenzy. They might tolerate the "tourista," but kodaks and kodaking—never!

Notwithstanding, I went, armed with, not only a big camera, but a small one, I found myself at the end of a two-hour journey by rail from the City of Mexico, in a hotel that might have been a palace or a prison, suggesting both in the size of its apartments and in its [illegible].

Amecameca sits at the very foot of snow-crowned Popocatepetl and his sister mountain, Ixtaccihuatl, the Sleeping Lady. Seeing him thus, so near (in the clear atmosphere, distance is annihilated,) the longing to kodak Popo was not to be resisted. Crowned with a cap of eternal ice, his hoary head cleft the blue; not a cloud was in sight.

In an hour the light would fail. There was just time to photograph him before dinner. I was sure that I could get a fine view of old Popo from the Sacred Mountain. And that is how I came to have an adventure not on the programme.

Slinging the camera strap over my shoulder, I fared forth. The wooded hill, mysterious, forbidding, soon rose before me. Here was the stone-paved causeway, marked at intervals by stations of the cross, over which, on the morrow, the sacred image would be carried. On Ash Wednesday of each year the image is brought up the mountain with great ceremony, to be returned on Good Friday with even greater ceremony. Pilgrims come from the remotest regions of the republic of Mexico to take part in the rite. My imagination pictured the vast multitude as it followed the image in its descent. The truly devout would crawl on their knees along the stony road, helped, now and then, by a friendly hand, cheered by alms. Many would wear a crown of thorns; many, many more would leave along the way, at the stations of the cross, some token of their devotion, be it only a tress of hair cut from the head.

Every place of note in Mexico has its legend. So with Sacro Monte. As I retraced my steps down the causeway—I found I could not get a view of Popo from that side—I mused on the legend.

Once upon a time, many years ago, the story runs, a good man lived on this mountain, in a cave. So gentle was he, so kind, that the tiny, shy things of the forest played about his door, and the birds sang to him all day long.

He was greatly beloved by the simple people, and was known as one of the Twelve Apostles of Mexico. When he died, full of years, honored, he was buried in the cave, which is now a part of the shrine.

It is related that, during his lifetime, a mule train laden with sacred images passed that way, en route to a church in a far part of the country. One of the mules, bearing the Christ of the Holy Sepulcher, strayed from the train, wandered up the side of the mountain, and entered the cave of the hermit. It was taken as a sign by the superstitious Mexicans; and that is how there came to be a shrine on top of Sacro Monte, for the image of the Christ of the Holy Sepulcher thenceforth abode in the cave.

On the side of the hill overlooking Popo and the intervening valley there was, as I had noted, a road, which, turning and doubling on itself, scaled the steep ascent. I made my way to the road, skirting the foot of the hill, and in a moment had passed (apparently) from the haunts of men to the depths of the forest primeval. Save for the rough path, it was as if the foot of man had never trodden the solitude.

Giant trees, in whose shadow was twilight at noonday, upreared their leaf-crowned heads high in air. From their branches depended long streamers of ghostly gray moss, that wagged in the wind like an old man's beard. Bushes, berry-laden, tall ferns and trailing vines were bound together in a solid network of green, through which the zigzagging path had literally been hewn.

Half-way up the hill I stopped, the full magnificence of the scene—summer valley and snow-crowned heights—bursting upon me. An opening in the dense, jungle-like mass of foliage revealed Popocatepetl in all his glory; but alas! a cloud had come up from somewhere, and his venerable head was obscured. The valley, golden with the rays of the declining sun, green with a greenness that knows not change of season, was spread like a scroll below; from out its feathery palms peeped the red-tiled roofs of Amecameca.

I sat me down on a stone beside the path, to wait until the cloud had drifted by old Popo. How near seemed that majestic whiteness! Though leagues of summer, rose-garlanded, sun-warmed, lay between, I could fancy that I felt the chill of those snowy wastes in the very air I breathed.

Soothed by the beauty, the silence, I fell into a day-dream, from which, presently, I was rudely aroused by the whine of the professional beggar:

"Niña, niña (little child,) give me, for the love of God, a cent."

My hand sought my purse. Turning, with the coin in my fingers, I saw a sight which turned the life-giving fluid in my veins to ice. Standing before me was a creature—it could hardly, save for the gift of speech, be called a man. Rags wrapped its shriveled limbs; the hand held out for alms was claw-like. The face, masked by a strip of cotton cloth, extending from the eyes downward, suggested—what? For an instant, I thought I was back in that fearful place, the crypt of Guanajuato, where mummies grin arow, staring with hollow, sightless eyes from the walls of the underground chamber.

A second glance scarcely dispelled the illusion. The close-fitting cotton mask, revealing the bony structure of the face, revealed, also, a depression where the nose should be—in fact, the creature lacked a nose!

"A leper!" telegraphed my startled brain to my quaking heart. If the awful creature should move a step nearer, should touch me, I felt that I would lose my sense. I tossed the coin into the sombrero which he held out, and began the upward ascent, feeling "in all my little bones" that the thing was following me. At the shrine there would surely be some one—a priest, perhaps—who would drive the awful being out of my path.

As I have said before, the road turned and doubled on itself; between these loops, the trees and underbrush grew so thickly as to be almost impenetrable. As I stumbled along, casting backward glances over my shoulder at the fast-darkening path, I heard the whining voice in front of me! I whirled about, and there, barring my way to the sanctuary, was the menacing figure. He had cut across the loop of the path, forcing a passage through the jungle-like growth, and was again demanding alms. There was—or did I imagine it?—a threat in his tone.

I opened my purse with shaking fingers, took whatever of small change it contained and threw the coins at his feet. As he stooped to gather them up, I realized that the road to the town below was clear before me. With an agility that a mountain goat must have envied I sped around the turn of the path and dashed along the road from which the last lingering sunbeam had departed. If I saw eerie faces in the gloom of the vine-swathed thickets, hands outstretched to detain me, if I heard whispering voices in the wind that swayed the ghostly gray moss hangings, who shall say that I was unduly imaginative?

I reached the foot of the Sacred Mountain without further adventure; but then and there I realized that my zest for the experience of the morrow was waning.

"After all," I told myself, as I took a more leisurely gait through the streets to the hotel, "I know a place in the City of Mexico where I can buy a very good picture of the religious procession, also, one of Popocatepetl, from the top of Sacro Monte. Now, why should I revisit the scene of my harrowing experience?"

And I didn't.

CHAPTER XIII.

SHE made the announcement soberly: "My letter has gone to the ranch; it cannot reach him. Now I shall have to explain all over. His coming makes everything so much harder—for us both."

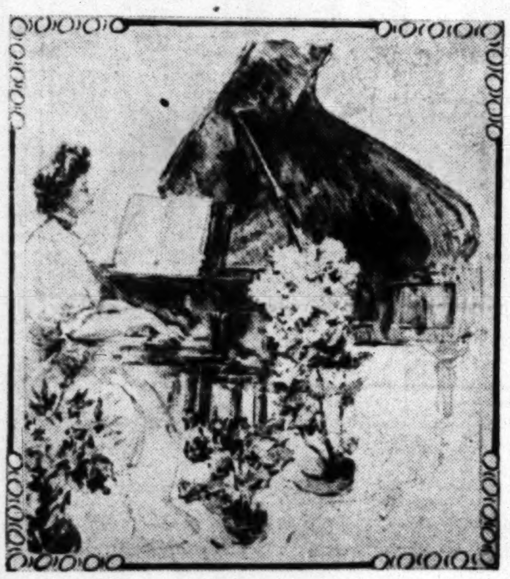
She sank back, and again the little dog leaped upon her frock. She put him down coldly, then arose.

"Please take care of him, Betty dear. You see I may not now send him back until I have thanked Mr. Dudley—made it clear that I cannot receive his gift." She went from her brother's den to her own room.

The last toilet which she would make for the man she intended to dismiss must give up no essential charm. She finally stood, mirrored in faultless white. Her face expressed strange softness; for she had power both to win and to refuse. As she moved from the cheval glass, John Knight's violets rested above her girdle. Fragrance stealing to her responsive heart acted like a gentle narcotic to tingling nerves.

She was able to meet Dudley naturally, without restraint; until suddenly it came over her that the man would suffer more than she had believed he could. Something had altered his inherited stiffness. His unresponsive personality held new sweetness. After all, he might be able to plead when that which he dreaded to lose was the big stake. His first words tried the girl's composure.

"I have wished to be with you!" he exclaimed, "to tell you how the unfortunate thing happened—make sure that you understood." Frankness, together with his determination to reach a doubtful point, held her silent. "It troubles me to think you should not quite know the full truth. I want you to believe in my personal innocence—to regard an ugly matter as something accidental, greatly to be regretted." He had never spoken to her at such length. She felt the force of his appeal.



"MEANTIME, MISS AINSWORTH'S MUSIC SOFTENED."

"Do be seated," she begged, much too politely.

"But I thought you might come for a drive? I think I could make everything quite clear if we were once alone in the open."

She saw that her part was not an easy one. If the man by her side had shown a similar amount of feeling three months sooner she must have felt it still harder to turn him away.

"Won't you please listen to me right here?" she implored. "I wrote you a letter, explaining all—assuring you that I knew of your regret—your unfortunate position, your——"

"God bless you!" cried Dudley, grasping her hands.

"You have misunderstood me!" she answered aghast. "I am so sorry that you could not have read my letter before coming. All would have been much easier for both of us."

"But you say that you do not blame me, that you are certain about my own uncomfortable part?"

"That is true," she told him eagerly. "I have no right to criticize your friends; and I should rather not speak of the miserable matter, which must hurt you."

"You shall criticise any one whom you care to," he put in with contrition, too dense for the girl's patience.

"But you will not understand!" she cried. "I cannot marry you. Do you not see that we would not suit each other? I should have told you before that there is some one else—another one—whom I——" She did not finish. Dudley started forward.

"And you will not listen to me, will not grant me a longer trial—give me my chance until after the horse show?"

"I cannot," she answered. "Waiting would only make things harder; besides, it is impossible for me to drive your horses—now. If you could believe that I have been more honest than my conduct indicates, I should be glad."

He stood dazed with her words.

"You were good to offer me so much, and if I cared for you rightly I should marry you." The finality of her statement moved him strangely.

"There is no hope for me?" He asked the question humbly. She felt a rush of regret that she had not done him justice sooner.

"My mother and my sisters must have loved and admired you," he told her simply.

"I should have tried my best to make them," she answered. Both went slowly to the door. A tinkle of bells sounded in the hall. Rival, freed from his basket, bounded in. Miss Ainsworth stooped to caress the tiny creature.

"You were kind to send him. I have been waiting to thank you—before——" He interrupted her.

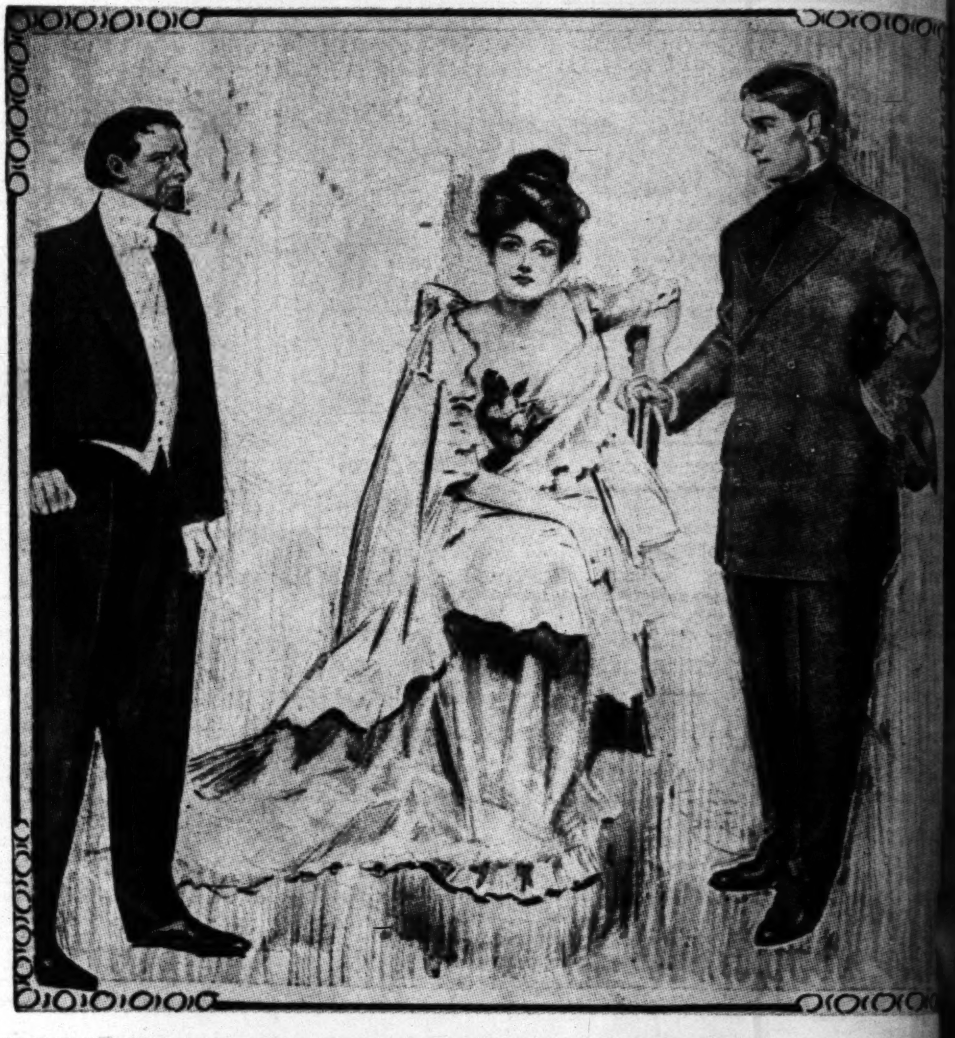
"Do not finish," he entreated. "I shall not take him back. He was found expressly for you. The man who brought him from Mexico assures me that he has never seen a finer breed. Pray keep him—for my sake."

He spoke very gently. She put out her hand with silent regard for his parting wish. He looked down covetously into her face, then turned away, hurt and blindly staring.

Miss Ainsworth sank to a chair. Little Rival leaped to her arms, and she did not repulse him as he nestled close to her violets.

CHAPTER XIV.

Mme. Betty turned on the Tiffany lamps. The room was spacious, charming with individual touches. An opalescent glow invited Tom Ainsworth to drop onto a divan. He had scarcely settled himself when a firm, unspoken command broke up his contemplated nap.



"I MAY INTRUDE NO LONGER," HE SCOFFED. "YOU DID NOT EXPLAIN THAT YOU WERE LENT."

Betty led him across to the den with official bearing and laughing eyes.

"My dear," she began, "do you not see that under existing circumstances you cannot slumber in the drawing-room?" Thomas yawned appealingly. "He is coming at 9," his wife went on. "Poor Sydney has had a trying day—sending away a presumptive lord, who gave her up almost in tears. She should not be subjected to further strain. When John arrives they must meet quite alone."

"You could have waked me in time?" Betty raised pretty hands.

"Waked you in time!" she repeated. "That is just what I did; you were getting ready for a regular Rip Van Winkle session. We should never have gotten you up and out. And really, Tom, your sister has suffered enough. Just listen to her music! When the piano pounds like that I can divine her state."

"She is not sorry that she gave Dudley up for Knight?" Ainsworth was fully aroused.

"No, no, she is madly in love with her rector. She simply likes Dudley much better than before the crisis. He behaved beautifully! Of course he had no actual part in little Peter's tragedy. The trouble all came through his odious friends."

Meantime, Miss Ainsworth's music softened. Expectation spoke in lingering, caressing motif, as she played with ears alert for the quarter chime of the hall clock. The hour of 9 was still thirty minutes off. But John had said he might come sooner. The girl jealously imagined delay. After all, could a rector run the gauntlet of interminable handshaking—put aside importunate young men who beset his way? Sydney felt keenly the new bonds of a parish. Her present unfitness for sacrifice provoked fresh anguish from the keys.

"I make him burn blight—more better!" the man exulted. "I leave you plenty wood—whole

The girl nodded, still held by a composition which

Sydney did not catch the preliminary import.

Miss Ainsworth, pounding out Chopin, failed to clothes, came swiftly forward, she started; coldly.

"You do not appear to be glad to see me," lenged. His manner was insufferable. Miss felt that Rex had planned deliberately to intrude her personal affair.

"Look here, Sydney," he began with established

Miss Ainsworth made no reply; her tightening pression forced McArthur on.

"I suppose you think that I am meddling?"

She bowed stiffly.

"Very well, let the question stand. You will listen?"

"Why should I" she said, in a voice strained tense.

"Because I have come to plead for a friend—myself. I am aware of your aversion, know that you do not like me; consequently I am not afraid of provoking unfavorable criticism."

His insolence was hypnotic. Sydney could not drop her eyes, nor speak. Yet scorn unconsciously gathered for a final test. She saw that the man resented her icy silence; felt him swearing beneath his breath; knew that he would try to humble her.

"You see me entirely unselfish—perhaps for the first time in life," he began once more. "Knowing that I have nothing to gain—nothing to lose—from one whom I unfortunately admire, I am brave enough to come to the point about Red. It is plain that you have turned him down. You doubtless believe him to be a great sinner?"

Sydney started to speak.

"Wait!" he commanded, "let me finish—prove beyond question that Dudley is a veritable saint. Of course you have heard the rot about the Chinese boy—the tale of his unfortunate drowning. It is a lie! that we were under the influence of drink—a lie! that the yellow kid went down through any fault of Dudley's."

The girl shrank, white and trembling.

"Red was back on the shore when the thing happened. As for Cathcart and myself, we were both overpowered by a frightful undertow. We almost lost our own lives trying to save the boy. The wave which took us all down was a freak—the very worst one I ever struck. We fought like mad to catch the child. No one could have saved him in such a sea. Red jumped into the water in his clothes—did everything, like the fine big fellow that he is. When the boy's father took on—threatened all kinds of nonsense, Red paid the Chink a price large enough to set him up in business. It is not right nor fair that you should think ill of the man. He is simply crazy about you! Every girl in Los Angeles envies you—longs for the chance to wear your lucky shoes. By Jove! it's awful that you do not seem to understand what you are throwing away. Red Dudley [illegible]—"

Sydney raised her voice in indignant protest.

"I know quite well the value of Mr. Dudley's offer. You are not able to tell me anything which I do not already understand." She stood erect.

"Then you do not intend to throw him over? You are still willing to drive his horses? By Jove! you're smooth, after all, and deep, too."

Sydney Ainsworth's patience had ceased to cover her contempt for the man she proudly faced.

"My admiration for Mr. Dudley is not for you to measure," she assured him. "There is no reason for further intrusion upon our affairs. We are able to do each other justice—to part——" her voice broke—"to part the best of friends."

"You have actually turned the man down? Refused a [illegible] to marry a beggarly parson?"

His insult had come. The girl stood pale with passion. She could not speak. A clock in the hall pealed the quarter; before the chime died out, John Knight entered the drawing-room. His splendid bearing, devoid of conscious part, sent McArthur out, with a bow to Miss Ainsworth.

"I may intrude no longer," he scoffed. "You did not explain that you were keeping Lent."

Sydney heard him close the front door; then a gush of angry tears made duty plain. Knight's strong arms were open at last. It seemed as if the girl had always laid her trouble on a high-cut vest.

"You heard?" she choked.

"I heard."

"It was odious!"

"I agree. Yet why should we mind? He is right, we are keeping Lent—otherwise——" His lips finished [illegible] with a kiss.

She looked up smiling. "He dislikes you for loving [illegible] that is all."

"[illegible]," he answered. "The fellow has serious [illegible] his hatred. Some time I may tell you why he [illegible] enjoy meeting me." Then the truth flashed [illegible] McArthur's tears had not fallen for Sadie [illegible]. The old man's trouble pierced the girl's [illegible] she was too happy to pollute her thoughts [illegible] McArthur's vice. Suddenly, like a trick of [illegible] of Rival's bells rang out, as it were, for [illegible], the one who had lost.

"[illegible] not be jealous of him? He came from Mr. [illegible]" she explained with the dog in her arms. "I [illegible] give the little creature back—but you understand [illegible] it seemed natural—only kind—to keep a partner. I really had to make a fine man miserable."

[illegible] the dog.

"[illegible] exquisite," he declared magnanimously.

"His name is Rival!" Sydney pointed to the gold collar. Her lover pinched her cheek.

"[illegible] my only one—a dog—I shall be fortunate." [illegible] lightly, but his heart went out to her, with the [illegible] that she had given up much for love. And because he knew both the way and the call, of the world, [illegible] was glorified. That she might never feel [illegible] through fault of his, never recur to Peter's price [illegible] memories, made his Lenten prayer. He [illegible] have said as much to Sydney, had not Tom and [illegible] Agnes Duff, who had been hiding for the last [illegible] in the den, burst noisily into the room.

"[illegible] keep them out no longer," cried Betty. "Tom [illegible] awake all evening in view of the present [illegible]. Our consideration is at an end."

"[illegible] have talked quite long enough by themselves," [illegible] Duff. "Besides, it is high time that Sydney [illegible] unselfish conduct. When she goes to a par[illegible] I shall be dropping in often, with others of the [illegible] to ask after the rector's health."

"[illegible] come, do," Knight invited.

"[illegible] bring your knitting," put in Sydney. "I shall [illegible] to say the proper thing." Her eyes danced. [illegible] not deny her joy.

"[illegible] after a donation already! Expects me to knit [illegible] for the rector's Monday game," Miss Duff [illegible], with arms about her friend. "I have never [illegible] star in a matrimonial piece, to be sure, yet since the Scotch lassie wedded her rancher, I have felt like leading support for all young women who make a fortunate hit. Yet after all, I am only a poor spinster! quite out of the class."

"You dear!" hugged Sydney. "If you had not come to the church when I beguiled you, John might never have found out how really forward I am. You may kiss her, John—she deserves your devotion, as well as Betty."

"If that's the game," said Tom Ainsworth, "we had better get a pillow." He danced over to the divan like the big boy he now seemed. Sydney followed. The girl's warm kiss brought sudden tightening to his throat.

"Dear child," he whispered, "you've got the bulliest parson in the land. If he says so, I'll be confirmed at Easter."

"I have been thinking," said Knight, breaking in, "that the little bride from Aberdeen should have a wedding gift, sent on, with fresh congratulations."

"What fun!" cried Sydney; adding resignedly, "On the rector's next day off we both go shopping."

"That will be next Monday—'Blue Monday' no longer," he told her aside. Suddenly the girl knew that she would be satisfied to conform to ways she had once deplored.

[To be concluded Easter Day.]

The Hotel Clerk.

HE TALKS THIS WEEK ABOUT POETS AND THE DRAMA.

By a Special Contributor.

"VARILOID J. HICKS was in here awhile ago," said the Hotel Clerk, as he met the House Detective in their favorite corner of the St. Reckless Café.

"Who's he?" inquired the House Detective. "His name sounds like a symptom."

"He's a poet," said the Hotel Clerk. "I gave him a dollar to get his laundry out. He was wearing a collar with a border on it like a mourning envelope. He's got a bad cold."

"I had a bad cold myself last week, and I ain't no poet, at that," said the House Detective.

"I know," said the Hotel Clerk. "But Variloid got his sitting on the hillside in Central Park where the soft and fragrant grass is growing, or will be in a month from now if we have good luck with the weather. A sparrow cop shooed him away in time to save him from pneumonia, but he's got a lovely cold that, with the proper care, ought to last him until time for it to merge imperceptibly into hay fever."

"Wot in thunder wuz he sittin' on the ground in the park for?" inquired the House Detective. "A baby'd know better'n that."

"A baby might, but a poet wouldn't," said the Hotel Clerk. "Not a true poet like Variloid. He was sitting there upon the greensward, only it's not green yet, but chocolate-colored, watching the nodding flowerlets and getting inspiration for a poem."

"Where's any noddin' flowerlets, or flower lettices, either, in Central Park?" asked the House Detective.

"On the hats of the ladies," said the Hotel Clerk. "Oodles of 'em. They were swirling by in their littleneck cabs and their gravy-boat victorias and their little hot-lobster automobiles, and he was sitting on the only grass he could find—one tender young blade, two inches long—beholding them swirl. They were pitying Variloid because he was wearing that two-tone collar I told you about just now, and a coat with glacier effects along the seams; and he was pitying them because they couldn't see anything in the promise of budding springtime, except mental pictures of shad roe and those new tailored-suit coats like all the women are wearing this year with little hip roofs sticking out behind."

"Well, if you're askin' me, I'd a blame sight rather be pirootin' along in my own little gasoline go-cart than all spread out on a damp slope soppin' up influenza germs through my pores," said the House Detective. "Mebbe I wouldn't be able to write no poems on spring, but any time I wanted any I could give a poet a dollar and a quarter to turn me out one to order."

"Well, I don't know," said the Hotel Clerk. "Sometimes I wish, Larry, that I was a poet. I don't mean one of those sordid, commercial poets that gets $9000 for thinking up a word that will rhyme with Rappahannock for a railroad 'ad.,' but a true poet who can put his mind above such common earthly things as board bills and room rent and where he's going to get his next meal—a poet that can spurn all thoughts of the vulgar struggle for mere dross, which is a poet's name for U. S. currency, Larry—and just naturally soar aloft into the starry realms of fancy like a frightened bull bat. That's the way with Variloid J. Hicks. He wouldn't make a success as a porch climber or a pawnbroker or a United States Senator, or at any other profession calling for the ability to size up the monetary possibilities of a proposition offhand. But as a poet, he's the real Brussels sprouts. He has no use for money, or very little. No true poet has. When you hear of a poet being financially embarrassed, it means he's come into money.

"I love to hear Variloid discourse on his art. He puts a sea shell to his ear, and shuts his eyes, and hears the murmur of waves and the dash of breakers, and that's poetry. I pointed out to him that you can take one of those old-fashioned tin cuspidores and hold it to your ear and get the dash of waves or the dash of orange bitters or whatever it is just the same as if it was a sea shell you had, yet that wouldn't be poetry. Variloid told me it wouldn't, and he knows if anybody does.

"A lot depends on the point of view. Variloid will know spring is here by the lush green grass, and you and me'll know it's here by the lush green mint julip. For lushing purposes, I regard the julip as having the grass beaten the length of this bar. But Variloid don't think so. He'll go mooning along trying to pump divine afflatus out of his system until a cab or something runs over him.

"There's a lot of signs telling me spring is at hand that wouldn't appeal to him. I guess it's fine in the country with the nervous young débutante hen laying the dropped egg and the suburban dairyman figuring on tapping the new aqueduct and enlarging his business. The sap by now is mounting upward in the water maple and the rah-rah-rah boys. The golden dandelions will soon be buttoning the meadow down the back. With bated breath you will speak to me of young onions, and I will turn my head away, overcome by the rush of reminiscent memories; and altogether we will promenade to the lunch counter and partake of the new radish, that tastiest of fruits, that sometimes you can taste for hours and hours and hours.

"Then there's another thing that tells me spring is here. Col. George Harvey has emerged from his literary hibernation with his annual suggestion for a model newspaper. As explained by Col. Harvey, the model newspaper will contain no crimes or scandals or divorce suits, such as everybody deplores so deeply and reads so eagerly. It will be a publication such as you could put into the hands of a young woman with every assurance, and take it away from her again with even greater ease. The only illustration will be a fine view of Greenwood Cemetery on a Monday morning. Its editorial page will be free from sensationalism. There will be a leader on the decline of the stewed-prune industry in Southern California, weighing from twelve to fourteen pounds, troy weight; a spirited attack on the pernicious boll weevil, and two chaste Harveyized paragraphs, but never any more. The sporting department will be edited with the same care. Parties who desire to know the ration at which Herr Hans Wagner is swatting the leather-clad speroid with the elongated hickory cudgel must look elsewhere. Those seeking for expert opinions as to whether the newest middleweight champion has two medium-sized chunks of yellow in him, like a double-yolk egg, or one large chunk, like a grape fruit, will be disappointed. Col. Harvey's sporting page will contain a column devoted to chess problems with exciting diagrams, and a story on the result of the membership contest in the West Side Y.M.C.A. His sporting editor will be Edward K. Bok.

"The model newspaper will not be a bulky, cumbersome thing. It will be a small, compact, well-nigh dainty affair, such as can be folded and slipped into the breast pocket and easily forgotten. By putting a heliotrope border on the upper edge, and sprinkling it with Florida water, it can be made to pass for a neat pocket handkerchief.

"But there's just one drawback, Larry. Its circulation will be limited. The circulation will be confined to the faculty of Harvard College, Richard Watson Gilder, and Col. Harvey's club set. It's going to take a lot of education to wean the masses away from the Sunday newspaper that don't contain anything but two or three thousand columns of cable news and specials, and features, and pictures and magazine pages, not to mention a cut-out puzzle, a paper toy, a water-color painting suitable for framing, a comic section, and the complete words and music of the latest popular-song hit as rendered in the Green Cheese musical comedy, entitled "They Used to Call Me Birdie Because I Had the Thrush."

"And I know it's spring, or approximately so, when I stroll up Broadway. The actors that are congested there tell me so. That is to say, they don't tell me in so many words because no experienced actor is going to waste time talking about the seasons of the year when he can assemble together a patient audience of from one person up and talk about a more congenial and attractive subject, to wit—himself. In the interval between the closing of the road show that didn't pay, and the opening of the summer stock that's always going to pay, old Si Whitlock has a surcease from telling Ralph Delmore, the wolf in sheep's clothing, that he came there with his slick city vest and his striped ways and stole the little gal awah.

"And so rugged old Uncle Si and villainous Ralph and all the others move right in, and settle along the Big Road, where there's so much passing, and make life the brighter for the rest of us. The old-timer who understudied Booth, but was a long way under, is here with the setting of moth eggs nestling beneath his fur collar, waiting for warm weather to hatch out; and the veteran scenery biter that tells the waiter to bring up his eggs of a morning in a voice like Washington's farewell address to his generals; and the lady who contracted spear-carrier's hip in the first Rice's Evangeline company, but who's still good for ingenue if you don't put the accent on the last syllable, and the somber comedian who talks in whispers because some imitator might steal the stuff that he stole from McIntyre & Heath in the fall of '97, and the newly-snared show girl with the startled-doe eye and the Dutch cheese complexion—red for the first coat and then a high polish put on afterward—they are all with us in the springtime, Larry."

"Is spring your favorite season?" asked the House Detective.

"It is until it comes, and then it ain't," said the Hotel Clerk. "And that's the way with nearly everybody else except the Variloid J. Hickses."

An Emancipated Maid.

Polly Stuyvesant Refuses to Be Bound by Custom.

By a Special Contributor.

"I'M not at all sure, friends, that you'll get any dinner. I've got a new and untried chef—drives up in an electric runabout with such a cunning little chauffeur. He may be all right. We'll hope for the best. Louis, at Sherry's, sent him to me." Sydney Roberts, the radiant, charming hostess, sparkled and fluttered about the drawing-room, talking to all of her guests at once. "No use looking at the clock, Dickie. Dinner will be late, I'm sure—Prentice," she broke off, addressing a tall, distingué, thoroughbred-looking man who was just being ushered in, "how dare you come to dinner without being asked? I'm sure I never invited you. Don't say I did, now! You refused me four consecutive times, and I crossed you off my list!"

Prentice Bayard held out a card as he bowed over his hostess's fingers.

"My dear Sydney," he said, meekly, "here is the proof that I am not an intruder. I am down to take in Her Highness, Miss Polly Stuyvesant."

"Then you bribed Parks!" she declared, decisively. "I hope it cost you oodles of money. I will not believe that I asked you! However, since you are here, go tell Polly some of your stories. She looks a trifle pale this evening. I abhor pale cheeks—and Polly blushes easily. What's that? Dinner served? Five minutes before time! I knew it would be either too early or too late. Well, we're all here, aren't we? John, you'll have to take me in. No, only twenty. Nice sociable number, for a round table, don't you think?"

"You all have heard, of course, of Zoe Chapman's engagement to that brilliant young settlement worker, John Bliss," remarked the hostess, when they were seated.

"I suppose she will give up her career now. It is a pity, too, for she has been so successful in her work," remarked Polly Stuyvesant.

"Her work!" derisively repeated Prentice Bayard. "What is any woman's 'career' but something with which she chooses to divert herself until the real business of her life occurs—the subjecting of man? That is the matter with you women—none of you work for the love of work; there's always a man 'darking the middle distance' and you never for a moment forget him. You are able in these days to rush in where mighty foreheads fear to butt, and wrest, for yourselves, some of the sleek and slippery laurels; in writing, especially, you manage to please, through a kind of subtle feline charm which is archly characteristic of your sex. You could do something worth while, if you would. But you lack sincerity. Take, for instance, Zoe Chapman, who once was a little sybaritic, indolent, cream-loving kitten, with ridiculously small, soft hands, about as well fitted to handle rough tools as those of a week-old infant. What possessed her of that sudden, insatiable zeal for work—that hunger for fame? There are those, as you all know, who do not hesitate to say that Jimmie Pennington's marriage to Helen Wadsworth had some connection with it. And now, she is ready to relinquish her 'career' for another man. Man, man is the [illegible], in one way or another, of every woman's [illegible]"

"You Cave man!" cried Polly with as much severity as a young woman with a dimple in her chin and laughing eyes could be expected to achieve; "no one who has ever heard one of your savage onslaughts on poor, timid, harmless woman, can doubt for a moment that you are descended from a hair-mantled, flint-hurling, [illegible] Anthropophagus!"

"Dear Polly. Am I so bad——?"

"Yes!"

Across the table, Dickie Wainwright murmured, sotto voce, to Miss Harris: "When Confucius said: 'Woman has the mind of a hen,' it goes without the saying that his observations had been confined entirely to the Orient. Beyond a peradventure, that finished product of the ages, the American girl, had never burst on his vision."

"But I can't understand," interposed George Hammond (who had been credited with something more than a brotherly regard for Miss Chapman,) "why Zoe should have chosen a chap so young and inexperienced—a man who has not learned the first lesson of life——"

"What IS the first lesson of life, my erudite friend?" inquired Polly, softly.

"You can see it blazoned over the portals as you pass through the gates: 'Abandon all enthusiasm, ye who enter here,'" said Prentice, turning to look at Polly, who sat next to him. "The pathways of life are heaped with the corpses of those deluded persons who will not understand. Do you think that this boy will fare better than the rest, with his ambitious reforms? Why, it is sheer impertinence! Man, the individual, is such a little pawn in the game of life! Why should he imagine that he can alter the things that are?"

"His burning thoughts," murmured Polly, in a hushed, sad, slow monotone, her mocking blue eyes fixed demurely on her plate, "step forth in fit, burning words, like so many full-formed Minervas, issuing amid flame and splendor, from Jove's head; a rich, idiomatic diction, picturesque allusions, fiery, poetic emphasis and quaint, tricksy turns—all the graces and terrors of a wild imagination, wedded to the clearest intellect, alternate in beautiful vicissitudes in his eloquence." Then, with one of the chameleonic changes that made Polly Stuyvesant irresistible, she turned to Prentice, and, though her eyes shone under the stimulus of the laughter that had greeted her mocking words, she said seriously and very gently:

"Even the striving to alter them, Prentice, may tend toward the betterment of the 'things that are.'"

"A platitude," he scoffed, "and hopeless."

"Anyhow," interposed matter-of-fact John Manning. "Zoe and her fiancé are so different that they are almost sure to be wretched; peaches and green apples do not grow on the same tree."

"The eminent Mr. Burbank seems to think they may—providing they are properly grafted," retorted Polly, smilingly. "However, this seems to be a case of 'when in doubt, hope for the worst.' And I, for one, do not think it is kind of us to tear their dear little romance into shreds in this cynical manner; especially when either one of them is worth any three of us indolent, luxury-loving, blasé sybarites. They, at least, have made a serious effort to do something worth while. We haven't. Zoe is a dear—and Mr. Bliss is a king; I'm in love with him myself." Lifting her wineglass with a dainty grace all her own, she said, looking smilingly around the board, "Here's to the eternal happiness of Zoe and her future lord and master." The response was instant and unanimous.

The party at the great, round table dispersed, slowly, by twos and threes. Prentice Bayard and Polly Stuyvesant—who was 23 and peach-bloomy and sweet and exquisite and gracious—strolled into the winter garden. The soft, gay laugh of their lovely hostess, who stood conversing with her big, handsome husband of a year, trailed after them.

"Have you noticed how radiant Sydney is tonight? I'm not sure that I consider it good manners for a woman to parade her happiness so brazenly; it seems hardly—er—respectable and proper, does it?"

Her twinkling blue eyes challenged his across a clump of low palms; the soft light fell upon her shining, wavy bronze hair, lighting it up until it formed a golden halo for her exquisite face and accentuated the battery of dimples that played at the corners of her enticing red mouth. Her clinging, silken, yellow gown—which held the tints of a golden sunset—fell in soft folds, revealing the long, graceful lines of her perfect figure. Bayard looked at her admiringly, noting the perfection of her slim, milk-white throat and dimpled shoulders, the alluring curves of her delicate, scarlet lips and her small, white teeth that resembled the snowy seeds in the crimson heart of a pomegranate.

"You are looking unusually charming this evening, Polly," he said.

"Thank you," said Polly, drily. "I was expecting that; it is the usual thing."

"Do you know what you remind me of, tonight?" he asked, slowly.

"Oh, don't! Prentice. For the sake of our lifetime friendship spare me. I can't help it, you know! It's the—the environment," she cried, imploringly.

"You remind me," he continued, "of a fire opal encircled by diamonds; or an emery wheel which is constantly letting off sparks; you recall to me a line that I have read or heard somewhere: 'She was like a slim, graceful alabaster vase full of a fiery, rose-colored liquid so brilliant that it shone through.'" The tribute in his eyes brought a deeper flush to the girl's face. "By-the-by," he continued, his appraising eyes still on her," how did you others acquire the secret of eternal youth? After a year's absence I find you and Sydney and Paul all looking younger than you did when I left. I seem to be getting older all by myself."

She looked at him, critically. There were certainly more lines in his face, the suspicion of crow's feet about his tired eyes, and his thirty-nine care-free years should not have bred the scattered gray hairs at his temples.

"Age is simply a matter of volition," she said. "You wear yourself out fretting for the impossible."

"One is bound to have—desires."

"But you should learn to let your desires be governed by your reason; it is foolish to eat your heart out for the obviously unattainable."

"You think it is like that with me?" he asked, amusedly.

"All the world—at least, all of our world—knows that you are head over ears in love with Sydney, and have been since your knickerbocker days," retorted Polly, smilingly.

"One must be in love with some one."

"Naturally. But why choose a woman who is head over ears in love with some other man?"

"It cannot last," he answered, "she has married him!"

Polly reached up and plucked a yellow rose which she promptly proceeded to mutilate.

"That certainly would seem hopeful in the case of an ordinary woman—myself, for instance. But Sydney is not an ordinary woman. She always does things differently from other people. I don't wish to make you more unhappy than you are, or dash any budding hopes; but I honestly believe Syd is going to set a new fashion. She is going to try to reëstablish the life domestic among the upper classes."

"She always was such a radical reformer," he sighed.

Polly nodded sympathetically.

"Of course one can't tell how it may turn out," she continued, "but at present they seem to have turned life into a sort of a Garden of Eden, and I fear, my friend, that there isn't the slightest chance for the Serpent. Sydney is so fearfully obstinate!"

"The thing will cloy," remarked Bayard with exaggerated hopefulness.

"I fancy not. You see, they don't live on sugar plums and bonbons. Paul is by way of being a masterful man and Sydney is only just beginning to realize the delicious fascination of being ruled. Frankly, Prentice, I don't think there is the smallest chance for you."

He sighed.

"I am afraid you are right," he said regretfully. "I began to realize that last night when we went into the library unexpectedly and Sydney blushed. No self-respecting woman ought to blush when she is discovered being kissed by her own husband."

"Syd may live to surprise us all yet; but I have an abiding conviction that she will never even realize the other sex except through her own husband. I'm afraid she will grow narrow—I should hate to write upon her epitaph that she was an affectionate wife and a devoted mother;' or, like the Roman matrons of old, 'she sat at home and spun.' But I feel it in my very bones that that is what it will come to. However, Prentice, dear, we can, at any rate 'hope for the worst!'" The last words were uttered in so inimitably droll a manner that Bayard was convulsed with laughter.

"Since the thing seems so hopeless, I may as well go away again," he remarked, recovering his gloom.

"No-o, I shouldn't do that," Polly said, puckering her pretty brows judicially. "I think I should try to alter my point of view."

"Direct me, please," he pleaded, watching a distracting dimple.

"I should try to put a bridle upon my desires—and take up the reins. You could lead them into a more suitable—if less congenial— direction."

"For instance?" he inquired.

"Well, there is—myself."

"You!" he exclaimed. "Why, you are the most incorrigible little flirt in Christendom. You would no more tie yourself up with one man than you would enter a nunnery."

She sighed.

"It was ever thus! I always have been misunderstood," she declared, looking at him pathetically out of her bluebell eyes. "What you so unfeelingly term my 'flirtations' have simply been maidenly attempts, more or less crude and amateurish, to secure a husband. I have been most unlucky. No one ever proposes to me!"

He laughed derisively.

"You little, whited sepulcher! Why your victims belt the earth. How about Draper, who went to the Philippines because you offered to be his friend; and Bobby Sammis, whom you drove to drink; and, worse still, Gaylord, whom you drove into the arms of Hannah Griffith, poor chap! and good old John Martens—you treated him shockingly!"

"I had forgotten them," she admitted, brazenly. "They were nice men, too, all of them; but they all made the same mistake! I remember, now, they did propose to me. That, of course, was fatal. I wish people wouldn't ask me to marry them," petulantly; "I never know what to say to them."

"There isn't much choice, is there?" Bayard observed. "You can only say 'yes' or 'no.'"

"That is just what makes it so tiresome; I can't say 'yes,' and I don't like to say 'no,' because they always seem to feel so—so aggrieved and hurt, though I don't see why they should."

"I don't think I understand——" he began, bewilderedly.

She reached across the low hedge of potted plants and patted him gently on the arm.

"My dear Prentice," she said, "haven't I always said that I never intend to marry any man who proposes to me? The antiquated custom that compels a girl to sit in her bower and await the coming of the right man—who usually proves to be the wrong one—and then wig-wag to him her willingness to surrender, doesn't appeal to me. When I have quite made up my mind, I am going to do the proposing, myself."

"Whether it is leap year or not?" Again that fascinating dimple did deadly execution.

"Well—for propriety's sake—I'll try to make up my mind during a leap year—though I am becoming so desperate that I don't know that I shall hesitate if it doesn't happen to be leap year when the inspiration comes. Anyhow, men can always, by treating the affair as a joke, shuffle out of a leap-year declaration. My man won't be able to escape, I can promise you that!"

"Does he—exist, then?" Bayard asked with an inscrutable expression in his handsome brown eyes.

She laughed softly, and nodded her head.

"He's existed for a good many years more than I have," she answered; "I wasn't contemplating marrying a squab man, Prentice."

"Ah! Does he—know?"

"Well, I'm not sure," she said thoughtfully. "He ought to, but he's an incredibly stupid person."

It was then that Bayard received the shock of his life. He discovered, quite suddenly, that her eyes were full of tears! As one hung trembling on her long, curling lashes, and then rolled slowly down her soft cheek, to his amazement, he felt shaken and trembling. For the first time in many years he nearly lost his head. Polly, triumphant and gay, was fascinating; Polly tearful, with her pretty mouth drooping, was irresistible to any trousered thing that ever breathed.

"Perhaps," he suggested, dropping his voice a little, and astonished to find that it was not quite so steady as usual, "he has been waiting."

"I'm afraid not," she answered, looking down at the bunch of violets at her belt.

He looked around.

"If only you and he were here, now, alone," he said softly, "could one conceive a more favorable opportunity? The moonlight on the terrace outside; the music, the flowers, the plash of the fountain—everything in the air to make him forget that he is an old imbecile and doesn't deserve——"

She lifted to his two wet blue eyes, like rain-washed sapphires, soft and deep and warm. The swift fire that leaped into his eyes as they met hers sent the blood stinging to her face. Her eyes disconcertedly went back to the violets at her belt. Her pretty brows delicately uplifted.

"But I—I couldn't possibly do it," she murmured almost below her breath, "unless—unless he were on the same side of those horrid palms——"

In a flash, Bayard had vaulted lightly over the low palms—and landed literally and figuratively at Polly's dainty feet.

INTERESTING INCIDENTS OF LIFE AMONG THEM.

By a Special Contributor.

TOWARD evening of a day in the late spring of 1905 two men pushed their jaded horses into the shifting ford where the Dalton Trail crosses the Kicking Horse River, just above the point where the latter empties into the Chilkat, and marks a point on the international boundary line between Alaska and British Columbia. The crossing, always dangerous, was at its worst. The river, at flood height from melting snows, was surging by, its foam-white surface tossing and rolling like the waters of a boiling cauldron. Part of the firm bar of the ford was washed away, and in its place heaved a bottomless bed of quicksand. Half-way over, one after the other, the horses lost their footing and began floundering helplessly in the yielding sand.

The first of the men threw himself from his saddle to ease his struggling mount, whereupon the frightened animal, released from its burden, sprang forward jerking the bridle from its rider's hand, lunged its way through to the bank and galloped off. The other horse was swept down to a firm bar, where, regaining its feet, it picked its way to the bank, its rider still in the saddle. On regaining the trail, the latter was horrified to behold his companion, the grim resignation of the hopelessly doomed already showing in his face, rapidly settling into the treacherous quicksands scarce thirty feet from the bank. With whip and spur he endeavored to force his horse to carry him to the aid of the sinking man, but the animal, shivering with fright, refused to budge. Failing in this endeavor, the resolute fellow sprang from his saddle and rushed down the bank and out into the raging river, bent on a last desperate effort to save the life of his unfortunate comrade.

All this time not a sound had come from the man in the quicksands. The icy fingers of the river crept higher and higher upon him as the sand pulled relentlessly from below. Now the water lapped about his waist, and now, as the current carried away a body of sand somewhere below, he felt its chill line upon his chest. He had struggled while there was hope, and when hope was gone he had ceased to struggle. He almost smiled as the horse balked on the bank, so far beyond human help he knew himself to be, but when his companion rushed into the river and started wading to his rescue, the careless look gave way to one of concern and consternation, and he broke silence for the first time. "Get out of this, Jack, you fool!" he shouted above the roar of the river; "you can't help me a bit, and you'll only get stuck yourself." Still the would-be rescuer pressed on, fighting his way through the raging current to a point where another step would have placed him, too, in the grip of the sand devil. Then a sudden inspiration came to the doomed man. One of his submerged hands fumbled for a moment at his holster, to quickly appear above the surface with its numbing fingers grasping the handle of a big revolver, and the two men, friends of a friendship such as exists only between those who have done and dared together, looked into each other's eyes along the blue-black barrel of the dripping forty-four.

"Jack, old man," came in steady accents from the untrembling lips of the man that held the revolver; "I've got less than a minute to live—don't send me to hell with a stain of a murder on my soul. You know as well as I do that these cartridges are water-proof. Come another step and I'll shoot."

For an instant the other hesitated. In that instant the surging undercurrents of the river tore away another huge mass in the bowels of the sand bed, and he pulled himself back and reached a stable footing just in time to see his comrade in the middle of a swirling, gurgling vortex, his hard-set features relaxing into a smile of farewell, sink out of sight under a spinning patch of yellow foam.

The following day this brief entry was made in the record book of the Northwest Mounted Police at Pleasant Camp, under date of May 19, 1905:

"Constable Frederick Hillier met death by drowning at the ford of the Kicking Horse River while returning from border-patrol duty at 5 p.m. yesterday. The report, brought in by Constable John Harford, reached here too late to go in record of 18th. Immediate application has been made to Sergeant-Major Barlow, Atlan Division, for a substitute, the miners' trouble at Porcupine making imperative the maintenance of the full quota of men at this station."

This entry, together with the incident which it records, reveals the two great elements which have conspired to make the mounted police of the Northwest of Canada the most efficient body of men of its kind in the world today, if not in history. The former shows the spirit of the service, and, mentioning duty and death in the same sentence, assumes that duty done is ample reward for life lost: the latter shows the spirit of an individual of the service, who, with the prospect of a lingering death in one of its worst forms staring him in the face, still had presence of mind to devise a means to save the life of another, though he brushed away his last chance of rescue in the doing of it. And the records of almost every one of the Northwest Mounted Police stations from Regina to Dawson, contain other just such brief, business-like entries, sole memorials of deeds no less heroic than the one here detailed.

After the Hudson's Bay territory was purchased by the Dominion government it became necessary to prepare for the protection of those who might form settlements there. Accordingly, the British Parliament in 1873 gave the Canadian government authority to organize a force to be called the Northwest Mounted Police, who were to act for the better preservation of the law and order in the northwestern territories, the number of men being limited to 300. Subsequent acts have amended the original provisions in various ways, and the force, counting officers, constables and scouts, numbers considerably in excess of a thousand. These patrol the frontier for a distance of 800 miles, keeping down cattle raiding, stealing and smuggling, in the latter case paying particular attention to the illicit traffic in intoxicants. They watch the Indians, enforce the ordinance against prairie fires, have charge of the boundary quarantine, and keep order generally. The inspectors try criminal cases, more than half of the convictions secured in the northwest in the last decade having been in their courts.

To maintain order and preserve confidence in the security of life and property, over 1,200,000 square miles of territory, with an open boundary of 1000 miles on a foreign country; a territory as yet but sparsely settled, and that in part by alien races, while native tribes with primitive ideas of rights and properties are still numerous, is an ambitious undertaking for a young [illegible] but the success that everywhere attends it is [illegible] a matter of pride to Canadians as it is a matter of [illegible] der to the rest of the world. The mounted [illegible] the executive of constituted authority in the [illegible] ries of the Dominion, and it is seldom that a [illegible] mental institution serves its purpose better, or [illegible] well.

That an occasional member of a force of a [illegible] men should not be found wanting in the face of [illegible] the many emergencies that confront him is too [illegible] to be expected, and it is a rather remarkable [illegible] dence that two of the most flagrant dereliction[illegible] corded happened in cases in which Americans were [illegible] cerned. Both occurred during the year 1899, and [illegible] points not widely separated; the one chancing in the Northwest Territory, near Dalton's Post, and the [illegible] in the Altan mining district of British Columbia.

The affair in which Connie Chambers of Boston [illegible] ured is almost, if not quite, unique, and in some [illegible] it is quite as amusing as the famous military hoax [illegible] petrated last year in Germany. Chambers was [illegible] a Massachusetts party which, following the news of [illegible] discovery of gold in the Klondike, went north and [illegible] deavored to discover an El Dorado of its own on the [illegible] per waters of the Alsek River. Numerous other [illegible] England parties had also been attracted to the same [illegible] tricts, and in all probably 300 argonauts joined in [illegible] rush up this swift and treacherous river. Each [illegible] ried an outfit calculated to last from two to four [illegible] the aggregate of freight running somewhere into [illegible] thousands of tons that was bootlessly sledded over [illegible] Dalton Glacier and rafted from 100 to 200 miles up [illegible] Alsek.

No gold was found, and gradually such of the [illegible] appointed seekers as had not fallen victims to [illegible] or been drowned or frozen, gradually found their [illegible] back to the coast and took ship for Seattle. Every [illegible] of these, of course, took only such provisions as [illegible] last him to get out with; the rest of his [illegible] turned over to those of his companions who were [illegible] ing out the search a while longer. The exodus [illegible] until, by the fall of 1898, five men in camp at the [illegible] la-wah Bend of the Alsek found themselves in [illegible] sion of a dozen or more mountain-like caches, [illegible] which contained every conceivable thing from [illegible] beans to cream chocolates, and from surgical [illegible] portable sawmills and dredges.

About Christmas time an Indian scout of the [illegible] west Mounted Police came into the station at [illegible] Post and reported that one Connie Chambers [illegible] mained at Kit-lah-wah, his four companions [illegible] horse, and driving the constable on Scotty's horse ahead of him, set out for the post.

Reaching his destination in the afternoon of the same day, Chambers found the Indian scouts from Pleasant Camp already arrived, whereupon he put the almost speechless Lawford in their care and despatched them, post-haste, back to the head station. And not until his arrival at Pleasant Camp, three days later, was the unlucky Lawford, who neither spoke nor understood a word of Chilkat, able to hold speech with any one capable of understanding his identity. In the meantime Chambers returned to Kit-la-wah, where he leisurely put his affairs in order, bade good-by to his Indians in a three-day "potlach" that consumed in one way or another all of his remaining possessions, and "mushed" off down the river to the coast.

This story I gained partly from Chambers, whom I chanced to meet some time later in Skagway, partly from Jack Dalton, and partly from Dr. Fraser, who was stationed as surgeon at Pleasant Camp at this time. Lawford, after Scotty had finally been rounded up and all the facts of the case brought out, was dishonorably dismissed from the service.

The other instance referred to in which the police did not appear entirely to advantage was one in which figured an American named Miles, a quondam San Franciscan, who was wanted for running an illicit distillery near Atlan City, British Columbia. Miles surrendered himself with alacrity to the corporal and constable sent to arrest him, and courteously invited them to join him in a drink to "a light sentence." This round led to another, and Miles's "Aurora Borealis" spirits were so potent that the sentence was finally wiped out entirely. The hospitable distiller failed to return from a trip to a back room to replenish his decanter, and a messenger that was sent out from the station found the corporal and constable sleeping quietly in each other's arms under the table.

The mounted police force at one time or another in its history has numbered some strange characters among its members, but probably none more so than one George Seymour, who had only one brother between himself and a dukedom, who received a princely quarterly allowance from Lombard street, who was one of the best cricketers and oarsmen in England, and yet persisted in enlisting and reënlisting in the police. Not a man of the 500 who were scattered along the White Pass Trail on a fresh April day in 1899 will forget the show that this same Seymour furnished them when he brought old Ben Moore and Kitty the Barker, strapped dos-a-dos on a single horse, up from Lake Bennett to Log Cabin.

Moore was brought down to Bennett from Atlan suffering from scurvy, and the day of his arrival it chanced that Kitty the Barker tried to knife her room-mate in a box of the Eden Dance Hall. Seymour, who was in charge at Bennett, wired Log Cabin for orders, and got back instructions to fetch both Moore and Kitty out at the same time. There were but two horses at the Bennett station, and as Moore was unable to walk, and Kitty refused to walk, and walking for a mounted police was a thing unheard of, nothing was left but to put the dance-hall girl and the scurvy sufferer on the same animal.

Moore was hoisted and let down astride the saddle, after which the girl was put up on a bunch of blankets just astern of him, with orders to hold tight to the belt of his mackinaw coat. Kitty obeyed instructions to the letter, and when she was jolted off at the first downhill canter she held so tightly to Moore's belt that the old man was dragged off after her into the snow. After this had happened three or four times, Seymour lost patience, and, calling a passing packer to his aid, he plumped the troublesome dancer down astride her portion of the horse, face tailward, lashed her feet together underneath, and triced her and Moore up together like two sacks of flour with a smartly-thrown "half-diamond."

Moore was known all over Atlan side as the profanest man in the district, while Kitty was called "the Barker" for no other reason than because of her proficiency in spouting the pungent persiflage of the tenderloin. Seymour delivered his charges in Log Cabin all right, but the ambient ether above the old White Pass Trail reeked stronger of sulphur after the passage than the air at the foot of a thirty-degree hill of gasoline after an auto hill-climbing contest.

LEWIS R. FREEMAN.

ATTACKED BY BEES.

Rarely has a human being been in a more painful predicament than that in which a young man named Trunkett found himself recently.

While robbing a bee hive which was built in the fork of a tree forty feet from the ground in Wangaretta, Australia, Trunkett, who was minus his hat, coat and boots, was completely smothered by the enraged insects. For ten minutes he remained thus, unable to help himself, until some friends saw his plight and by means of a rope hoisted up to him a bag.

With this the unhappy victim beat some of the insects off, and then wrapping it round his head slid down the rope to the ground, where he fainted. For half an hour he remained unconscious, during which time his friends by vigorously rubbing whisky into his skin succeeded in drawing most of the poison from his stings, which amounted to several hundreds.—[Sydney News.

DECADENCE OF WAGERING IN ENGLAND.

We have lost our love of wagering, and perhaps this is not a matter for general regret. Yet it seems to me that there was much harmless merriment in the readiness with which men of all classes staked sums, according to the means at their disposal, to show that they had at any rate the courage of their opinions.

In these strenuous times few have the opinions, and fewer still the money with which to back them.—[Fry's Magazine.

West Indian Proverbs.

QUAINT AND CLEVER SAYINGS OF THE BLACK MEN.

By a Special Contributor.

IT occurred once to a West Indian editor to collect the proverbs in use throughout the islands. It would provide material for a good "Sunday story," he thought, and he wrote letters to his friends asking for lists of such as had come under their observation. He also published a notice to the effect that a prize would be given to the reader who sent in the longest list of authentic proverbs. Then he forgot the matter, but in a few days he found piled up on his desk a vast number of letters addressed to the "Proverb Editor." The expiration of two weeks found him with two drawers packed to their utmost capacity, and he published a second notice announcing that the competition was closed, no letters received after noon the following day would receive attention, and so forth. He had intended going over the proverbs personally, but as he contemplated the pile of indifferently written manuscript his courage failed him. He called a "sub" and to him of the paste pot and scissors he said:

"Go through this stuff and make a list of all the proverbs submitted. To the sender of the longest list award a prize, and out of the whole affair work up a special."

It took the unhappy "sub" two days to do it, and the result was a winning list of 215 and a complete collection of 1500 sayings, each one of which was current among the English-speaking negroes of the British West Indies.

This may seem like exaggeration, but it is far from being so. There is no other race on the face of the earth among whom the proverb is more used in everyday conversation. If the mantle of the men of old who compiled the Proverbs of the Bible has fallen on any modern, it must certainly be upon one of the wise old graybeards of the Antilles who sit in the sun smoking their eternal bamboo pipes, ready to philosophize upon any subject and clinch each point in the argument with a localism that is wonderfully apt. There is sound philosophy, mind you, in most of their sayings, and often an originality that is surprising. In illustration let us take the following:

"Sometimes high-standin' collar stands above empty belly."

This is a sarcastic admission by the more wise among the negroes of one of the weaknesses of their race. The Children of Ham will cheerfully deprive themselves of proper food in order to save money for the purchase of finery. Arrayed in the glory of their "high-standin' collar," they do not much care whether they are hungry.

Another sense in which the saying is used is that a smart exterior often hides a breaking heart.

"Rock-stone at river bottom no feel sun-hot."

This is a very popular proverb, and indicates the resentment of the negro against the idleness of the leisured classes. The "rock-stone" is, of course, the fine gentleman who takes life easy and knows none of the difficulties of the struggle for existence. He is down in the cool depths of the river on which the sun may shine, but may not penetrate and disturb his comfort.

"Dressa fall down, mauger dog laugh."

In Jamaica the name "dressa" is applied to a kitchen or pantry table on which dishes are kept. "Mauger," of course, stands for meager, or in this case hungry. The dog in search of a dinner is glad enough if the dressa is so obliging as to fall down and place one within his reach. That he has no right to it will not trouble his head for a moment, any more than the starving man will hesitate to seize upon a loaf of bread to satisfy his hunger, if he can do so without being caught. The inference may not be a strictly moral one, but it has much truth in it. Such opportunities generally excite the "laugh" of joy and nothing else.

"When cockroach makes dance him no ask fowl."

Inviting the enemy into the camp is generally recognized as being worse than foolish, and this is what the proverb quoted above is intended to point out.

"Bull's horn never too heavy for him own head."

This is a rather curious proverb, and means that our own possessions never seem to us to be out of proportion, however much we may criticise the belongings of our friends. The horns of the bull are also regarded in this case in the light of ornaments. It speaks well for the negro's powers of observation that he has discovered that the sense of vanity of most people prevents them from realizing when their fine feathers are ridiculous.

"Follow fashion made monkey cut him tail."

There is much shrewd sense underlying the comical simile employed in this proverb. There are many people who are such slaves to fashion that they do not care how ridiculous they are making themselves, so long as they are considered up-to-date and like those whom they thus tacitly admit to be their superiors. In other words, if a social leader does anything new there are hundreds of toadies who will eagerly follow him and not care to what extremes they go if he has already gone before them. But there comes an hour of repentance when the monkey discovers that he has cut off his tail to imitate man and cannot replace it.

"Trouble catch bulldog, monkey breeches fit him."

In the figurative language of this proverb we are told that the arrogant and purse-proud man, who despised common things in the days of his prosperity, is often reduced to accepting favors from those whom he had regarded as his inferiors.

At His Command.

A THRILLING ELOPEMENT AND ITS HAPPY ENDING.

By a Special Contributor.

THE little room breathed a strange atmosphere. A youthful appearance possessed it, and an air of mystery pervaded. Girlish things lay in heaps near a small trunk. The woman kneeling before it caught the flimsy inconsistent things to her heart, and her pupils dilated until all the blue changed to black, and she swallowed hard to keep back the tears. Her clear complexion, peculiar to the mountain women of California, and her slight figure, belied the years that had come to her.

Quickly her trembling fingers laid carefully into the trunk the dear things he had sent. She rose and made a tour of the room for the sixth time, so as to be sure that nothing was forgotten. Homely things that must be left, and that belonged to the old life, she touched curiously.

After a time, with a little click that startled her, she turned the trunk key, and went to the window. Her breast rose and fell as she peered out. Straining her eyes until they ached, at last she sank into a low chair, clasped her hands about her knees, and swayed back and forth.

In this attitude she let the future crowd out the hard past with its years of toil for those whose selfish claim upon her had held her to what seemed to the simple-hearted woman her duty. As she sat, all she had been cut off from rose before her. She hugged her knees tight and laughed tremulously. Rising, she began to walk the floor very quietly, and anxiously glanced at the clock. What if something had happened to him? He was to have come at 12 o'clock, and it was long past that hour. Maybe it was foolish, she reflected, to run away like any girl. But John had written that youth was measured by enthusiasm, not years, and that they were going to act just as if they had not lost their sweet young years together.

A new emotion possessed her. She shivered as if cold, though color flooded her face. The shame of it rushed over her, and she hid her face in her hands. It was a disgrace. She remembered when Esla Roberts ran away, how for months the dwellers in the mountain settlement talked. The woman lifted her head and clasped and unclasped her hands, as she thought of the long years that she and John Allen had waited for each other.

Misfortune had dogged her lover and kept him from snatching her from the round of drudgery. But his letters cheered her with love that never flagged. He had longed and prayed for the opening of the way until (he said in his letter) the Kansas soil knew his secret, and for very sympathy shot into the air a great black, oily fountain. And now she was expecting him.

Her mood changed. Go? Of course she would go. She knew her selfish relatives would never give their consent for her to leave them. The risk and daring of an elopement thrilled her. It was so fearless, this splendid flight. She was panting a little, her head erect, proud, as some wild thing of the mountains.

Suddenly she listened intently, her eyes directed toward the window. Wheels sounded on the stage road. Her heart surged, and she stood shaking. She heard them stop at the gate, and her blood seemed to concentrate into two red glowing spots in her cheeks, and her eyes burned. After a moment the signal sounded and she sprang to the window.

"Is it you, John?" she called softly.

"Yes. Is it you, Linnie?" came a big voice from below.

"Yes," she answered, half-articulate, catching her breath hard.

"Ever'thing ready?" The whispered word throbbed with cheer.

"Yes."

"Where's the ladder?" came the whisper again.

"You'll find it in the edge of the orchard against an apple tree. I didn't dare to move it."

John Allen stumbled along in the dark and ran against a chicken coop, where some hens had been placed to break them of the lazy habit of wanting to sit on a nest instead of doing their duty in adding to the family income.

Linnie Madden turned cold at the ominous cackle. If there was anything that would waken Aunt Lacy out of a sound sleep it was the cry of a chicken.

Linnie waited in breathless suspense. What should she do if her aunt and uncle should waken? She knew that if they did she could not get away, for they would not sleep any more that night. Would John never come? At last she heard the dull thump of the ladder against the house.

"We must hurry," she breathed.

"Careful," called John, holding the ladder steady. "Don't fall." But it was an unnecessary caution.

He caught her to him as she sprang to the ground, and his lips touched hers. Her face burned. It was the second time he had ever kissed her. The first kiss, to this woman living close to the great primitive expression of God, had been as sacred as the things which mothers cherish when the first-born is laid away in the tiny casket.

"I'm late," whispered he. "I liked to never got a team;" and there came a throaty sound like suppressed laughter.

"I thought somethin' had happened," she answered. "I was worried 'cause you're not used to our mountain roads."

"No, I hain't never drove on a narrer shelf for a road, but I reckon the horses up here are used to it;" and again came the peculiar throaty sound, as if it was a good joke.

"'Bout thirty mile to where we take the train?"

"Just about," she answered.

Allen kept chuckling to himself as he brought her trunk and tied it securely in the back of the light mountain wagon and then helped Linnie in. Gathering up the reins, he sprang beside her, but held the horses back until he asked: "Have ye got ever'thing? 'Cause we won't be back this way for a spell. Hain't forgot none of your weddin' finery?" smiling into her eyes.

"No," she breathed.

He released the brake and the horses sprang forward.

"That's a pretty fine team, Linnie;" and a half-smothered laugh escaped him.

"Why," she said, surprise in her tone, "how did you ever manage to get Elder Black's horses? He won't let nobody have them."

"Well"—his broad shoulders shook as if it was a good joke—"to tell the truth, Linnie, I just took 'em."

"Oh, John!" she gasped, staring at him. "He'll have you arrested." Visions of John in jail or the penitentiary rose before her and stunned her.

"He can't catch me," he answered determinedly. "I tried ever'body round here, an' all of 'em had an excuse 'bout drivin' out at night over this road. I'd made up my mind we was goin' out, so I just took my pick."

"But John, if the elder misses them, he won't wait till mornin' to start after you. He thinks a lot of his horses, and he's got several that has considerable 'go' in them for a preacher's," Linnie affirmed, fear clutching at her heart.

"No power on this earth can stop me," said John, and he chuckled fearlessly.

Evidently John was ignorant of Elder Black's fierce sense of right and his fearlessness in pursuing one who had wronged him.

Linnie kept straining her ears to catch a sound, now and then looking back. Gradually the strain relaxed as they left the few houses and plunged into the redwoods. The silence of the stars and the walls towering above, the depths below, and the mystic trees, old, very old, made them conscious that God had passed that way, and peace crowned the man and woman.

They did not speak for awhile. It was enough to be near each other. Linnie let her mind revel in the future, then slowly she came back to the present and the "weddin' finery" in the trunk, and with a little gasp she spoke, so low that the man bent close to her.

"John."

"What, Linnie?" he answered quickly, catching a minor note in her voice.

"Shall I wear a weddin' veil?"

"Of course."

"I—I read in the Ladies' Magazine it isn't good taste for a woman of 40 to—to wear a veil."

He laughed outright, until the mountains reverberated with joyful sounds.

"You can read anything in the papers," he said. "I reckon marryin' is just as important to us now as to a young couple. I believe it means more, 'cause we've waited so long for each other;" and his big, clean-shaven face, with its coat of prairie tan, grew serious. "It's like waitin' for flower seeds to come up an' bloom when you're a child. It just seems the time never will pass, waitin' for them flowers an' tendin' 'em. But cracky! when ye wake up some mornin' an' find 'em all bloomed out"— he was a boy again—"why, you forget all the waitin' an' carryin' water from the neighbor's, an' diggin' an' weedin'. It just seems now like we was back to where we first met. I made up my mind right there that some day you'd be my wife. But didn't 'low it' 'u'd be this long;" and he laid his cheek against hers for a moment.

"I'll wear it!" Excitement thrilled her tone.

"'Course you'll wear it," a note of assurance beating through his voice, as if all the past was buried and life had just begun.

Then they dreamed again, while the sweet night odors filled the air and only the steady trot of the horses broke the silence.

The woman sat close to the man and began to think what she would do for him—the love she would give, the tenderness that should flood his life, the honor in which she would hold him; and the harshness of the years fell away. Love, with his honey dream, in which melts the past and present and the to-be, held her.

The man's prolonged "Whoa!" broke her musing and startled her, and she sat erect and saw the real again, as the horses stood with tugs relaxed and heads hanging, lazily enjoying the rest.

"These mountains look considerable like their ca'mness and strength had come from conflict," said Allen, gazing up. "Some of them scars has cut deep," he added, as the moon, which had risen, brought to view crags and gulches and forbidding precipice so near the shelf of a road, too narrow for another wagon to pass except in certain places.

"Well, we must be gettin' on. You hain't scared any more, are ye?" he said, as he touched the horses lightly with his whip, while a boyish twinkle caught in his brown eyes.

"No," answered Linnie softly. "I guess we've got too much of a start now." And the horses swept down into a hollow to reappear on higher ground.

Often they stopped to let the animals quench their thirst in the water bubbling from the rocky bank. Then on they went, curving inward as they swung round the sharp corners.

"Mercy!" broke a startled cry from the woman, as she clutched the man's arm. "I hear horses comin'."

"Guess you're mistaken, Linnie. I don't hear 'em."

"No, I'm not. The elder's comin'," she said positively.

"Reckon he is," answered John. "He's gettin' over the ground lively, too," as the echoing ring of horses' feet came to his tardy ears.

Leaning forward, he brought his whip down on the elder's boys, sending them on with a leap. Linnie Madden sat tense.

"Shouldn't wonder but what there'll be some racin' worth bettin' on——"

"John!" interrupted Linnie in a shocked voice.

"You didn't let me finish. I meant if we characters."

The approaching hoofbeats were distinct flicked the horses again, and up the rising sped as if downhill. Then came the through a lumber camp. As they sped on, a from the camp called after, but they ignored it.

The woman sat trembling. The wind their faces from the snow-covered peaks. whirled by. Down sharp pitches and around dizzy corners and through deep cañons, swaying, they went, faster than ever that ever covered before. The iron-shod hoofs from the rocks.

"Hold up there!" shouted a voice not far pistol shot echoed and reëchoed among the heights.

"It's him," breathed Linnie.

John made no response, but whipped out from where a revolver and answered back.

"We'll be killed—the Devil's Plunge—just jerkily she called.

Allen's foot crashed down upon the brake, pulled on the reins with all his strength, calling, whoa!"

With heaving sides and wide-stretched nostrils panting beasts stood, twenty feet from the point.

"Purty close call, eh, Linnie?" said John, his showing white through the tan.

A moment was given over to breathing, before said excitedly: "Now we're not killed, I'm it wasn't fun."

"Guess ye have," answered Allen coolly, springing of the wagon.

"I'll fix you so you won't never steal agin," snorted. "Linnie Madden!" exclaimed the elder, collapsing. "What in the world's airth are you here with this horse thief?"

She laughed like a girl as she answered: away with him."

The old man staggered as if struck, and a chill into his heart at such bold words from this whose voice he had heard in prayer meeting. more dreadful than apostasy.

A Mexican Hold-up.

Being a Personal Reminiscence of Thrilling Interest.

By a Special Contributor.

I WAS sitting, one summer evening, several years ago, on one of those dingy little green benches in the old plaza in Parral, just opposite the Hotel Cosmopolita—incidentally feeling pretty blue and homesick for the "States," and wishing that I hadn't been in such a confounded hurry to accept the job as superintendent of the Mina Guadalupe. Here I had been—kicking my heels in absolute idleness for over six months, daily haunting the little ill-smelling postoffice looking for the letter with orders to start up the mine forthwith. Instead I received voluminous communications laboriously explaining certain large stock deals that were pending, which made it desirable to withhold all operations until they were definitely settled, but always extending tenuous hopes of something doing very shortly. As my salary was going on I suppose most people would have said: "Why the kick?" But they hadn't been stranded in a Mexican town, with no available social asset but the Sunday bullfight, or sitting in a more or less comatose state of blue melancholy in the plaza, listening to the band hammer away with tremendous enthusiasm in various unspeakable keys.

I was watching the crowd this evening, the women industriously walking around the square in one direction and the men circling around the opposite way, both throwing confetti and exchanging more or less satisfactory bits of flirtatious conversation, when I spied the jovial countenance of one Philip Hays, late of Denver, bearing down upon me. Hays was one of those exuberant persons, blessed with an expansive temperament that permitted him to amiably adjust himself to the various comforts and discomforts of the country; get up a violent affair of the heart with pretty, demure Señorita Concha Botello, the daughter of the richest man in the State, and generally comport himself as if life could present no more attractive vista than that afforded by the dreary confines of the old Mexican town.

Young Hays was nominally the assistant of his uncle, who owned and operated one of the big properties in Santa Barbara, about seventeen miles distant from Parral—but that gay youth was more inclined to put in time at the metropolis, and had so far improved the shining hour that he had not only mesmerized good old Don José Botello into permitting him to calling upon the object of his heart's affection in American style, but was furthermore allowed to break all the canons of Mexican usage by teaching his sweetheart the "two-step" out in the starlit patio under the grapevines. On these momentous occasions I accommodatingly ground out the "Stars and Stripes" on the phonograph (thoughtfully presented to the Don by Mr. Hays for this purpose) in the sala, flanked by the placid and substantial señora and about seventeen of the youthful buds of the Botello parent tree.

"Hello, old Sobersides," he called gaily, as he ambled over to my seat. "Still lamenting the letter that never came?"

I grunted gloomily in reply, moved over on the bench, and we exchanged the "makings" and smoked in silence, broken only by the irrepressible Hays.

"See here, Halthusen, you need stirring up. You are about as cheerful as a morgue, and God knows a man needs all the life and spirit he can scare up to make things move down here in this mañana place. Come on along over to Santa Barbara with me in the morning. I've got to take over the money for the pay roll, and will be glad to have company. Come along."

For the lack of better occupation, as well as sufficient energy to decline, I languidly assented to the proposal, though for the life of me I could not see anything particularly enlivening in the prospect of a hot, dusty drive after the Hays's mules in the erratic hands of my lively friend. Little did I wot, however, of the dramatic possibilities encompassed by that same ostensibly prosaic outfit.

"Say, see that fellow there, leaning against the post?" suddenly queried Hays, in some excitement. "Well, that's Victoriano—one of the most desperate highwaymen in the republic. You want to keep your eye peeled for him, my son, for just at present he is enjoying very much of a pull, owing to the interesting fact that his father's aunt's uncle's cousin, or something near and other like that, is some kin to the Jefé Politico. Of course it won't last, and some warm beautiful morning the rurales will gather him in, he'll try to "escape," and that will be the last of Victoriano. But in the meantime he just about runs this end of the country to suit himself."

The object of our scrutiny was a handsome swarthy young fellow, apparently about 24 or 25 years old, showily dressed in Mexican style, and very much at his ease in the crowd of peons who circled admiringly around him. There was much of the Indian in his straight, smooth and angular features, and I afterward learned that he boasted a Yaqui strain—which I could well believe when told of the atrocities perpetrated by him and his followers. It wasn't a pretty story.

The disquieting vision of that evil face went back with me to my lonely lodging, and I smiled a little sardonically as I encountered one of the guardians of the city's peace in the small person of a ragged, blue gendarme. His ancient, rusty gun was literally wired together, and as he aimlessly wandered about the streets with a lighted lantern he blew strenuously upon a discordant whistle, apparently with the sole and laudable intention of giving all evil doers due warning of his approach.

Early the next morning I was advised of my weakness in yielding to Hays's invitation by a series of deafening bombardments on my door, and the voice of the mozo beseeching me in piercing accents to arise, as the coach of the illustrious "Don Felipe" was in waiting.

Grumbling horribly, I tumbled out of bed and peeped through the iron bars of the porthole, called by courtesy a window, and verified by ocular demonstration the moving remarks of the mozo. There stood the buckboard attached to the big Missouri mules belonging to the Hays's menage, Mr. Hays himself holding the ribbons and looking very debonair and alert with his broad-brimmed Stetson on one side of his head, and a fat black cigar listing to port on the other side. (I believe that's the proper nautical term.)

Amidst combined importunings from the mozo, incited thereto I more than suspected by the recent transference of a silver 'dobe, and the succinct swear words in good honest American which floated through the porthole, I scrambled into my clothes, gulped a cup of tepid liquid mud, and we were off.

It was a beautiful morning, and as we left the town behind and began the gentle ascent toward the distant foothills, a look backward over the flat roofs of the ancient city made one feel as if suddenly caught looking over a portfolio of the Rev. Mr. Somebody's drawings of the Holy Land—the very coloring and contour of the country contributing to the pictorial illusion.

A sudden vicious jounce of the buckboard, as it landed in a series of jumps induced by the astute Mr. Hays at the locomotive end, and considered by him as indicative of "going some," recalled me to the very present time. Also to the fact that something was banging away at the unprotected calves of my legs with vehement industry. A cursory investigation resolved the cause into the predestined pay roll, solidly embodied in several canvas sacks bulging with the ungainly Mexican silver 'dobes.

"Why the dickens, Hays," I began irritably, "can't you put that infernal money where it won't be knocking square inches of skin off a fellow? Moreover, it is not safe there. And besides, if Vic——"

"It's safe enough, old man," laughed Hays, in his carefree manner. "And let me tell you, Victoriano would get a hand-out mighty quick in case he wanted my dinero. No use in resisting and getting eternally plugged for your pains, for he'd not only get you, but the money as well."

We drove on without further incident for some miles, and had just forded a small creek, stopping to uncheck and water the mules, and were topping the gentle slope of the opposite bank, when Hays called my attention to a cavalcade of horsemen approaching us from the direction of Santa Barbara. They rode two abreast, and there appeared to be some eight or nine in the party. Our recent conversation anent our friend Victoriano had possibly made us both a little nervous, and while neither of us said a word, I noticed that Hays kept a sharp eye on the horsemen as they jingled toward us in a cloud of dust. As we drew nearer together, we could see that they were all heavily armed—but this in itself was of no importance, as every one in Mexico traveled with a small army enhancing the picturesqueness of his person.

The column split as they advanced upon us, and prepared to go on each side of the buckboard, when the rider on the right wing of the line suddenly wheeled in front of us and raised his rifle in range with Hays's breast. Simultaneously his men covered us, and we were ordered in curt Spanish to throw up our hands. Mine shot up in the air with automatic precision, and I shouted to Hays to do likewise.

"Good God!" he replied, "it's Victoriano! Well, here's for the money," and instead of throwing up his hands the misguided boy changed the reins of the mules from his right to his left band, and leaning over began to reach under the seat for the canvas sacks. Instantly a volley of shots rang out, and Hays toppled limply over the dashboard, the reins danging under the mules' feet. For some unknown reason I escaped the slightest injury in the fusillade.

The terrified mules wheeled and began to run, but were quickly stopped by the Mexicans. What followed is not pleasant to remember. I was ordered out of the buckboard in short order, and poor Hays, who was apparently "all in," was roughly tumbled onto the ground. The money was first secured, and then began a systematic looting of our persons, the memory of which makes my gorge rise up uncomfortably in the region of my collar to this day.

I was relieved of every garment, except my underclothing, which they graciously permitted me to retain and Hays was likewise stripped. As he was palpably dying, I begged in my best Spanish for some few garments to cover his poor body, and Victoriano insolently threw me Hays's vest, after coolly going through the pockets and transferring their contents to his own person. Why they did not shoot me then and there will never be explained, but I gathered from their remarks to each other that they thought Hays was reaching under the seat for a gun, so fired.

After distributing the plunder for their own convenience, they cut the mules loose, stampeded them across the country, and rode off leisurely toward the mountains. My first thought was of Hays. He was bleeding horribly, but still breathed spasmodically. I did the little at my command, folded up the vest and put it under his head, and stood up to consider my best course.

Plainly the thing to do was to go as fast as possible to the nearest town and procure assistance. I decided upon Santa Barbara, and started out on my barefooted pilgrimage over seven interminable miles of rocky road. Owing to the distress of mind under which I was laboring, combined with physical discomfort, the details of that tramp do not stand out very clearly in my mind. I remember running, stumbling, falling down on my bruised knees, but always getting up somehow, and finally staggering into the office at the mine—blood-stained, semi-naked and disheveled.

My story created something of a sensation, and Hays's uncle, the company doctor, and three or four men from the mill, hurriedly made up a relief party and started out. I secured a few scattering garments and insisted upon going back with them.

The return trip was quicker business, but some hours had necessarily elapsed since the tragedy. We found poor Hays in the same position, and to all appearances breathing his last.

In some incomprehensible fashion the news of the hold-up had reached Parral, and as the doctor looked up hopelessly from Hays's inanimate figure, a coach hove in sight, furiously pounding along in the wake of four galloping, sweating mules. Before the lumbering vehicle was fairly at a standstill, the Señorita Concha Botello burst out, followed by her scandalized parent, who hopped agitatedly about, vainly trying to stem the tide of his daughter's actions.

She flung herself tragically on Hays's breast, murmuring soft terms of Spanish endearment, and frantically kissing his cold face. After a minute the gray eyelids fluttered open, and the white lips managed to gasp: "It's—all—right—sweetheart——"

And I think it must have been, for the intrepid little señorita not only insisted upon nursing him back to life, but married him as well, just as soon as he could stand upon two thin, wobbly legs for a sufficient length of time to uphold the somewhat rigorous demands of the marriage ceremony.

Hays senior offered all kinds of reward money for the arrest and conviction of Victoriano, but the Jefé only shrugged his shoulders and looked very much bored when approached upon the subject, and, as it was more than suspected that he was enjoying some of that pay roll, it seemed useless to press the matter. But thereafter the money for that particular mine went out from Parral under guard, and I cannot recall any very enthusiastic acceptance of invitations to accompany the procession on the part of disinterested outsiders. One meeting with Victoriano was quite enough.

B. VON HEMERT.

FLOWERS AS LOVERS.

Their Wiles Used to Attract Insects to Distribute Their Pollen.

[London Daily Mirror:] The tulip as a coy lover, and the wild arum as deceiver and murderer, were among some highly interesting examples of little-known phases of plant and flower life described by Prof. Bottomley, M.A., at the Botanic Gardens, yesterday afternoon.

Prof. Bottomley, who is professor of botany at King's College, entitled his lecture "Various marriage customs of plant life."

He explained how flowers entice insects into their service in order to get married and so propagate their species.

Most flowers are dependent for their fertilization upon insects, and so the plants develop in such a way as to attract the custom of members of the insect world.

The first means of attracting insects, said Prof. Bottomley, was a very human one, and consisted of providing free drinks. Every flower has secreted somewhere about it a large or small store of honey to which the insect, be it midge or butterfly, is attracted.

But, as an additional attraction, flowers develop a beautiful scent, or a fascinating appearance, so as to attract the insects' attention.

It is also interesting to note that the simple flowers are married by simple insects, mere curates, as the lecturer described them, while the more elaborate flowers require more highly developed insects, such as bees or butterflies—bishops.

Since the poor flower cannot go a-wooing itself, and must be dependent upon the kindly errands of insects, it not only renders itself attractive to those messengers of love, but provides them with comforts in the form of convenient resting-places, some orchids even providing a little stool upon which bees may sit and sip the honey.

Of course, the whole object of attracting insects is to make them bear the pollen powder from one plant to another, the introduction of the pollen making the fertilization of the seeds possible.

All plants are so arranged that while the insects they attract are drinking their honey, the pollen powder is either being scattered over their bodies to be taken to another plant, or the pollen already scattered on the insect is being swept off by the stigmas of the seed boxes.

It is also interesting to notice that those plants which attract moths, which are night-flying insects, are nearly always white, and highly scented.

The pollen of a plant is most jealously guarded, that is why many flowers close their petals on dull days, the idea being to keep the pollen from rain. This is particularly noticeable in crocuses.

Not only insects, but birds, snails, and the wind help the plant world to make love. The pollen grains of the pine tree which are spread by the wind have tiny balloons attached to them.

The lecturer concluded with a description of the wild arum, which was described as a really wicked plant, committing even murder in its lovemaking.

The wild arum secretes a honey that intoxicates insects, and, not content with this demoralization, it develops berries which attract birds.

But these berries also prove poisonous to birds, and so a bird, having eaten of the berry, dies promptly, falls to the earth, and decays.

The decaying flesh forms the best possible manure for the growth of the arum seed remaining undigested in the bird's carcass.

Notable Bibles.

PECULIARITIES THAT HAVE MADE NUMEROUS EDITIONS FAMOUS.

From New York Sun.

THE Breeches Bible seems to be the best known, at least by name, of all the famous editions of the great book. Plenty of well-read persons are vague, or absolutely blank, if you talk of the Bug Bible, the Rosin Bible, the Vinegar Bible, the Wicked Bible.

They look intelligent at the mention of the Breeches Bible, but if it came right down to verse and chapter it is doubtful if one in a hundred of them could repeat the lines which give the version its name.

The common impression is that there are very, very few copies of the Bible containing the breeches reading, and the uninformed person is sometimes puzzled to find two copies, of different ownership and not at all alike in general appearance, loudly proclaimed as "the famous Breeches Bible, you know."

As a matter of fact there were scores of editions printed which contained the breeches reading. And while three centuries have weeded out the larger share of this output there still exist copies of various shapes, sizes and sources.

Taking up the Breeches Bible first is to put it ahead of earlier and far rarer versions. The place to begin a history of English Bibles is with Tyndale's New Testament, one of the rarest books in our language. Only two copies are known to exist. One is at St. Paul's in London, and one at the Baptist College at Bristol, England.

Neither of these copies is complete. The one at St. Paul's is very imperfect and the one at Bristol lacks the title. The volume is an octavo and was printed at Worms, probably in 1526. It was the first printed edition of the New Testament in English.

Another rare book is a copy of the same translation (Tyndale's,) printed at Antwerp in 1534. This one is adorned with numerous woodcuts, chiefly in the Book of Revelation, which contains twenty-two startling pictures.

Of course the greatest English Bible, in its historical significance, is what is known as the Coverdale Bible. The discovery of a perfect copy of the Coverdale Bible would stir all Christendom. It is said that there is only one perfect copy of the original edition as it came from the hands of the printer. That copy is in the possession of the Earl of Jersey.

This fact alone would make the book a prize to be coveted by collectors. But add to this the fact that Coverdale's Bible was the first one printed in the English language and it is not to be wondered at that a copy of it commands the reverence of many and the respect of all.

It was printed at Antwerp in 1535 by Jacob van Meteren, who was probably employed by Coverdale to edit the work and to see it through the press. He afterward sold the edition to James Nicholson of Southwark, an English printer and publisher. The latter seems to have had it on his hands for some time, for we find different copies with the front leaves changed so as to allow a new dedication to fit a change in sovereign.

Nicholson finally worked off the original edition, and the demand must have picked up somewhat, for in 1537 he printed two more editions, one a folio and the other a quarto. The original edition is a folio.

Next came the Matthews Bible, published in London in 1537, though it is said by some authorities to have been printed in Antwerp by the enterprising Van Meteren and sold by him to the London publishers. It was edited by John Rogers, the first martyr under Queen Mary. Rogers simply assumed the name of Thomas Matthews, so that his version is called after a myth.

Taverner's Bible also appeared in 1539, printed at London "in Fletestrete at the sygne of the sonne by John Byddell for Thomas Barthlet." This version is seldom found complete.

The Great Bible, also known as Cranmer's Bible, appeared in 1539, published in London. During 1539 and the two succeeding years no less than seven distinct editions were printed. They were much alike. Perfect copies are quite rare. Most of the copies known are made up from others by taking missing portions and assembling them.

In 1540 a second edition of the Great Bible was printed, being the first to contain Cranmer's preface. Its price was fixed by law at 10 shillings unbound.

Public copies were sometimes attached to pillars in churches and accompanied with a copy of the King's injunction that they be read "with Discretion, Honest Intent, Charity and Quiet Behavior." This was the first edition of the Bible that contained the words "appointed to be used of the churches."

The edition commonly known as the Bug Bible was the Mathews version printed at London in 1551 by Nicolas Hyll for Robert Toy and others. It is inscribed: "Imprinted at the cost and charges of certayne honest men of the occupacyon, whose names be upon their bokes."

It takes its name from the reading of Psalms, xci:5, "So that thou shalt not nede to be afraid for any bugges by nighte, nor for the arrow that flieth by day." Our present version reads: "Thou shalt not be afraid of the terror by night."

The reading "bugges" is common to the versions of Coverdale, Matthews and Taverner, all of which might just as well be called Bug Bibles. The Great Bible, the Genevan and the Bishops' have "terrour."

The Breeches Bible is really better described as the Geneva version. It was the work of English religious exiles at Geneva during the reign of Queen Mary. They first revised and printed the New Testament in 1557. It is said to be the first time it was printed in Roman type. It is very beautifully done in small but clear letters.

Another notable feature of this 1557 Testament was that in it, for the first time, the text was divided into verses and italics were used to indicate the introduction of words not found in the original tongue.

Although this was the first Geneva version of the New Testament, it is not the one commonly referred to by that title. The latter was the one of 1560, of which issue only a single copy is known to exist. That is in the possession of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

The first edition of the Geneva Bible was published in 1560, and is called the Breeches Bible because of the reading of Genesis iii:7, "Then the eyes of them both were opened and they knew that they were naked, and they sewed fig-tree leaves together and made themselves breeches."

Although this Bible was never sanctioned by royal authority—it was dedicated to Queen Elizabeth—nor by Parliament, or even by convocation, for public use in churches, it was nevertheless widely used in them and was the favorite version with many of the clergy. As for the people themselves, they liked it better than any previous version, or indeed than any succeeding one until the King James version finally, though slowly, supplanted it.

During the fifty years between the appearance of the Breeches Bible—the Geneva version—and the King James version in 1611 several famous editions appeared. In one of these printed at Geneva in 1561-62 there is a typographical error which gives a peculiar reading to Matthew v:9, "Blessed are the placemakers, for they shall be called the children of God."

The Bishops' Bible, sometimes called the Treacle Bible, was printed in 1568. It got the latter name because in it Jeremiah viii:22, read as follows: "Is there no tryacle in Gilead?" instead of "balm," as in the present version.

It was called the Bishops' Bible because Matthew Parker, Archbishop of Canterbury, with the assistance of eight bishops, revised the Great Bible and produced this version. It is also called the Leda Bible because one of a series of capital letters, designed after Ovid, was used by the printer, Richard Jugge, in this as well as in other books he printed.

The Douai or Rosin Bible is of especial significance because it was the first Roman Catholic version of the scriptures printed in English. The translation was made about the year 1580 by some English exiles at Douai to combat the various Protestant versions, but it was not printed until 1609 "at the signe of the holie Lambe" in Douai.

The college for the education of British Roman Catholics, where the translation was made, still exists in the old walled French town. The version was dedicated "to the right well beloved English Reader." It was called the Rosin Bible because it contained the word "rosin" in place of "tryacle" or "balm."

The King James version, printed in 1611, was the parent of hundreds of subsequent editions. That being the case, it is rather peculiar that there were two separate issues of it in the same year, and that these two issues are named by Henry Stevens, a well-known collector and authority, the Great He Bible and the Great She Bible.

In the former Ruth iii:15, reads, "He measured six measures of barley and laid it on her; and he went into the city." The other says "she went into the city." These were evidently deposited in two different printing-houses as copy, for subsequent editions go in pairs. There were scores of other differences between the two, and the descendants of the He Bible preserve its mistakes, while the descendants of the She Bible inherit its peculiarities.

The Wicked Bible, also named by Mr. Stevens, was printed in London in 1631 by Robert Barker. It gets its name because the very important word "not" was omitted from the seventh commandment. In spite of the fact that Printer Barker declared that the omission was only a typographical error Laud fined the unhappy gentleman £300, with which money he is said to have bought a font of Greek type for Oxford.

The edition, of course, was suppressed, so that copies of it are extremely rare. Only four are known. One is in the Lenox Library, one in the British Museum, one at the Bodleian at Oxford, and one at Glasgow.

Strangely enough, there is a copy in the famous library at Wolfenbuttel of a German edition printed just a year later than the suppressed English one, and containing the same extraordinary error. There are a dozen other mistakes on the same sheet, but none which makes so vital a change in the reading.

Mr. Stevens tells another Bible story which would have appealed to the unhappy Barker. It refers to Cotton Mather, who was made by a blundering typographer to exclaim in a Bible printed in 1702: "Printers have persecuted me without cause." The real reading being (Psalm cxix:161,) "Princes have persecuted me without cause."

In 1638 a folio Bible was printed at Cambridge that is probably the finest ever published there. Yet it contains plenty of errors, among them the famous one which is said to have cost Cromwell a bribe of £1000. It is in Acts vi:3, "Whom ye may appoint," instead of "whom we," which would seem to clear Cromwell.

The Thumb Bible was printed in 1670 in "Aberdene" by John Forbes. It is about one inch square by half an inch thick.

Next come the Loyal Bible and the Republican Bible. These were a polyglot edition printed at London by Thomas Roycroft in 1657. By Cromwell's permission the paper was imported free of duty and in recognition honorable mention was made of him in the preface.

But with the Restoration a change came over the spirit of this edition. The acknowledgment to Cromwell was withdrawn, he was described as "maximus ille Draco" and a fulsome dedication to Charles II was introduced. This is said to have been the first work published in England by subscription.

The Vinegar Bible was printed at Oxford by J. Baskett in 1716-17. It takes its name from a headline chapter xx, "The Parable of the Vinegar" instead Vineyard."

It was the most sumptuous of all the Oxford but was so full of mistakes that it was soon ferred to as "a Baskett-ful of printer's errors."
beautiful appearance could not save it, and now sought for only by collectors.

In 1869 the King James version (1611) was revised
Dr. Blayney. This, commonly known as Dr.
Revisions, was adopted as standard by the Univ
Press at Oxford, and with some modifications the standard except for the so-called revised version

The early printers were not the only ones mistakes. An Oxford edition of 1801 contains a grist of errors. For instance, Proverbs xxvii:2, other man praise thee, and to [instead of not] thine mouth." John xx:29, "Blessed are they that they not seen," which is too well supplied with "theys," Jude, 16, "There are murders," instead of "murmurers

The Oxford edition of 1804 was especially conspicuous for its typographical errors, one of the most being Galatians v:17, "For the flesh lusteth after spirit," instead of "against the spirit."

The edition of 1805 has become famous as the main Bible." It seems that a proofreader was about a comma after "spirit" in Galatians iv:29, was sent up with a query. It came back marked margin, "To remain."

When the printer got hold of it he took it for somehow that the "to remain" was for insertion text, which he accordingly attended to, with this
"——persecuted him that was born after the spirit remain even so it is now." The error appeared edition as late as 1819. The "to remain Bible" plenty of other errors, such as "Rebecca arose and camels," instead of "damsels;" "who hath ears to
"The fishes [instead of fishers] shall stand upon it."

THE MIST AND THE SEA.

The mist crept in from the sea
  Out of the void and the vast;
And it bore the silver rain
A shimmering guest in its train
And many a murmuring strain
  Of the ships that sailed in the past;
Soft as sleep's footfalls be
The mist crept in from the sea.

The mist crept in from the sea
  And folded the length of the shore
In the clasp of its mothering arms
As though it would shield from harms;
And lulled were the loud alarms,
  And lost was the rage and roar
Of the surge, so soothingly
The mist crept in from the sea.

The mist crept in from the sea,
  White, impalpable, strange;
Full of the wafture of wings,
Of eerie and eldritch things,
Of visions and vanishings
  Ever in shift and change;
Silently, hauntingly,
The mist crept in from the sea.

The mist crept in from the sea,
  And bode for a space, and then
It heard the imperious call
Of the deep, transcending all
And it knew itself as the thrall
  Of the world-old master of men,
So, still as the dreams that flee,
The mist crept back to the sea.

A Happy Solution.

THERE had been a long-standing difference of opinion in the Plunkett family concerning the dining-table. Mrs. Plunkett maintained that its legs were too short, and ought to be lengthened at least half an inch.

"It doesn't fit our chairs, Jared, and you know it," she contended. "When we sit down to this table we're too high above it. You could have pieces of wood glued on the ends of the legs. That would be easier than to saw off the ends of all the chair legs."

"I don't agree to your proposition at all, Cordelia," said Mr. Plunkett. "I think the table is just right. But I'm willing to compromise the matter. You have been wanting a hardwood floor in this dining-room for a long time, haven't you?"

"Yes."

"Well, we can have that new kind of hardwood flooring that is laid on top of the old floor. That will raise the entire surface three-eighths of an inch or more, and that will raise the table, of course, just so much. How will that do?"

This seemed to be a fair proposition, and without a moment's hesitation, Mrs. Plunkett accepted it as a satisfactory compromise.—[Youth's Companion.

Fred's Pet Quail.

WHILE cutting wheat, the men found a brood of young quail and caught one for Fred.

He took it to the house and said he was going to raise it for a pet. He shut the little fellow up in a tight chicken coop and fed and watered him two or three times during the day. Still he did not seem very happy.

In the twilight Fred and his sister Nancy sat on the steps of the porch enjoying the fresh, cool breeze.

In the still night, by the hedge, a quail was calling.

"Listen," said Nancy. "It's the mother. She has been all around through the wheat and over by the woods hunting and hunting for little Bob White. Now she is looking for him along the hedge."

Fred did not say anything, but sat with his chin propped in his hands, studying very soberly for a 7-year-old boy. He could not get the thought of the poor mother quail hunting for her little bird, out of his head.

He got up and went around behind the house, and very soon Nancy saw him slipping down by the hedge.

He came back whistling, and sat down as though nothing had happened.

"Did you turn him loose?" asked his sister.

"Oh, yes," answered Fred with a great show of indifference; a fellow could not sleep with that kind of a racket going on."—[New Idea Woman's Magazine.

Evident.

AN old English country gentleman, returning home rather late, discovered a yokel with a lantern under his kitchen window, who, when asked his business there, stated he had only come a-courting.

"Come a what?" said the irate gentleman.

"A-courting, sir. I'se courting Mary."

"The idea! What do you want a lantern for? I never used one when I was a young man."

"No, sir?" was the yokel's reply; "I didn't think yer 'ad, judging by the missis."—[Detroit News Tribune.

On the Wrong Scent.

A PROMINENT citizen of Washington was traveling over a line of railway with which he was unfamiliar. At a certain point the road passes a fertilizer factory, the odor from which is offensive. It is particularly disagreeable to a lady who is compelled to make the journey daily. As a protection from the obnoxious atmosphere, she is accustomed to carry a bottle of lavender salts.

As the train approached the factory she produced the vial as usual, unstopped it and applied it to her nostrils. Presently the odors from the factory began to permeate the car. The Washington man endured it as long as he felt that he could. At last he rose to his feet, and approaching the lady, said, in his most polite manner:

"Madam, may I request you to replace the stopper in that bottle?"—[Youth's Companion.

A Tourist's Adventure.

DISCUSSING the spring rush of Europe, J. Stuart McDonald, the naval officer of customs in Baltimore, said the other day:

"During the last spring rush a friend of mine, a shy young man, had an adventure. My friend, the first night out, played bridge in the smoking-room till about 11, then took a nightcap and retired. But a few minutes later he rushed back pale and worried.

"'Purser,' he said—the purser had been one of the bridge players—'there's a lady in my cabin. You've put me in with a lady.'

"'Rats!' said the purser. 'We don't make errors like that on this ship.'

"And he got out his passenger list

"'You share your cabin with Capt. Maybury,' he said. 'Go on back and you'll——'

"'Notning could persuade me,' the other interrupted, 'to return to that room.'

"'Then I'll go,' said the purser.

"And he did. But he soon returned, smiling and perplexed.

"'There is a lady in there,' he said. 'I'll put you somewhere else for the night. Come and see me the first thing in the morning, and we'll look into this.'

"Well, the next morning my friend sought out the purser, and the purser sought out the stateroom steward.

"'I don't understand it,' said the steward. 'Capt. Maybury's the gentleman assigned to that there room. Here's an unlocked portmanteau of his'n. Suppose we open it?'

"They opened it, and their eyes fell on a lace petticoat, a corset, and hairpins.

"'By jingo,' said the purser, as he took up a book that lay beneath the petticoat, 'I see it all now. She sent her name in as Capt. Maybury, but she never said she was in the Salvation Army.'"

The Blind Man's Ruse.

G. BOURCIER ST. CHAFFRAY, of the Zust car, said at a dinner in Michigan City of a loss that he had more than made up:

"I made up that loss cleverly, did I not? It is like an old blind great-uncle of mine whom my father used to tell of. My great-uncle once buried $4000 in gold louis under a pear tree in his garden. His neighbor saw him do it, and in the dead of night came and stole the money, replacing the earth carefully.

"Some days later my uncle brought 50 more louis down to the pear tree for burial. He soon discovered his loss, and silently weeping, he, too, replaced the earth.

"He knew whom to suspect, and that night he called on his neighbor. He seemed thoughtful and distrait, and the neighbor asked him what oppressed his mind.

"'Well, I'll tell you,' said my great uncle frankly. 'I have 1000 louis hid away in a safe place, and today a tenant paid off a mortgage, and I have another 1000 louis in cash on my hands. I don't know whether to seek out another hiding-place for this money or to put it where the other is. What do you advise?'

"'Why,' said the neighbor eagerly, 'if your first hiding-place is safe—and you declare it to be so—I should certainly put this other money there, too.'

"My great-uncle said firmly that that was what he would do; it was the wisest course. Then he took his leave.

"And when, next day, he went to the pear tree again, there, sure enough, was his lost 1000 louis, all put back again."

The Widow.

"RUDYARD KIPLING, when he dined with me," said, with some pride, a literary Chicagoan, "told me about Simla.

"It seems that Simla is up in the mountains—the hills, as they say in India—and the ladies go there in the hot weather to escape the heat of the low country.

"Well, Kipling said that, one lovely, cool morning at Simla, he was presented to a grass widow. They call those ladies grass widows whose husbands are detained by work in the hot cities of the plains.

"She was awfully pretty and charming, and as they talked together in the pleasant coolness, Kipling said:

"'I suppose you can't help thinking of your poor husband grilling down below?'

"The lady gave him a strange look, and he learned afterward that she was a real widow."

A Tramp, or Possibly a Bum.

"DON'T confuse," said the other day in Washington John Ellis, the well-known apostle of the unemployed—"don't confuse the hobo, the tramp and the bum, for these men are very different one from another.

"The hobo," Mr. Ellis went on, "works and wanders. The tramp dreams and wanders. The bum drinks and wanders.

"This man, for instance, would not be a hobo.

"He rang the bell of a suburban house, and when the master appeared he said earnestly:

"'Could you, sir, for the love of heaven, give a hard-working but unfortunate man some employment?'

"The householder laid his hand cordially on the other's ragged shoulder.

"'Here's work for you right on the spot,' he said. 'I've got out in my backyard a great pile of wood that——'

"'Thank you, sir,' said the man, as he shook the hand from his shoulder gently. 'I'll let my friend know at once. It's not for myself I'm hunting a job, but for a friend a little way up the road.'"

Not a Cross-breed.

"IS that your dog, John?" queried the mistress with a smiling glance at the strange mongrel that hid behind the coachman's heels.

"No, ma'am," replied John, "he just come in this morning, and I haven't got the heart to drive him away."

"He looks like a cross-breed, doesn't he?" returned the lady.

"Oh, no, ma'am," was the assuring rejoinder of John, "he isn't a cross-breed. He is a cheerful breed. He has done nothing but hang around and act happy ever since he came in."—[Home Magazine.

The House Beautiful—Its Flower Garden and Grounds.

LANDSCAPE GARDENING.

A BETTER APPRECIATION OF IT IS MANIFESTING ITSELF.

By Ernest Braunton.

IT is only in the past few years that a general interest has been shown in landscape gardening in America, and California is only beginning to show a little appreciation of the art. The central section of our State has numbers of good examples; we of the south have comparatively few. Of late (the last two or three years) a decidedly better taste is manifest, though more in evidence in suburban and rural districts than in the city proper. As the country becomes older and more thickly settled we are to witness the establishment of rural homes and estates of sufficient area to call attention to all that is best in landscape gardening if we are given examples worthy of study and emulation.

We have sufficiently advanced to know that the beauty and attractiveness of a home lies not alone in the house, but primarily in the surroundings. If the latter has not been skillfully treated, a home it can never be in the full sense of the work, no matter how much wealth may be lavished upon the interior. The house needs a fitting and harmonious setting, a framework of suitable trees, shrubs, plants and vines properly placed to make an artistic finish for the whole. Time has been when all the available funds were spent upon the house. No expense was spared to procure the best possible house design, while the laying out and planting of the grounds were left to the coachman-gardener or some handy laborer who remained to clean up the builder's débris. We are pleased to note that these practices are every year becoming fewer in number and that the landscape designer is receiving proper though belated recognition throughout Southern California.

Madame Alfred Carriere.

Among the old-fashioned roses of climbing habit and delicate tint none are more deserving of retention in the list than Madam Alfred Carriere. It is one of the hybrid noisettes and often produces fine roses of white, though more often tinted with blush or nearly as often with yellow, and sometimes both tints are in evidence, giving a creamy white rose tinged with blush. While never counted by nurserymen a strong seller. there has been a good sale of this rose during the past score of years and with many it is a prime favorite.

Acacias as Economics.

According to a government report one thousand acres planted in black wattle (acacia decurrens) should yield $150,000 worth of tan bark at the end of ten years. According to a recent estimate, there are upward of 4500 acres of black-wattle plantations in New Zealand and upward of 60,000 acres in Natal. In new Zealand there is no good market for the wood, and no attempt is made to utilize it commercially. In Natal the wood is commercially more valuable than the bark, being largely utilized in timbering mines, a purpose for which its strength and durability make it exceptionally valuable. Some of the New Zealand plantations have reported net profits of $80 per acre from the tan bark alone, placing sales of wood at nominal value over against the interest on the investment and taxes. Some of the South African wattle plantations have yielded as high as $500 per acre, gross returns, from the sale of tan bark and wood, but in this case the timber value averages 50 cents per tree. In Hawaii a black-wattle forest can be carried through from planting to maturity at an age of ten years at a cost of from $60 to $80 per acre, figuring the wood as a waste product. With careful management the higher figure should include the cost of harvesting and marketing the crop.

The Mango in California.

We sincerely hope that plant and fruit lovers in the most favored parts of Southern California will give the mango a fair trial. The tree is a most beautiful one and the fruit has been called the "King of Fruits." The tree will not fruit except in absolutely frostless spots, and should even be kept free from chilly weather and also from winds. Therefore our warmest and best protected nooks only should be utilized.

Italian Gardening.

We have many in Southern California who seek to follow the Italian style of gardening without even considering the fundamentals, dealing with incidentals alone and with none of these very pronounced or effective. Italian gardening is the most costly of all styles, and no one in Southern California has yet spent a sufficient sum on the gardening art to make even a fair beginning on a strictly classical Italian garden. The scheme should embrace extensive and pronounced terracing; elaborate decorations of architecture and sculpture and gorgeous water effects with fountains, basins, cascades, etc. Our so-called Italian gardens are mere child's play.

Interpretation of Nature.

If those who seek to design their own gardens would rely less on what their neighbors have done and more upon observation of natural effects, we would at once note a higher standard of garden building. When problems perplex we should rely upon nature to help us in the solution. It is in this line that the sufficiency of the landscape student shows clear in the landscape builder, for he will succeed only in so far as he is able to reproduce fundamentals as suggested by nature.

All desirable effects, both fundamental and incidental, may easily be found in nature, and in Southern California at no great distance for nearly everywhere we have a much broken and variable topography. Shrub-flanked lawns, tree groups, shrub masses, rockeries, ponds, water-falls and all sorts of garden effects are within easy reach of the landscape student. If you wish a fernery, remember that this class of plants require, for perfect development, special aspect, soil and treatment. Visit nearby cañons and let nature reveal to you the special requirements of the fern, and you will return home with the knowledge that they require shade, moisture, leaf mold, and perfect drainage. Thus may you learn valuable and never-to-be-forgotten lessons in fern culture, and all garden knowledge may largely accrue through the same charming line of instruction. Back to the wilds and close to the soil for all that is worthy of reproduction.

Temporary Screens.

Where unsightly objects or views are in evidence from the garden they must be blotted out by proper planting. In order to effect this, however, it is not necessary to plant eucalypts or other unsuitable vegetation simply because of its rapidity of growth. Use the plants you desire, placing them in their proper positions and after put up a temporary screen by growing some rank vines. There are many vines that will more quickly and effectually hide the undesirable objects than any tree growths. Morning glories, climbing peas and beans, and many other climbers may be used and give entire satisfaction.

MADAME ALFRED CARRIERE.

Plant Some Shade Trees.

Every one must have noticed how bare, desolate and uninviting is the so-called home without one or more shade trees. Few yards are so restricted in garden area that at least one suitable shade tree may be grown. Do not depend forever on porch or awning for summer shade; allow time, care and early provision to rear you some shade linked to nature; do not live amidst wholly artificial surroundings.

The Home Wood Lot.

Owners of rural or extensive suburban homes have taken up the woodlot fad by using a plat of ground in the rear or to one side of the ornamental grounds for the dual purpose of affording play or picnic grounds and fuel for the family hearth. For this purpose the best tree is no doubt one of the red gums (Eucalyptus rostrata or E. tereticornis,) for the red gums grow nearly as fast as the blue, have a higher fuel value and work up into firewood much more easily.

LAUGHING BIRD OF AUSTRALIA.

To the outside world the greatest ornithological oddity in this country is the kookaburra.

In earlier times it was known as the "settler's clock," from a belief that its joyful paeans were vented regularly at morn, noon and dusk, being quiescent through the heat of the forenoon and the wane of the afternoon. That belief has long been shattered. The kookaburra laughs just when the fit takes it, particularly when excited; and it laughs as readily at the violent death of its mother-in-law as it does at the enraged settler, when he falls off his haystack. A wounded bird makes a demoniacal row, which will bring all others within hearing into the neighboring tree, and these at once set up an echoing cackle that is repeated again and again.—[Sydney Times.

FLOWER SHOWS.

BECOMING POPULAR AS A MEANS OF RAISING FUNDS.

THIS seems to be a year of flower shows as a means to raise funds for public improvement, several towns having held or being about to hold, local exhibitions for the purpose of forwarding some enterprise looking to civic improvement. The two next on the programme are at Hollywood and Glendale respectively, on the last day of the present month and the first day of May.

That the lesser cities about Los Angeles are able to hold flower and plant exhibitions which prove in every way satisfactory has been clearly demonstrated by the Pasadena flower shows, where each one has been managed at a profit. As a means of raising funds to carry on civic improvement work they are to be commended and the move would prove popular with any community. As a private enterprise such an exhibit in small places would result in financial loss.

Poor Street Work.

Until one year ago street gutters in Los Angeles were often made with loose cobble stones with sand filling. In instances where the street was also oiled the contract did not require the gutters to be oiled. In consequence such work proved to be mere child's play. The sand washed away, carrying part of the underlying soil and in many cases the stones as well. During summer these [illegible] grow full of weeds, through the interstices between the stones, and these can only be removed by [illegible] each plant individually. Only where oil in ample supply flowed in the gutters are they worthy of [illegible] or in reasonably good repair.

Another most unsatisfactory piece of work may be found in all parts of the city in some of our oiled streets. The contractor grades the street by plowing and scraping down to a level and then makes a crown with what comes from the gutters; when the street is finished, there is little loose soil at the sides and much in the middle. The traffic is of course largely on the middle one third, and on hot days the oil is forced out and oozes from that point where the soil is thinnest, to the great disgust of drivers of delivery wagons and still greater disgust of the housewife or servant who finds the nasty mess over rear steps and the kitchen floor. Streets thus constructed are still "leaking" after a year of traffic while the middle portion is already dusty. It is evident that more thorough work is needed, for streets constructed as herein outlined are not to the abutting property owner the amount paid for the so-called "improvement."

Vacant Lot Committees.

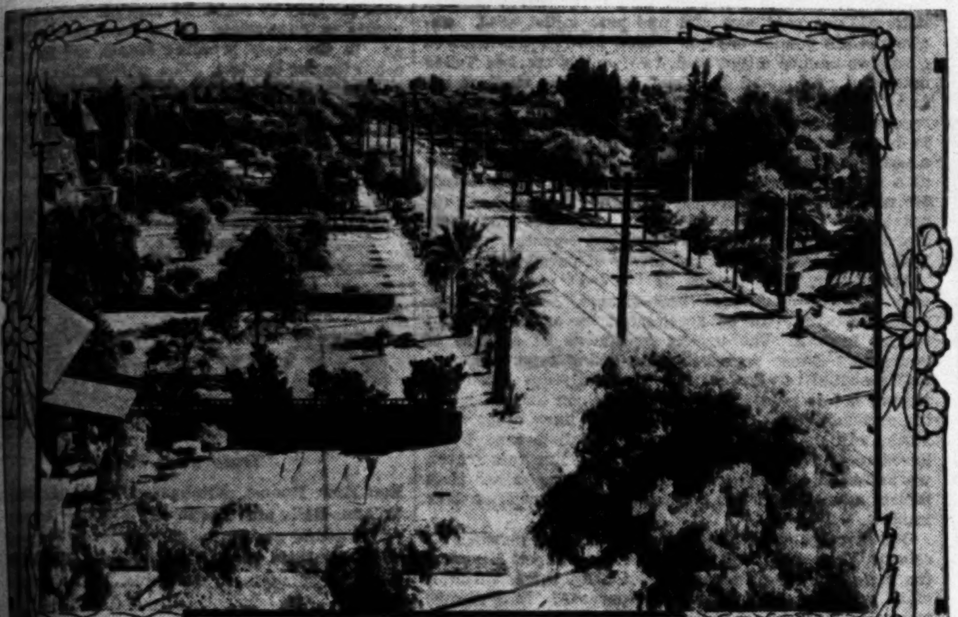
If you live in a town where there is no improvement society, get a Vacant Lot Committee appointed from your Board of Trade, Woman's Club, Literary Society, or some like organization. Visit all vacant lots, find owners, either in person or through correspondence, and labor toward keeping them clear of weeds and rubbish at all seasons of the year. This particular phase of civic betterment is all that some improvement clubs aim to do, and there is nothing in the average town that so badly needs attention and zealous supervision; nothing that adds more to the general appearance of a thickly-settled town or village or that will give such good returns for labor or money expended.

Group Planting on Streets.

In many leading eastern cities with fine, wide parkways the natural grouping of trees is reproduced instead of the single tree planted at regular intervals. Some of the finest tropical effects possible may be obtained in Southern California by the use of bamboos on the streets. There are species just as drought-resistant as any of our trees used for the same purpose, and a great deal better suited in other material points. All hail to the day when we may have an avenue of bamboos. It would call forth the unstinted admiration of both Californian and visitor.

Care of the Child.

During the past few years the best thought of many able men and women has been given to the care of the child when away from home, but more especially in providing school gardens and playgrounds. Many of these and similar movements are under way in all parts of our country looking to the amelioration of conditions and surroundings during the hours of study or recreation. It is probable that every one is productive of good results and collectively they must be most beneficial, more so than we at present may compute. It is highly probable that these public moves are also the quickest, most effective methods of improving home conditions, thereby raising our standard of life along all lines.



MIDWINTER IN PASADENA—EAST COLORADO STREET.

Roses on Streets.

In many instances, especially where palms are the main feature, roses have been used for alternate planting in parkways. This scheme has been carried out by Mr. James Mills in his extensive street planting on Arlington Heights, Riverside. Several years of experimentation and observation has led to the belief that the common Ragged Robin rose is the best suited to the purpose, and Mr. Mills has chosen this one for the official "street rose." Others have planted many varieties with satisfactory results. Very seldom (if ever) does the alternation of palms and trees harmonize, and the combination of palm and rose is as productive of pleasing effect as any combination yet made in street alignment.

Planting School Yards.

Keep the center of the place free. Do not scatter the trees and shrubs over it. They will be in the way. The boys will break them down. Moreover, they do not look well when scattered over the whole area. When an artist makes a picture with many people in it, he does not place the persons one by one all over his canvass. He masses them. Thereby he secures a stronger effect. He focuses attention rather than distributes it. Most persons make a yard a nursery by planting trees all over it. The same trees and shrubs can be used to make either a nursery or a picture.

Begin with the fundamentals, not with the details. If an artist is to make a portrait, he first draws a few bold strokes, representing the general outline. He blocks out the picture. With the general plan well in mind, he gradually works in the incidentals and the details—the nose, eyes, beard. Most persons reverse this natural order when they plant their grounds. They first ask about the kinds of roses, the soil for carnations, how far apart hollyhocks shall be planted.

It is as if the artist first asked about the color of the eyes and the fashion of the necktie; or as if the architect first chose the color of paint and then planned his building. The result of this type of planting is that there is no plan, and the yard means nothing when it is done. Begin with the plan not with the plants. The school ground should be hollow—well planted on the sides, open in the interior. The side next the highway should contain little or no planting. The place should be a picture, not a mere collection of trees and bushes.

WHERE ASBESTOS COMES FROM.

"It may not be generally known," said E. A. Nimiun, who lives in Natrona county, Wyoming, where the largest asbestos vein in North America was recently discovered, "but it is true that asbestos is a mineral that comes out of the ground. The entire supply of the United States has until recently been furnished by Canada.

"The discovery of this large vein in Gasper Mountain has caused considerable excitement in that vicinity. Its existence has been known for a long time, but it had never been known to exist in such large quantities.

"Unlike other minerals, asbestos is quarried rather than mined in the regular way. The market value of the product ranges from $50 to $500 a ton. The United States Geological Survey and the State Geological Survey of Wyoming are doing much to develop this recent discovery.—[Washington Herald.

Practical Poultry Culture in the Southwest.

DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF STANDARD-BRED POULTRY AND THE PEOPLE WHO GROW IT.

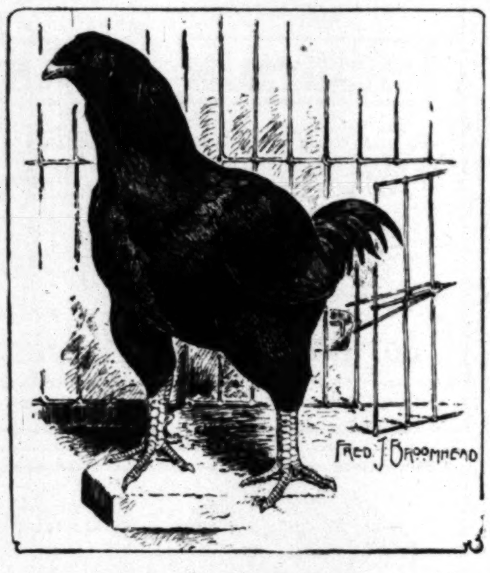
FERTILITY OF EGGS.

THE PROBLEM AS TO WHAT PER CENT. WILL HATCH.

REPORTS come in here and there that eggs are low on fertility this year; in other cases buyers complain that they are being "done up;" that when $3 to $5 is paid for a sitting of eggs, fertility must go nearly 100 per cent. These people are usually among those who "count their chickens before they are hatched." As a matter of fact, the buyer of eggs for hatching is buying hen fruit purely for that purpose, and not live chicks—hence he is taking chances and in the transaction assumes the risks. Experienced breeders fully understand this and usually accept the results without complaint; the novice and beginner, however, is quite apt to think otherwise.

To secure a hatch of 60 per cent. is really good; even less is not necessarily bad, especially if the stock is high-grade. Indeed, it often happens that a $5 setting of eggs hatches a $25 specimen. In that case the buyer has certainly received good value for his money. It seldom happens that an entire sitting proves abortive; then what is a fair and equitable basis?

Naturally, responsible breeders take every precaution to secure fertility, and stand ready on reasonable proof to "make good" to the buyer. Among many this takes form in a sort of provisional agreement, namely, that the eggs he tested out on the sixth or seventh day, and all perfectly clear eggs to be taken out and returned to the seller by the eighth day after shipment, carriage prepaid. The clear eggs (possessing no germ) will at once be replaced. This is certainly liberal to both parties.



A TOP-NOTCH CORNISH FARAL MALE.

Beyond this, however, there are other considerations governing the equities in the transaction. Eggs bought at a distance are quite sure to suffer in transit; hence the buyer should make some allowance on a probable hatch; improper handling, neglect on the part of the buyer's sitting hens or in the operation of the incubator; accidents of one kind or another, are all factors to be considered. In the writer's experiences the two extremes have been met; with thirteen eggs coming from Kansas he hatched eleven Silver Gray Dorking cocks and one hen; in another case of Black Breasted Red Game bantams of twenty-six eggs from New York State he got just one hen. In both cases there was no complaint. The one hen won first prize as a pullet and hen, and then sold for $10.

No man knows what nature will do. One 95-point specimen is worth thirteen culls. This being so, why not accept the results (whatever they may be) and call the trade closed when the money goes forth for a sitting of pure-bred eggs to a reputable breeder of standard poultry?

A Voice from Arizona.

Frank Bascom, Morenci, Ariz., writes: "I have read with much interest the article in last Sunday's Times, in regard to the care of incubation chickens. As I am expecting to go into the chicken business on a fairly large scale in about six weeks, and having but a sparse knowledge as to the proper and best and most sanitary means of bringing up the chicks, I am writing you to ask if you will not be good enough to give me a little information?

"I note that you say 'It is a losing love labor to concoct soft foods for feeding the soft downy chicks,' and that you recommend small seeds. What kind or kinds of seeds do you recommend, and where could I procure same to best advantage from here? You also say: 'The most perfect specimens of the egg layers should not be forced to egg production during December, January and February, if we want them in the breeding stock.' Now I will soon be in the market for a few hundred eggs for hatching—White and Brown Leghorns and Black Minorcas, which breeds I understand are the best layers. Where is a good place I can procure same? Also, in what way can you force hens to lay?

"My idea is to have at least 1000 chicks in about a year or fourteen months after starting, hatching them in lots of about twenty-five each, two or three days apart. Of course, I desire to learn all I can with regard to the matter, and I would be glad if you would tell me where I can procure literature bearing on the subject, which will enable me to successfully start and develop a good chicken ranch.

"While I am overstepping the bounds of custom in thus seeking your aid, I do so because your articles appeal to me to the degree that I think you have a greater and better knowledge of the chicks and the proper ways of bringing them up, than any one else of whom I know."

Of late years there has been a general tendency to discard the "wet" foods and give wider prominence to the "dry." In a state of nature mash foods are unknown, and the hen being anything but a water fowl or wading bird, it is reasonable to assume that seeds, green stuff and insect (animal) foods constitute the ration of chicks. To go into all the details of chick feeding is almost impossible in a single article. They should, however, not be fed anything until twenty-four hours old. For the first meal hard-boiled eggs chopped fine, shell and all, mixed with three times its volume of stale bread or cracker crumbs is excellent. Some breeders continue this for a week, though in our own case we begin to feed a chick food within a couple of days, tapering off on the egg ration as rapidly as possible—say at the expiration of five or six days. Millet seed, finely cracked corn and wheat, pinhead oatmeal and broken rice may be scattered in the litter—it will pay to screen the ration in order to remove the meal and larger pieces. A good mixture is two parts wheat, two parts pinhead oatmeal, one part rice and one part millet seed. Another is ten pounds cracked wheat, four pounds cracked corn, two pounds millet seed, two pounds cracked hulled oats, and one pound fine beef scraps. In view of the fact that preferred chick and poultry foods are now a regular feature of the market, we question the economy in breeders mixing their own feeds, unless they have access to local markets affording the necessary grains at a low price. Indeed, in California the larger breeders now buy the prepared article, finding that they cannot obtain the raw materials and grind and mix them any cheaper. In addition to the above, be sure that your birds have access to grit and plenty of pure water.

Specifically, hens cannot be "forced" (made) to lay eggs at the command of their owners. Their development, however, can be accelerated by extra care and special feeding. The perfect specimens of a flock of youngsters—those possessing the laying type and pugnacity should be allowed to become fully developed and mature before placed in the breeding pen and subjected to reproductive functions. Chickens, like other live stock, will not reproduce the best of their kind if allowed to breed before fully developed. For this reason we prefer to hatch eggs from mature hens rather than pullets, even though the latter be fine specimens of their kind.

Our correspondent is quite within the limits when he selects White and Brown Leghorns and Black Minorcas for egg-laying requirements. But why three varieties when any one would answer his purpose? It is always more economical to handle a large number of fowls of one breed, than it is the same number of three or four. When it comes to dividing the sexes, segregating the surplus males, and isolating ailing specimens, it requires a less number of yards and detail work, if the flock is composed of a single breed. Consult the liner and display advertisements of The Times and you will be placed in touch with a number of people who handle the above breeds. In writing, be specific to mention just what you want, and the date of delivery.

If you contemplate going into the egg business, a thousand head is scarcely enough to make the venture "a business enterprise," as at least one-half of them will be males, and in spite of every precaution, you will suffer some loss. But why hatch in lots of twenty-five? That is surely prolonging your operations and conducive of much extra work. Why not fill two 220-egg incubators and "go to it" at once? In this way you bring up a batch of youngsters subject to the same care and feeding; while in your way, the labor will be repeating itself over a long period of time, thus making it irksome.

Touching literature calculated to be of assistance to you, we suggest "The Chick Book," J. H. Robinson's "Poultry Craft," "Poultry Houses and Fixtures," and "Successful Poultry Keeping." Any of the above can be supplied by the poultry-supply houses of Los Angeles.

An Expedient Against High-Fliers.

When hens fly high and over a six-foot wire net, and one does not want to cut their wings, stretch a wire about six inches from the top of the net all along the confines of the pen. When the hen expects to land on the wood brace holding the wire at the top, and finds a single wire taking her across the breast will not let her alight on the wood, she will have to fall back into the yard, and will not try many times, finding it useless. A hen flying up six feet wants to land somewhere before going over. A high flyer may get wise and fly clean over, but it is unusual; if she does, an additional wire six inches above the first one will probably regulate conditions desired; if one has to stretch several wires, one above the other, it is cheaper than wiring the top of the pen, and better than cutting the wings.

White Diarrhoea in Young Chicks.

This trouble has been one well calculated to tax the ingenuity of breeders in finding the cause and a remedy. For the most part people have imagined it due to cold and exposure; others that improper feeding was responsible. Recent investigations by the Wa cultural Department and by experts in the Canadian government seem to have proven clusively that neither cold nor bad feeding to do with it. These people conclude that it able to imperfect assimilation of the yolk by the onic chick. In addition to this, however, the lungs of young chicks are ulcerated and tubercles. The Canadian poultry sharps call it rhoea, which must certainly be bad, and unabsorbed yolk and the white discharge.

If this diagnosis is correct, it is obvious is not to be looked for, as certainly environ dition nor feed or treatment can alter what a fault while the chick is yet unborn. The is to breed only from robust parentage, sess health and vigor to overcome the trouble "get" or offspring. It is estimated that from per cent. of all chicks hatched perish from rhoea.

Care of the Sire.

At all times of the year, the sire of a breeding poultry should be carefully treated. The disposition during the breeding season will fertility of eggs. Rheumatism during the winter must be avoided, and is most easily contracted with energy enough to fly up and perch six a tree, is in splendid condition. But if he a night and one of our winter rains sets in during the night, he will be able to hold to but will be worn out with anxiety, wet and cold light. During the rain, he will perch in the in frivolous weather, when rains pour and showers only at night, he may get caught two nights in succession. If he does, he is doomed sire in the early breeding season, and not in condition for the late. The most healthy sire and gets rheumatism from exposure easily, ily than the hens; he should be made to house every night in winter. If the sire has tism, you may count on infertile eggs. If a little chick gets a little constipated, give it a drop of table oil, not castor oil, and rub oil over the closed vent to soften it.

The Mental Attitude.

Not long since the writer happened in on one of our larger poultry farms just at feeding time in the evening. On entering the yards he heard a word that will rhyme nicely with lamb, and a "shoo" with the usual gesticulation of arms which put the birds to flight in all directions. Finally, when the flock commenced to pick up the grain, it was noticed that all of them were in an excitable and nervous condition. Every time their owner moved or spoke, a wave of dread and fear overcame the flock, with the result that there was a waste of nervous energy that must be inimical to both egg production and a plump carcass. This at once showed a mental attitude toward the hen that almost stands for failure. Indeed, the dividing line between a pleasurable duty and an onerous one is after all merely a matter of mind. If your business does not afford you pleasure in its exploitation, get out of it, or you will "go broke" at it at the wind-up.

The attitude toward the birds should be one of pleasure and a zealous care for their welfare. It must be one of love and likeness for the bird—to study its needs and requirements and meet them in a spirit of joy. It is only under such conditions that the highest results are possible with a flock of standard-bred poultry. Closely allied to this one must have continuity of purpose—persistence and a healthy courage. And by courage we do not mean the kind that is allied to martial music, but that greater courage that plods on mastering difficulties until the good of success is attained. That exaltation of spirit that is keenly and sensitively alive to the fact that perfection is only for the gods, hence we can always console ourselves that no matter how good our product may be, it is always possible to make it still better.

With the present low price for hen fruit some breeders seem to think the business is in "hard lines," but that of itself shows a mental attitude at once suggestive of weak courage which foreboded careless and ultimate failure.

A little hard thinking will often make a seemingly difficult problem work out quite successfully. What is your mental attitude toward your flock? One of pleasure or one of indifference? If the latter get out of the business and give the other fellow a chance.

Cairo University.

MORE THAN TEN THOUSAND STUDENTS OF ALL AGES.

From New York Sun.

IT may not occur to many visitors that Cairo is a university town. Such, however, it is, and as such it is known and regarded with respect all over the kingdoms and principalities of Islam. Millions of Moslems who have never heard of the Khedive are interested in Cairo, not because it is a great and wealthy city, the capital of Egypt, but because it is the seat of the University of El-Azhar. For that establishment is the chief seminary of the whole Mohammedan world, the gathering ground for all those who would make themselves proficient in the learning of Islam, the training-school for the priests and doctors of the Faith.

In the mere number of its students and its professors, writes Sidney Low in the London Standard, it surpasses all academies and colleges, not merely of the East but of the west also. Oxford and Cambridge, Berlin, Harvard, are small compared to it. There are over 10,000 boys and men, of all ages from 12 to 60, receiving instruction at El-Azhar, and the teachers, the sheiks, ulemas and tutors are counted by hundreds. Like the European universities in the Middle Ages, its constituency is cosmopolitan rather than national; it draws its pupils from every part of the three continents in which orthodox Mussulmans dwell.

Even as students used to come from Scandinavia and Sicily to Paris and Göttingen, so they now flock to El-Azhar from all the lands of the Prophet. There are Syrians, Moors, Algerians, Turks, Tunisians, Bosnians from the Adriatic, and Mongols from near the Pacific, Afghans, Punjabis, Abyssinians and Somalis, blue-eyed Circassians and ebon-hued negroes. It is a microcosm of Mohammedanism; a museum of those various populations, white, brown, yellow and black, who make up the 200,000,000 of the children of Islam. There is no place like it anywhere, and nothing in Cairo so well worth seeing.

I waited outside in the mud of the squalid lane while the guardians of the gate inspected the letter of introduction I had brought with me from the Sheik Ahmed El-Aghary, the head of the Wakfs bureau, a learned doctor in Moslemism and likewise an enlightened administrator who knows and admires the ways of the English. My credentials being found sufficient, I was invited to put felt slippers over my boots, and thereupon conducted through the maze of vast courts and great corridors. The place is confusing owing to its size and the mass of humanity which crowds every inch of the enormous floor space.

It is like knocking off the top of an ant hill and looking down upon the myriads of black insects that swarm about the galleries. Men and boys were in heaps and knots and circles all over the ground. After passing through the outer quadrangles you come upon the Liwan, or great hall of lectures. It is an immense covered shed with a long roof, supported by a forest of columns of every shape and size. There are nearly 400 of them, every one robbed from old churches and temples. The classes and the teachers are scattered all over the floor, packed so close together that often it is difficult to make your way between two of the groups.

Here and there the professor has a wooden chair and a table, but as a rule teachers and pupils are alike sitting of squatting on the ground, with their robes gathered under their bare feet and their shoes laid out in front of them. The walls and pillars and planking are fairly clean, but not all the students are; some are even filthy and ragged, and a reek of promiscuous humanity fills the air. The din, too, is bewildering, for all the teachers are talking to their classes at the same time, and half the classes are repeating or reciting something, or droning verses from the Koran or the service books, bending their bodies up and down in unison with the monotonous cadence.

The black-bearded sheiks put a good deal of energy into their work, shouting, expostulating, and explaining vigorously, but their efforts did not always meet with much response. According to the rules no pupils are admitted below the age of 16, but this regulation is not strictly observed, for many of the students were mere children. These boys were alert and interested, and when there was a class mainly composed of them the drone rose into a shrill chorus and the bodies were swung up and down like those of a racing eight.

The elder students were of all ages and conditions; some quite gray and old; some intelligent young Syrians and Egyptians with clear-cut, good features; some wild Arabs from Yemen; some mere grinning savages from Somaliland and the Upper Nile. Some too were evidently taking in the words of the teacher with attention, while others lolled about half-asleep, listless and stupid perhaps from hunger; for many of these learners are in the lowest depths of poverty. No fees are paid by the students, the whole expenses of the establishment, including the salaries of the teachers, being met out of the Administration des Wakfs, a sort of Egyptian ecclesiastical commission which disposes of the vast revenues belonging to the mosques and religious and charitable foundations.

A considerable proportion of the students are in the position of the sizars and poor scholars in our own medieval universities; they not only obtain their education free of charge, but they also receive a daily allowance of food and a small stipend. About a thousand are lodged and boarded in El-Azhar itself; others find quarters in some of the neighboring mosques. Many are married and live with their wives and children somehow and somewhere in the purlieus of the native city. Once the student is admitted to El-Azhar he stays practically as long as he pleases.

Some do stay half a lifetime dawdling over the sacred texts, droning over their lessons day after day, hanging about the Liwan long after they have lost any interest they ever had in learning and any real desire to enter the priesthood, simply because they have cut themselves adrift from the active world and do not know where to turn for food and shelter and companionship if they were to leave the great swarming caravanserai.

On the upper floors are the cubicles in which the college students live. They are bare little oblong apartments, scantily furnished (but one does not have much furniture in the east,) water-tight and whitewashed and kept in fair order by the university servants. Some of the inmates are ragged, dirty and churlish; others clean and courteous. In one room I found four intelligent and polite Syrians, with whom, by the aid of my guide, an English-speaking young clerk of the Wakfs office, I entered into conversation. One of the four was a middle-aged man, who had been for ten years at El-Azhar.

The full course lasts twelve years, and those who aspire, so to speak, to a degree in honors, may stay two or three years longer or more. This Syrian seemed to think that his ambition to become a really learned doctor in Islam would hardly be satisfied until he had spent at least fifteen years at the university. His companions were, by his standard, almost freshmen, youths of two or three-and-twenty in second or third years, and they regarded their senior with fitting respect.

None of the four belonged to the class of poor students. They had good clothes and comfortable rugs and coverlets to their angariebs, and they showed me, behind the doors of a glass-fronted bookcase, quite a respectable little library of Mohammedan theological literature, the gem of the collection being a volume setting forth in intricate detail the genealogies of the descendants and collaterals of the prophet for several centuries.

One of the four was a young man of means, who owned a silver handled cane and perambulated Cairo in a tarbush and an overcoat. He evidently belonged to the smart set of the university, and had, indeed, as he explained, only been sent there by his father in order that he might return to his native village with a reputation for general culture and polish. The others intended to become ulemas and seemed to be sedulous and even enthusiastic students. These Syrians were pleasant, intelligent fellows, all of them very different from the unkempt, semi-civilized creatures I saw in other dormitories, and one felt sorry that their alert brains were being wasted and fuddled over the antiquated futility that passes for learning at El-Azhar.

For this seminary is the workshop and arsenal of Moslem obscurantism. Modern science, modern literature, modern history, modern philosophy are unknown. A little algebra is taught and, I believe, some astronomy, though I fancy that in the latter branch of study the system is that which was accepted before the age of Copernicus.

The principal of the El-Azhar University receives a salary of about £1200 a year and is a highly-important personage, dividing with the Grand Mufti and the Grand Kadi at Constantinople a sort of spiritual headship of Islam with the duty of safeguarding the religious law and observances.

Farming in California—The Land and Its Products.

CONDUCTED BY J. W. JEFFREY, STATE COMMISSIONER OF HORTICULTURE.

FIELD NOTES.

A Mild Rebuke.

IN a recent letter published by the California Fruit Grower, the president of a pear-blight remedy takes me to task in a very gentlemanly way for speaking without information regarding the efficacy of the Vacaville application. I have no ulterior motive in advising conservativism in medicating the roots of plants to destroy disease in the branches. The president of this remedy company complains that I have never visited orchards treated by the new process, and he says the pathological departments of the State and of the United States have kept shy of an investigation likewise. My opinion upon the value of the Vacaville remedy is not important, and was given from analogy, and from having lost a valuable pear orchard from this fell disease in the East. Because I am an official of the State, charged with executive duties, any declaration I may have made on this subject will not impress the pear growers very forcibly, and I admit that I could not tell if the remedy were doing what is claimed for it were I to visit the treated orchards a hundred times. And I doubt if our experts could pass upon its efficacy without a long and patient investigation.

In speaking of walnut-blight, a disease of the same class as pear-blight, Prof. Smith recently said: "The idea of obtaining any treatment which will be a remedy for the blight has been given up, and progressive growers are turning their attention to solving the question otherwise." Prof. Waite writes to the remedy people: "If you can demonstrate under experimental conditions, by which other factors are kept out or subordinated, that your remedy will cure or prevent pear blight, we shall be only too glad to have you do it and we shall be pleased to follow up and take observations on the trees or orchards in which you claim success." So the efficacy of this remedy is to be officially considered. In the meantime we shall have to wait in the state of the usual uncertainty, but the pear-blight remedy will still remain on sale.

Impatient of Delay.

SOME of my regular correspondents occasionally express impatience at the tardiness of results in the investigation of blights and other obscure ailments of plant life. The same delay is noticeable in other lines of investigation. I will give two or three cases that have fallen under my observation lately that show the necessity of careful procedure in order that conclusions may be of value. Seven years ago the introduction of cotton culture began in Arizona and California under direction of experts. The variety of Egyptian cotton which made the poorest showing for several years and was considered a failure, now stands first in production. Last year it yielded two American bales to the acre, and distanced all but one variety of an improved upland kind. One of our best grapes was years in winning its way to even a considerable acreage, yet now it is grown by trainloads of fruit. A prominent cling peach was known ten years before its merits were thoroughly demonstrated to the peach men of the State.

On the other hand, consider the millions of money that have been lost by planting hastily to worthless or unadaptable citrus and deciduous fruits from Siskiyou to San Diego. And the foolishness of planting to fads or overpromising varieties is still in evidence throughout the State. In the determination of decay in citrus fruits the experiments have been rapid and remarkable in results, yet three years have passed in the examination of this subject. They have been years of likeness to each other in rainfall, absence of frost and general conditions. So far Mr. Powell has not seen anything to modify his early conclusions. Perhaps they would be different in some essential points were this able investigator's work to follow a period of extreme cold, or a series of dry years such as was experienced following the season of 1897. I could give many instances to show that the conservative time-killing way is the only way to reach valuable conclusions. The hasty investigator is a misfit and of no real value to our fruit industries.

Profitable Oranges.

NOW this note is not to be a large but true story of some one who last year produced thousands of dollars' worth of oranges from one acre of ground. It is to be an answer to a Chicago man who wants to know how long orange culture has been profitable in California. I wonder if he has heard of the winter of our discontent in 1903-4, and supposed that up to that fatal season there had been no profitable seasons. I think he means to inquire how long oranges have been cultivated commercially in California. In that case the answer is, about sixty-seven years. In 1834, 74 years ago, there were 987 orange trees at Santa Ynez, 1600 at San Fernando, and 2333 at San Gabriel. But these were growing about the missions for home use. The San Gabriel trees were planted during Jefferson's administration, and the plantings of the other missions were made long before the secularizing invoice was taken in 1834.

The first commercial orchard was established in the present city limits of Los Angeles in 1841, by William Wolkskill, and it consisted of less than 200 trees. About forty-five years ago plantings were made at San Bernardino, and by 1862 there were estimated to be 25,000 trees in the entire State. In 1872, however, something happened in Brazil which has effected the entire State second only to the discovery of gold in 1848, or the development of wheat culture following the exhaustion of surface gold. William F. Judson, United States Consul at Bahia, discovered the now famous navel orange, sent six shoots from a swamp tree to the Department of Agriculture at Washington, and the enterprise was launched a few years later at Riverside in the reception of two trees from the Brazilian scions. So we may date the real day of profitable orange growing with the introduction of this fruit, though some of the seeding orchards had turned out thousands of boxes long before this, and some of these orchards had become very profitable.

Waning Pear Industry.

COULD the pear-blight have remained foreign to California, which might have been the result of very strict quarantine fifteen years ago, what a difference would now be observed in some of the greatest fruit belts of the State. Three or four years ago the output of pears reached nearly 1800 carloads shipped as fresh fruit, 425,000 cases canned and over 5,000,000 pounds dried in one year. This was the last season preceding the general spread of the blight. Now the industry is ruined in many of the heaviest productive sections of former years, and in some counties pear growing will be entirely discontinued in a year or so unless the people wake up and make a thorough attempt to check the disease. In one county all but two or three growers will take out their pear trees as soon as the present crop is harvested. No such complete destruction was ever before witnessed in the line of fruit growing. After resting the land a few years and destroying the bacilli from lack of food, the industry of pear growing may resume its normal importance.

Boys to the Farm.

THE impression with the young men of the nation is that there is no field for them either in honor or profit in running a farm. They look at the menial side of the question with a clear light and do not see the prestige and financial benefits that may be attained by systematic, and semi-scientific tillage of the soil. My business brings me in contact with scores of men every year who are making good in small farming and fruit growing every year. Few of these have had the advantage of any agricultural education except what experience and observation has given them. Granted an early agricultural education and the success of these men would have been more pronounced, for college instruction does not warp or lessen a man's common sense, and it does equip him in some measure for taking hold of farm problems by the right end which is equivalent to some understanding of what he should do before the time of action is at hand. To avoid mistakes in the initiation of an enterprise will send it far along toward success the same as a good foundation for a house makes for stability no matter what the character of the superstructure that is erected thereon. A generation ago millions of farmers could not provide a proper seed bed for their wheat. Consequently the care in fencing, harvesting and marketing the crops was subject to the mistakes of seeding time.

Farms are isolated by the very reason of their existence. The young man, prone to hang around the centers of human activities does not see the fruition of the work of the successful farmer. He sees the success of an occasional merchant or tradesman, and overlooks the fact that more of this class fail than do an equal number of farmers; he observes the career of a fortunate attorney or physician, and does not know that the same intellectual exertion applied to the land is producing more immediate revenue to the farm than can be attained by the average lawyer or doctor at the end of his first decade of practice; the young man does not realize the infinite application, the continual avoidance of mistakes, the grilling demands of emergencies through which the successful professional man has passed. If he could know in advance the disappointment, the labor and anxiety of the mercantile or professional man; that a good farm specialized or professionalized in like manner would be more lucrative on the average and certainly less grinding, he would oftener turn to the farm against which manual labor and isolation are the chief charges. I know both sides of this from practical experience and shall try to induce my boys to take an agricultural course unless my wife continues to insist that Mr. Four-year-old shall become a minister.

An Embargo on Rooted Vines.

A NUMBER of the counties have ordinances absolutely prohibiting the introduction of rooted grapevines and most of the other grape counties look askance at them. In view of the fact that there has been an almost phenomenal planting of grapes, especially the table varieties, in many of the northern counties in the past two seasons, the growers there are becoming uneasy about the Anaheim disease and phylloxera and every precaution is taken to prevent these pests from gaining admittance into clean sections. Both vines and cuttings from infected sections should be barred, but cuttings from clean sections are not dangerous. It is so easy to start a vineyard from cuttings, that there is little hardship in not allowing rooted vines to be admitted and, as even a section supposed to be free from phylloxera may be infested, it is well to place an embargo on all rooted vines. There is no danger of spreading this serious vine pest in cuttings, as it is found only on the roots in our California vineyards.—[California Cultivator.

A Tourist's Experience.

A GOOD of friend of mine, a prominent attorney of Illinois, has his own views as to the time oranges should be removed from the tree. They should be gathered in a waning light. Inasmuch as he ha State his advice will be received as from one whereof he speaks. In acknowledging the late address at Marysville he writes: "I disappointed, however, in one thing. I did any suggestion as to the best time to pick I do not claim to be an authority on orange the care of ripe fruit, but from what little have had I favor picking oranges in the moon, especially if the orchard is close to the the proprietor happens to be at one. One is more careful in picking them without the the moon, and it is better for the health of In sending his regards to Mrs. Jeffrey he that he has known her since she first dresses, and had rocked her to sleep many she was a babe. The Fate of the Unprogessive Farmer.

THE agricultural colleges are reaching year; the Federal lecture courses, a million year. What will the effect be in a generation It is disappointing to have to record that the farmers are remaining practically untouched by movement; but the new generation and the quickly adopting scientific methods. One of the men in the West today is putting his daughter the full four-year agricultural course that able to manage the estate that will fall into and a foremost physician of Chicago, who bought a 75,000-acre farm in Mexico, is having take not only the four-year university course, years' post-graduate as well.

What will happen to the old-line farmer, to take up the new methods, will be just ready befallen the old-line mechanic who adopt scientific machinery. With the handi gaged farm and his own ignorance, he will out of the procession and become the success hired man.—[Agnes C. Laut, in Outing Maga

Gardening in California—Flower and Vegetable.

Garden News.

NOW is the most glorious season of all the year for gardening—clean up, stir the soil—plant. In the gentle springtime all animal life is enthusiastically and therefore energetically astir, and the thoughts of both young and old lightly turn to things of the garden. Now you must stir and delve, prune and train, retard and encourage, for now is the formative period for seasonal growth and neglect of a few days or a week may mean much in the weeks and months to come.

The soil has been hard tramped all winter, beaten down by heavy rains, and needs aëration, ventilation and exposure to sweeten it, render the plant food available and place it in proper physical condition. Planting, except of strictly tropical vegetation, should be rushed to completion as soon as possible or the season of greatest possibilities will have passed. Get the benefit of that quick and luxuriant plant growth that always comes at this time; then let it ripen or mature, and flowers and fruits will be produced in perfection and profusion. The Loganberry.

I HAVE answered several queries this spring on this subject, and now find it treated fully by A. M. Aspinwall, of Oregon, as follows:

"There are several ways of propagating the Loganberry. My practice is to bury the ends of the vines in the fall several inches under ground. During the fall and winter these tip ends strike root when, during the warm days of spring, they can be cut from the parent plant and transplanted. I very much prefer good, strong tips to transplants a year or more old. A much larger percentage will live, and the canes produced from tips will be stronger.

"The cultivation of the Loganberry naturally divides itself into two branches. First, growing them for home use, and, second, for commercial purposes.

"Every family may have a plentiful supply of this luscious fruit if but a half-dozen plants are set out and properly cared for. Even in growing the berry for market the space occupied by the vines need not be large to keep an average family busy during the harvesting season. As a yielder the Loganberry has no equal. On good soil and with proper cultivation an acre of the vines will give an average yield of 500 crates, weighing twenty-four pounds each, or a total of six tons of berries. Under more favorable conditions, eight tons per acre is not an uncommon crop.

"Having decided the object and extent of your planting, the next step is to select a suitable location. A flat tract is preferable to a hillside because of the greater ease of cultivation and trellising and the less likelihood of the winter rains washing the soil. Select a deep, rich, dark loam, if you have it. The plants and vines will then reach their maximum growth. A clay soil is to be preferred to one of sandy or gravelly texture because of the added moisture within reach of the roots while the berries are maturing.

"Any good soil with a fair amount of fertility, however, will grow an average crop of berries if properly handled. Good returns are secured from sandy or gravelly loams where there is enough fertility to grow grain crops profitably.

"Drainage is important. Keep the water from standing on the surface. If the water does not draw off naturally draining should be provided.

"Planting, I prefer the month of April if the condition of the soil is right. The oncoming warm days will start the young plants into new life, causing them to become well rooted before the dry season sets in.

"Do not make the mistake of crowding your plants. Give them plenty of room to secure the necessary air, light, and soil in which to spread their roots. I prefer to set the plants in rows eight feet apart each way, making 680 plants to the acre. Most of the cultivation is done with plow, harrow and team.

"The first year the vines will not make much growth, and do not interfere materially with their cultivation until about the 1st of August, after which they frequently put out eighteen or twenty feet, or even more, before winter. The second year about one-third of a crop may be expected. The vines should be trellised during the previous fall.

"Build your trellis substantially. Use good, strong cedar posts and set them not over thirty-two feet apart in the berry rows. Securely fasten to these three or four No. 12 galvanized wires, spacing them equal distances apart. Now train each vine separately on the wires and see that each wire carries its full share of the weight. If practicable have the trellised rows running north and south, thus the vines are much better protected from the winds and ripen more evenly as they get both morning and afternoon sunshine.

"As a general rule, the Loganberry needs but little thinning. Do not thin out until more than a dozen canes appear in a hill, and then remove only the weaker ones. The yield will be larger and quality of fruit improved if the pruning shears are not used too freely. A fair amount of foliage on the vines for shade is an advantage.

"Cultivation should be thorough and frequent. I prefer to plow both in the fall and spring, turning the furrow against the rows in the fall, where it is left undisturbed till spring, when I turn it into the center between the rows, then use either the disk or the spring-tooth harrow until in July or at least until harvesting begins. Start the cultivation in the spring as early as the ground can be worked, and go over the surface at least once each week to retain as much moisture as possible. This will add greatly to the health and vigor of the canes, and is of the first importance in the development of a full crop of large, firm berries."

Fix Up the School Grounds.

THERE is no place in the world where a little time spent in improving the grounds around a house will show for more than in California. And there is no country so favored which shows more neglect in this respect than California. What is applicable to our houses is doubly noticeable to our country school grounds. Not once in a hundred times do we find a school where the grounds have received any attention. They are bare, neglected and distressing to look upon. We do not have to go to the rural districts, away from the town, or city, to find this condition, for it exists everywhere. Not once in a hundred times do the trustees or the patrons of our schools take an interest in how the buildings or the grounds look, for as a rule, the country people do not appreciate the value of the schools as they should. There may be some excuse for our city schools because the expense of providing large grounds is often so great that it cannot be afforded. But in the rural districts this drawback is not felt. Usually an acre is secured and this is ample for all purposes. It would be an easy matter to lay off the grounds so that flower beds could be made on them without interfering with the room needed for exercise. Then it is an easy matter to plant trees along the property line which will afford shade for the children when at play or during the noon recess. And what a different aspect these slight improvements would impart to the place, and what a different feeling the teachers and children would have about it.

A great many teachers in rural schools would like to improve the buildings and grounds, but they are helpless because they receive no encouragement from the farmers or their wives who are directly interested. There are a great many children, too, who would gladly assist in the work of making flower beds, and in caring for them, if they were given the opportunity. There is a great deal more of refining influence in a child than we who are older realize, but too often there is no chance given for the display of that sentiment. What we ought to do would be to encourage our children in early life to gratify their desire for the beautiful and to afford them an opportunity to receive correct ideas of the wonderful secrets of nature. One thing we ought to remember: no teacher, nor pupil, can do the best work in a dilapidated school building amid neglected surroundings. When we come to appreciate that there is a lot more to education than what is gotten from textbooks, we shall understand better the value of our rural common schools. Pupils imbibe careless ideas and slovenly ways from dirty school buildings and neglected surroundings. The woman's clubs of California can do no better work than to inaugurate a campaign for improving rural school buildings and grounds. It would be a work which would tell everlastingly on the habits of the boys and girls and make for good along the lines of higher education. The question is, will they engage in such a campaign?—[California Cultivator.

John Chinaman, Gardener.

ONE of our suburban Californians writes: For the past three years it has been my pleasure and privilege to observe the methods of a Chinese gardener nearby and humbly imitate his procedures in my own modest "truck patch."

Although in his own country "John" was a water carrier by occupation, he has during his few years' sojourn here acquired a store of agricultural lore calculated to inspire his neighbors with envious admiration.

For example, when his young lettuce reaches the height of two or three inches he does not eat or throw away the young plants in the process of thinning. Instead, he clips off about an inch of the root tip, and replants them in long rows, placing the plants at least a foot apart. This transplanted lettuce forms heads of such an immense size that at a short distance the bed resembles a cabbage patch.

His onions, which he always grows from the seed, disdaining the use of cloves or sets, have their roots clipped when transplanted, and grow to be larger than an ordinary saucer in an incredibly short time. He transplants beets in precisely the same manner as the lettuce and onions.

When he cuts off the lettuce heads for market he waters and cultivates the bare stalk, which heads out again in about one-third the time required to grow it from the seed. He treats his cabbages in the same way, except that he allows the outside leaves to remain attached to the stalk. The second head is small and has no white center, but he finds a ready market for it among the lovers of boiled greens.

"John" saves his pumpkins and squash seeds by leaving them inside the pumpkin or squash, as the case may be, until the planting season. Then he opens the aforementioned vegetables and plants the seeds with the fresh pulp clinging to them.

He wraps his muskmelon seed in a tow sack and buries them in rich soil, keeping them very moist during the few days which pass before the seeds sprout. He then plants them and they appear above the ground with mushroom-like rapidity.

Once, contrary to his advice, I set tomato plants on a spot where ashes had been thrown for several years. The vines grew to an enormous size and had many blossoms, which dropped off in a few days. One day "John" observed this, and with great solemnity came over and cut and hacked the branches of the plants almost half in two. Although this was in the latter part of July, the drooping, half-severed vines were soon loaded with tomatoes, and continued to bear until killed by frost in December.—[Rural Californian.

The Soilless Garden.

THERE is many a housewife that would very much like to decorate her rooms with growing flowers if the general muss and dirt incident to their culture did not make her hesitate. For such, nature in her benevolence has made ample provision. There is a large variety of bulbs and other plants which will produce leaves and blossoms merely by being placed in or sprinkled with water. Their culture is of the simplest.

Perhaps the best known of these is the Chinese sacred lily, also known under the name of joss lily. The bulbs should be put into a glass dish partially filled with pebbles to hold them in place, and if necessary to prevent them from floating. The water used must be tepid and entirely cover the bulbs. Then place them in a warm, sunny situation and you will not need to wait so very long for their flowers. The hyacinths also make willing subjects for the soilless garden, but their culture differs considerably from that of the foregoing. Specially-constructed hyacinth glasses can be bought upon the market, though these are not absolutely essential to success. The underlying principle of their construction is to keep the bulbs free of the water, while allowing the roots to grow down into it. Any ordinary vase can be made to serve the purpose, for the bulb can be held in place by means of wire on a small piece of board with a hole in it. After these bulbs have been placed in a vase and the water added, they demand to be put away in a dark closet until their roots have grown down into the water, which is a matter of some time. After sufficient root development they can be given a warm place in a sunny window, where they will soon flower. The single tulip can also be grown in water culture.

All bulbs once used in water culture are useless afterward, as the plant lives on the stored-up food in the bulb. Similarly all such seed as store up food for the future seeding can be induced to germinate and often to carry the young plantlets to quite a stage of development. Of these the acorn is a good example and will with care produce quite an oak tree. Further pretty effects can be produced by sowing some such seed as the fine grasses, cress, or linseed in wet clay or flannel. These seeds germinate very readily, remain green for a considerable time, but must always be kept moist. The linseed may be brought to flower.

The fern balls that can be bought at most florists need no description beyond stating that with care they can be carried over from season to season. Another very curious specimen for these gardens is a variety of the resurrection plant known as the Rose of Jericho. All this strange plant requires is that it be immersed in water and then placed in some sunny situation where it will upon up into the freshest green. As soon as the plant begins to lose its healthy green tint it should be dried off and stored away to be used again after a time. If upon immersion the plant does not thrive as well as it should, it is a sure indication that it has not had a sufficiently long resting period, and it should at once be dried off again and put aside for a longer time.—[Orange Judd Farmer.

Walnuts.

"DURING the past ten years the acreage of Euglish walnuts in Southern California has increased many fold by planting of thousands of acres of these trees. The tree is naturally long-lived, hardy and a large and regular bearer. Yet during this period the crop of nuts has not only failed to increase, but has gradually decreased. The production today is no greater than it was ten years ago, with very much less acreage at that time and less than one-half of what a conservative estimate would indicate for the number of existing trees. At the same time our imports of walnuts from foreign countries are steadily increasing, so that in the year 1906 we produced about 6000 tons in California, and the country imported over 16,000 tons, mainly from France. There is no more attractive horticultural pursuit than walnut growing. The work is clean, easy and unconfining, the product valuable, useful and not easily liable to injury or deterioration. What then is the trouble? The grower says: 'Walnut Blight.' In immune trees lies the only permanent and satisfactory solution of the walnut blight problem. That such trees are not a dream of the future, but already exist, has been demonstrated to the satisfaction of all who have taken the trouble to look into the matter."—[Prof. Smith.

Care of the Body—Suggestions for Preserving Health.

CONDUCTED BY HARRY BROOK OF THE TIMES STAFF.

PRACTICAL HYGIENE.

[The Times does not undertake to answer inquiries on hygienic subjects that are merely of personal interest, or to give advice in individual cases. General inquiries on hygienic subjects of public interest will receive attention in these columns. No inquiries are answered by mail. For the Kindergarten Class.

THOSE who have been readers of the Care of the Body for some length of time—say for a year or more—seldom send in any ridiculous or vexatious questions. It is the newcomers—the "tenderfeet"—the kindergarten class in hygiene, who have only lately come into the Care of the Body family that keep the editor's basket supplied with all kinds of fool questions, which serve to show how dense is the ignorance of a great majority of educated people—so-called—in regard to the simplest and most rudimentary laws of health and disease.

It is no wonder that quacks and patent-medicine manufacturers continue to multiply and flourish.

"Do tomatoes cause cancer?"

"What causes a sharp pain in the left-hand side of the belly?"

"How soon after a man has a bad fit of temper is it safe to stay in a room with him?"

"How many oranges can a man eat daily?"

"What do you think of Kuram's Kurlikulin?"

And so on, and so on, ad libitim, ad nauseam, ad desperandum.

There are, however, so many new scholars entering the Care of the Body class, that it is only right and proper for the kindergartners to be given a show once in a while. So here goes:

Question. What is disease?

Answer. Disease is an effort of nature to eject from the body superfluous morbid matter, that has been accumulated therein by low activity of the depurating organs, the consumption of too much food, or wrong kinds of food, or the continued breathing of foul air. Disease is beneficent, and should be encouraged. It is a house-cleaning process. If there were no disease the human race would die off like rotten sheep.

What would you think of a man who sat on the safety valve when the steam began to escape? That's what the doctors do when they give drugs to sick people. Funny, ain't it?

Q. What shall I do when I am sick?

A. Go to bed and stop eating. Open your room, to let in the fresh air, and open your body, to let out the foul matter, through the pores, and the bowels—the latter by means of a few good injections. When you are thirsty sip cool water, containing a little fruit juice. For congestion and pain apply hot cloths, and in fevers frequent cool sponging. That is all.

Q. Can drugs cure disease?

A. Drugs never have, or ever can "cure" disease. When a sick person is given drugs, which are poisonous interlopers, and are so recognized by the human system, the man is given the added burden of ridding himself both of disease and of the drugs. Consequently, unless he has an extra strong constitution nature often gives up the unequal contest, and the patient dies. For every sick person who dies of what we call "disease," thousands are killed by drugs and unnecessary food that cannot be digested, but lie in the stomach and rot, greatly lessening that person's chance of recovery. At other times drugs may suppress the healing process of nature, in casting forth impurities, and drive them back into the blood. Then the doctors call this a "cure." On the contrary, it is another nail driven in that man's coffin.

Q. What food shall I eat?

A. Any natural food. The natural food of the herbiverous animals is grass. The natural food of the carnivorous is flesh. The natural food of birds is ripe grain, also fruits. The natural food of the anthropoid apes, from whom man is descended, is fruit, and nuts, and grain "in the milk"—green corn. To this you may add green leaves, such as lettuce, and watercress, and celery, and vegetables, a reasonable amount of ripe grains, in various forms, milk, eggs, cheese, and, if you please, a little meat. The main objection to flesh food is that it always contains some of the excremental matter in the animal when it dies, only a small percentage of domestic animals being free from disease. No right thinking person will eat such filthy food as kidneys and liver, containing the urine and bile that the animal would have passed off had it lived. These are especially rich in uric acid, which all flesh contains.

The flesh of swine is a particularly undesirable and dangerous food. A large proportion of the hogs killed at the Chicago packing-houses are diseased. To eat hogs that have been fed on slaughter-house refuse and garbage, is to invite disease—and to deserve it.

Fish is a food entirely lacking in iron. This is why people instinctively eat with fish watercress, which is rich in iron.

Artificial, and consequently unnatural foods, are refined cane sugar, which contains none of the essential organic salts, polished rice, which contains only a fraction of them, and white flour, which is very deficient in these necessary minerals. Also, when you boil vegetables and throw away the water, containing a large percentage of the organic salts, you might about as well put on green goggles and eat shavings, or chew tea leaves after throwing away the tea.

Chloride of sodium—common table salt—is a slow poison, the ejection of which from the system involves a heavy burden on the depurative organs, especially the kidneys. Get your chlorine and sodium from natural foods, especially fruits and vegetables.

As to "mixed diet," so often prated about by shallow "authorities," as the editor has pointed out, it is the most illogical of all diets, the only omnivorous animal being the hog, and then only after he has been "civilized" by man.

Q. What food is good for the kidneys?

A. See preceeding paragraph. Any food that is "good for" the kidneys is also good for the liver, and lights, and lungs, and brain—for the whole man. There is but one disease, although there are many symptoms. Therefore, there can be but one diet, and the statement that "one man's meat is another man's poison" is false, except in so far as this, that some people with sick stomachs cannot eat things that they ought to be able to eat. That, however, is not the fault of the food, but of their stomachs. Don't kick about the food, but mend your stomach. An exception to this statement may be made to this extent, namely, that a small man, doing light sedentary work, in a mild climate, requires only about half as much food as a large man, doing heavy physical work, in a cold climate.

The quantity of food is really of more importance than quality, for the normal juices of a healthy body will dispose of many undesirable food substances. Ninety-nine per cent. of those engaged in light sedentary work eat from two to three times as much as they should, largely because they swallow slops with their meals, and consequently do not chew the food thoroughly, so that they swallow more than twice as much as is necessary, before they feel their appetites appeased. Then the food lies in the moist warm stomach, rots, emits gas, which presses in all directions, and there is the devil to pay—also the doctor.

Q. When shall I eat?

A. When you are hungry. And remember that there is a vast difference between "hunger" and "appetite." When a piece of dry bread tastes good to you, then you are hungry. Two meals a day, omitting breakfast, with a fast once a week, from one evening meal to the next, the editor has found the most satisfactory plan, in his case.

Q. What is the best way to avoid catching a disease?

A. As frequently set forth in these columns, during the past few years, there is no such thing as contagion, in the ordinary acceptation of the word, or the "catching" of a disease from another. It is a barbarous superstition, kept up by the medical fraternity, to increase the awe in which the profession is supposed to be held by the multitude, and also, incidentally, to increase their incomes. Useless quarantines, founded on this false theory, have been the cause of an immense amount of needless expenditure and suffering. You can "catch" an epidemic disease from another just as you can "catch" an attack of seasickness from another passenger, on board ship. When atmospheric conditions are favorable for their development, and when there is a sufficiency of filth lying around loose, disease in some form is apt to become epidemic. Then, if you have foul matter in your body, you are likely to "catch" it, in a form, severe or otherwise, according to the amount of foul matter in your blood. If your blood is perfectly pure, you can no more "catch" a disease than you can set fire to iron filings. Otherwise, if there are shavings there, the fire will be great or small, according to the amount of shavings present.

Has the teacher made this plain?

Now, that is all, for today. Run along, little people, and let the teacher call up some of the grades.

Oh, yes. One more thing. Before you come again, learn "by heart" the standing notice appearing every week at the head of this department. Also don't write: "Won't you please repeat the article on—— you published a short time ago?"

* * *

Epidemics and "Contagion."

HALF a dozen persons committed suicide in Los Angeles during the first two days of April—quite an epidemic.

It's a wonder the doctors didn't call it "contagious" and quarantine against the corpses.

This would be just as reasonable as to declare that one person can "catch" smallpox, or scarlet fever, or diphtheria, from another, just because many cases—owing to atmospheric conditions—happen to occur at the same time.

Mineral Waters.

A CALIFORNIA chemist says a glass of white sulphur spring water contains much more sulphur than a dish of fruit dried and packed in California.

True enough. But then, sulphur water isn't good, either. Any benefit you may derive from it is due to suggestion, plus the wetness.

Get your sulphur from such foods as spinach, and cabbage, and cauliflower, and radishes, where you find it in the organic state—the only state in which it can be utilized by the body.

It follows from the above that all the benefit derived from visits to mineral springs is due to the change of climate and surroundings, the rest of mind and body, the use of water internally and externally, the (sometimes) simple diet, early hours, and life in the open air. These things are quite enough, in addition to the power of suggestion, to effect many cures. The mineral in the water is a drawback—an obstacle to Nature's work, that has to be cast forth from the body. Pure water, containing no mineral—or not more than ordinary drinking water contains—would be much better. It would, how-

A French Doctor on Diet.

DR. ARMAND GAUTIER, of the French Academy, has published a book entitled "L'Alimentation et les Régimes." A Paris dispatch gives what purports to be a synopsis of his ideas. You can't always trust these dispatches, when they treat of such subjects.

According to the dispatch, Dr. Gautier claims that a increased consumption of meat increases the craving for alcohol. Absolutely false and illogical. As the editor has frequently shown, an excess of proteid, as found in a …at diet, calls for a balance, in the shape of concentrated carbon, which is found in alcohol, or candy. A starvation diet of emasculated foods, in which the organic salts are lacking, will create a craving for alcohol.

Dr. Gautier admits that a vegetarian diet is "not only …times sufficient, often it is even advantageous." He further quotes sporting records to show how non-flesh eaters have displayed greater endurance than their meat-eating competitors. True enough. A Himalayan coolie will put up a mountain side, over big boulders, carrying on his back the amazing weight of 575 pounds—as testified by a London Times correspondent, who accompanied the Younghusband expedition into Thibet—and do it on a diet of rice and melted butter, while members of English trade unions, who must have their three square meals and their daily beef "to keep up their strength," are limited by union law to a load of fourteen pounds.

Dr. Gautier also admits that on such a diet "the character of a man becomes more supple and his mind …" Then he separately goes on to observe: "Man, as a matter of fact, is not constituted to be herbivorous." … added. The herbivora eat grass, the carnivora eat …, birds eat seeds, and the natural diet of man, as of the anthropoid apes from which he is descended, is fruit, … and grain "in the milk."

This is an incontrovertible scientific fact, that is not … affected by the further fact that a large proportion … mankind for thousands of generations, have strayed … his natural diet, and have taken up the unnatural habit of devouring the flesh of living beings.

… Diet.

… THOMAS J. ALLEN, of Aurora, Ill., who recently … some attention in the press by living for … on peanuts, writes to the editor, as follows, in reply to an inquiry as to the result of his experiment:

"The fundamental point which I have been trying to demonstrate is the theory that I call 'monodiet'—that only one article of diet should be eaten at one meal, or at least only articles that harmonize fully. I have contributed an article to the Independent on this which may appear soon."

Dr. Allen is quite right. As the editor has so frequently insisted, the main thing in diet is to eat few varieties at a meal, to eat dry, and to chew the food thoroughly. The robust health enjoyed by many races is not due to the eating of any special food, whether nuts, or rice, or buttermilk, or potatoes, but to the fact that the food is simple. A steady course of French dinners, from cocktail to cigars, would soon give a wild hog cholera.

Peanuts, by the way, are a poor food to select for an exclusive dietary. The peanut is not a nut, but belongs to the pulse family, and like the other members of that family contains a certain amount of xanthin, the equivalent of uric acid. Also, peanuts contain far too large a percentage of proteid and fat. With a peanut diet, plenty of fresh fruit or green leaves should be eaten, or sickness would certainly result. This refers to cooked peanuts. Raw peanuts are about as appetizing as soap.

Protests Against Vivisection.

ONE of the most encouraging signs of the forward march of our neighboring republic is the growing sentiment against the cruel national "sport." In this Mexico is ahead of its parent country, for the English Queen of Spain is forced, against her will, to attend "official" bulfights, for fear of giving offense to the populace.

A Los Angeles man tells of a bullfight he attended in Mexico where the management, as an additional attraction, guaranteed that one man would be killed. Well, so far as the editor of this department is concerned, he would rather see half a dozen of these fellows slain than to see one poor, decrepit, blindfolded horse dragging its entrails along in the sands of the arena. You may sometimes see a dozen such pitiful spectacles during a bullfight.

The editor has his private opinion—which he will not express publicly—of Americans who visit such disgusting exhibitions. The natives are excusable, for the lust for blood has been bred into the Latin race for a hundred years, since shrinking Christian maidens were torn to pieces by wild beasts to make a Roman holiday. Of them it may be said, as Jesus, when on the cross, said of his persecutors: "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do."

We, however, have our own particular crime of cruelty to answer for—a crime to which we have called special attention during the past three weeks. Bullfighting is not one-tenth as horrible as vivisection.

The following communication on this subject has been received from John Darwin Gish, an attorney of San Francisco:

"I read with appreciation your article of March 22 attacking the practice of vivisection. This method of so-called scientific investigation is becoming one of the great brutalizing tendencies of this generation, and is fraught with distinct menace to the social order.

"A careful observation of our criminal and juvenile courts demonstrates that the brutalization of the sensibilities is the first long stride toward criminal practices. The boy who tortures animals in this youth is a potential wife beater, robber, or murderer, and needs only the incentive to become such in fact. Whatever, therefore, blunts the sensibilities and stimulates cruelty in the young is preparing a population for the jails and prisons of the next generation.

"This is just what vivisection with its intellectual and scientific sanction is doing. Practices are indulged in that would shame the rudimentary conscience of a boa constrictor. It brutalizes the men who perform the operations, the students who witness them, and the world at large that comes in contact with these brutalized and perverted minds.

"Concerning the value to medicine of the information obtained through vivisection, or the accuracy of the deductions therefrom, I am not able to speak with authority, but I am informed by eminent medical men of my acquaintance that the value of the information is questionable and the conclusions deduced therefrom as applied to the human mechanism are grossly inaccurate and misleading. [Ample medical evidence of this was adduced in the article referred to. Ed.]

"If we are prepared to assert that the physical health of the individual human animal is the summum bonum of creation, then by all means let us proceed in logical and scientific fashion, and forthwith deliver over to our brethren of the scalpel the entire population of our hospitals, insane asylums and almshouses. Thus we will at once relieve society of a grave burden and give to our medical friends much congenial occupation for their leisure hours, from which they might be able to deduce some accurate conclusions concerning the construction and operation of the human machine. To those who can argue that the advantages of vivisection as it is practiced today justify the price paid, this suggestion must appeal with great strength.

"But if on the other hand we agree with eminent authority that man does not live by bread alone, that he is a mental and spiritual as well as a physical being, then let us resolutely eschew those practices that brutalize the mind and pervert the spirit, even if it appear that there is some possible resultant benefit therefrom, to the body.

"Life and health are treasures much to be desired, but even for life and health we may pay too great a price. Many noble men in the ages past have freely given their lives that society might rise out of the barbarism and brutality that encased it. The tendency of vivisection is to thrust society back into barbarism and brutality and to the moral and mental degradation of the period of the inquisition.

"We are assured that the merciful man shall receive mercy and mayhap there will come a time when divine mercy shall prove quite as essential to our continued well-being as even a Pasteurized injection. Let us remember that

"He prayeth best who loveth best
"All things both great and small
"For the dear God who loveth us,
"He made and loveth all."

In "Success" Edwin Markham recently wrote as follows:

"The test of a man's character is found in the way he treats a so-called inferior. So a good test of our civilization is found in the way we treat the animals placed under our care. It is no wonder, then, that thousands of men and women are crying out against the abominable cruelties to animals practiced by irresponsible vivisectionists in the name of science. Holes are drilled into the skulls of living animals; their backbones are sawn asunder, and other revolting cruelties are laid upon trembling and defenseless creatures.

"Such deeds not only agonize the animal, but they animalize the experimenter. In many places any one can vivisect without restriction. There is now in New York a strong effort of the friends of humanity to put the whole matter under legal restriction—to provide for regulation, record, and responsibility.

"The Johnson Bill, No. 256, now before the New York Legislature, at Albany, is an attempt to protect our animal friends against needless torture. That bill should become a law; and I wish ten thousand of my Success Magazine readers to write in favor of this bill to members of the New York Senate and Assembly. Be a voice to speak for our dumb friends who have no language but a cry. Write, and do it now."

We again suggest that those opposed to the gross abuses of this odious practice—and this should include all right-thinking men and women—join the Vivisection Reform Society (secretary S. R. Taber, 532 Monadnock Block, Chicago, membership $2 per year,) and subscribe to "Our Dumb Animals," published at 19 Milk street, Boston.

Learn to Relax.

THE average American city dweller does not appreciate the advantage of getting away occasionally from the grime and noise of the crowded streets. Our English cousins are wiser. To them the country is the real thing. Business and society people alike only stay in town as long as they have to.

Here, in Los Angeles, we may choose from the sea on one side and the mountains on the other. Both are within less than an hour's ride of the City Hall. To get the best from either, you must, however, know how—you must have the love of Nature in your heart, with an inclination toward the Simple Life. A trip to one of the beach towns or a couple of weeks' stay there, where you meet the same people, discuss the same topics, eat the same grub, and perhaps spend the evenings in ill-ventilated halls, is of little use as a rejuvenator to the jaded business man. He wants to change his clothes, actually and metaphorically—his material and mental clothes.

As between the mountains or foothills and the ocean, the latter, in the opinion of the editor is better for the nervous and overworked, especially for those who suffer from insomnia. The mountain air in Southern California is light, dry and electrical, that of the seaside is heavier and more soothing. The pounding of the breakers on the shore is one of nature's lullabys.

The editor of this department recently ran down to lunch with Charley Lummis, at his seaside retreat—literally a "retreat"—away out near the end of the old breakwater that skirts the harbor of San Pedro. Here, for about a mile, extend picturesque fishing shacks, with toy gardens, and big brown nets, and marine relics. It looks like a page out of one of Dickens's novels. The editor found "Lum" in a costume that the most exacting hygienic dress reformer would have approved of, diligently cutting up driftwood. Fish lines were stretched from the backyard into the bay, where the ships go by, with bells for the fish to signal when they were hooked. Rather rubbing it in to the denizens of the shallows, that, isn't it?

It's true that Lummis carries his typewriter with him, when he goes down from Saturday to Monday, which the editor regards as a mistake, but he gets a complete change of surroundings, and comes back to the Public Library on Monday morning ready for the week's fray.

Go thou and do likewise, Mr. Busy Businessman. Learn to relax—to let go.

Rational Treatment of Pneumonia.

A CORRESPONDENT strongly recommends onion poultices for pneumonia.

There is no specific virtue in the onion, internally or externally. An onion poultice is no more effective than any other kind of poultice, or a mustard plaster, or—best and simplest of all—ordinary hydropathic treatment, in the shape of hot, damp cloths, covered with a dry cloth and frequently changed—half a dozen times a day. The effect of all these applications is the same—to relieve congestion, by drawing the blood to the surface, The warm sitz and foot baths are serviceable; also tepid injections and warm-water drinking.

Here is good advice in regard to the treatment of pneumonia, by Dr. Harnsberger, in the Medical Record:

"I look upon open air in the treatment of pneumonia with the same unbounded confidence that the surgeon looks upon the knife in the treatment of appendicitis—it is the only hope for bad cases, and will certainly save ninety-eight in one hundred if used early and properly in all cases.

"Guided by a distinct perception of the needs of each patient, with open air and good nursing, one need not worry over the contingency of death from pneumonia. The air can't be too fresh, nor its temperature too low. There is no danger of 'taking cold' when the fever is on. The younger the patient, the older the patient, and the more hopeless the case seems, just so much more important it is to enforce open air and exclude artificial heat. Keep the patient's feet warm, but don't heat the air he breathes."

The medical fraternity is slowly and sullenly but surely working around to the nature cure.

Employers and Employed.

COMMENTING upon a recent article in the Care of the Body on "Incompetence a Disease of the Times," a San Jacinto correspondent who says he served a five years' apprenticeship in a shop on the Clyde, studying theory in the evening at a British school of art, asserts that incompetence has grown from the abuse and greed of "captains of industry"—that competent men are often discharged without warning "to create consternation and coercion among the less competent."

A strange idea, this, that sane employers should set aside good tools and substitute poor ones.

The correspondent concludes as follows:

"Man's inhumanity to man 'makes countless thousands mourn.' It creates hopelessness, race suicide, cowardice, bachelors, booze fighters, dope fiends, hobos, and degeneracy. Is it any wonder?

" 'For greed of gold that meanest rage,
" 'And greatest folly of man's sinking age.'

" 'The boy is father to the man.' You cannot boss and bluff and dispirit the boy, and make of him a competent master of his business. The best of life is but intoxication—enthusiasm. Obliterate this and make a disinterested incompetent. Cheerful, kind instruction, firmness of purpose, engendering buoyant independent spirit will make competent moral men.

"My experience has been that it is a pleasure to be employed by men with no political preferment, competent in their line of business. They invariably offer satisfactory remuneration for able men and competent. There you are greeted with a friendly smile, the glad hand and a sympathetic glow pervades the environment. When the day's effort is done, home is reached with a happy heart, feeling you have earned a night's repose. With a gentler feeling between man and management, it would redound to the happiness of all concerned, and the mental health and ease of the careworn mothers and helpless offspring."

Employers have their faults as well as employed, for both are human. Also this is an age of fierce competition, that bears heavily alike on capital and labor—except when capital combines, which is not so easily done as formerly. Even from a selfish standpoint, however, employers will value the services of a man who can do something a little better than the average. The trouble is that nowadays young people, as a rule, do not endeavor to excel by steady persistent effort, but merely to be successful and to make a lucky strike.

Light Wine Versus Whisky.

IN consequence of a powerful argument made before the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives by Andrea Sbarboro of San Francisco the bill prohibiting the shipment of liquor into a prohibition State has been amended so as to exclude from its provisions cider and wine containing not over 13 per cent. alcohol, and "naturally brewed beer."

This, as the editor has said, is a step in the direction of true temperance. Rev. Dr. Parkhurst of New York wrote to Mr. Sbarboro as follows:

"Although I believe in temperance, I try to be temperate in my belief, and to be sufficiently radical not to defeat the ends of my conservatism. I am warmly in sympathy with you in the attitude which you take in regard to wine as a substitute for whisky. Judging from what I see in this country, and from what I know of the condition of things in Europe, which I have visited twenty-five times, I am decidedly of the opinion that the more wine there is produced in this country, and the more freely it is transported from State to State, the less whisky will be used and the smaller the amount of drunkenness. If the proposed bill is passed I earnestly trust that exception will be made of beverages containing less than a certain fixed maximum of alcohol."

* * *

Another Morphine Dream.

ANOTHER new and wonderful morphine cure is announced from New York.

All foolishness—hopelessness. All these so-called "cures" for bad habits are waste of time, hope, opportunity and money. They do not remove the cause. You must first entirely eliminate the poison from the system, by a course of fasting and sweating, and then adopt a diet that will not create a craving for stimulants or narcotics.

That is the only cure for a "habit." There will never be any other. Be sure of that.

* * *

A Lesson for the Microphobists.

IN Illinois melon growers were overrun with field mice. They agreed to stop killing non-poisonous snakes. Now few mice are to be found.

There's a lesson in this for the rat-flea-fly-mosquito-microbe destroying army of political doctors. You can't fool Nature. If you could destroy all these vermin, without removing the filth on which they feed, the human race would be extinguished from off the face of the earth like the snuffing out of a tallow "dip."

A Fortune in Good Hands.

AS mentioned recently in The Times, Miss Philaletha Michelsen, a Los Angeles lawyer, has inherited a fortune from a Danish relative. It has fallen into good hands. Miss Michelsen has made a special study of medical law, and has defended several healers who were prosecuted and persecuted by the medical trust. A few months ago, at the request of the editor, she contributed to the "Care of the Body" an article on the in[illegible] of the California State medical law.

Electricity is Life.

"THERAPEUTICS OF VIBRATION" is the title of a little book of 150 pages, the subhead being "The [illegible] of the Sick and Exact Science." This does not refer to mechanical vibration, but to the vibration of matter. The author is William Lawrence Woodruff, [illegible], of Long Beach. Dr. Woodruff was for a number of years a resident of Phoenix, Ariz. He received some attention from the local press recently when he adopted an infant, which he is raising in a thoroughly hygienic manner, hardening its body so that it will be able to resist disease.

In his preface to this book, Dr. Woodruff declares that we are now just entering the transition period of the Electric Age to the Age of Vibration. He says that vibration will so far surpass electricity in every field as to make it seem ordinary in comparison. With this he believes will come the prevention of disease and the prolongation of life.

Referring to the history of the atomic theory, Dr. Woodruff says: "The atomic theory was first promulgated about 450 years B.C. About the year A.D. 1750 an Italian scientist, Boscovich, presented this theory to the world in so clear a manner that it has become the accepted idea. In contemporary times Dalton has brought it to its present perfection, as follows: 'That matter is composed of indivisible particles or atoms which have definite weight.' Recently Prof. J. J. Thomson, of the Cavendish Laboratories, of Cambridge, England, has supplemented this with the theory of the electron, for which work he was awarded the 1906 Nobel prize of $40,000. . . . Thus we have at last the ultimate unit of which all forms of matter are composed; and the remarkable feature is, that this ultimate unit of which all matter is composed is not matter at all, as we ordinarily understand the term, but electricity. Matter is a pure hypothesis, and energy is the only reality. The electron being a disembodied charge, contains no matter, and is the electrical unit. . . ."

Dr. Woodruff undertakes to explain drug action by its relation to atomic vibration. For the author has not succeeded in quite breaking away from the drug superstition. Like some others who have come half-way out of the house of medical bondage he adheres to the "tissue salt" fallacy. This is simpler and more logical than the regular hit-or-miss drugging practice, for it limits the drugs to the twelve minerals found in the human body. It is, however, merely a modification of [illegible]. It is all in vain, for inorganic mineral cannot be [illegible] by the body, however finely it may be [illegible]. It is therefore either poisonous or inert, [illegible] at the expense of the vitality. Plants feed [illegible]. Human beings must get their food from plants, either directly, or indirectly through flesh foods. This is an exceedingly simple fact, and yet it seems very hard for a great majority of the medical fraternity to grasp it.

Dr. Woodruff claims that electricity is the one and only element in the universe. All minerals, he declares, are electricity, the only difference being in the number of electrons their atoms may contain. Here are some interesting statements in regard to the author's views on health and disease:

"Granting that food, drink and pure air are supplied to the system in sufficient quantities to meet all demands, there must be, in order to properly digest, appropriate and assimilate these various elements, first a normal electronic atomic cell vibration; next, that the normal amount of electric energy may be present; and lastly, but of equal importance, this stored-up electrical energy must be evenly distributed to all the various organs and tissues. . . .

"That 'man is as old as his arteries,' has become a maxim in the medical world. And why the arteries? Because one of the first changes noticed in the average man past middle age takes place in these vessels, and these changes are of such importance to one's physical well-being as to denote his age much more accurately than the years he has lived. To illustrate: I have in mind a girl whom I see almost daily, who has lived not over [illegible] years and yet has the appearance of an old woman in looks, actions and carriage, and whose arteries bear out the above adage. Then, again, on the other hand, a man came into my office the other day the most perfect specimen of robust manhood I ever saw, young-looking, athletic, muscles hard, action nimble. Upon examination I found his arteries those of a young man, organs all sound, mind active. No one would guess his age at over 35 years. He was a full-blooded [illegible] Indian, had served three years in the War of the Rebellion; for the next twenty-five years was a government scout on the frontier, always worked hard, lived on plain food and in the open air. He gave his age as [illegible] years, but yet for all practical intents and purposes, younger by thirty years than the girl mentioned above. He was only as old as his arteries. . . .

"Until very recently we were at sea as to the real basic cause of senile degeneration. We now know that it is due to a slowing-down of atomic cell vibration and nothing else."

The author sets great store on static electricity, which he administers by putting the patient on an insulated platform with bared feet, a strip of lead about two inches wide and ten inches long, along the spine next to the skin and extending above the collar, connecting this with the positive pole of the machine by an insulated cord. Dr. Woodruff declares that by the so-called "high frequency" electric treatments harm is done quite as frequently as good.

The author describes an interesting experiment made in San Francisco to show the existence of electricity in the human body, identical with electrical currents from other sources. In this case the electricity floated over wires, operated electrical instruments and recorded voltage to the amount of eight mille volts.

Dr. Woodruff asserts that sulphur is the negative element of matter, and ozone the negative element of the atmosphere. He calls attention to the fact that the odor of sulphur fumes is identical with that of ozone. Sulphur he regards as one of the most remarkable of substances known to man. As to that mysterious substance, ether, the author says:

"I am fully convinced that when this all-pervading ether is analyzed it will be proven that it is composed wholly and only of disembodied negative electrons. If one will only consider for a moment known phenomena, the possibility and probability of this assertion is made apparent by reasoning from comparison."

Coming down to the subject of disease, what it is, and the causes, the author declares that disease is disturbed function and nothing else. He correctly says:

"In medicine, as in theology, the tendency has been to multiply the mysteries; to befog and confuse with the multiplicity of diseases, until the primal cause has been lost sight of."

Continuing his discussion of the subject, the author goes on to say:

"Abnormal massing of the stored-up electrical or vital force in the region of the principal nerve centers, the brain, spinal cord and solar plexus, abnormal voltage and abnormal atomic cell vibration, either excessive or deficient, is per se, what we know as disease. . . .

"Twenty-five years of chasing the microbe has yielded but little except to increase mysticism and confusion, and make a babel of tongues. Hahnemann, seventy-five years ago, in his thesis on chronic diseases, gave us all and more than has yet been revealed by bacteriological research; indeed, he forestalled every fact so far determined, defining its limitations and indicating their practical application in the relieving of diseased condition. . . . Overtaxing or undue irritation of the stomach is a prolific cause, causing concentration of nerve energy to do the work; this, if long continued, will produce it. Prolonged mental effort is another cause, prolonged physical exertion to the point of exhaustion, especially if followed by overtaxing the stomach, is another cause that produces cerebral localization of the nerve forces to the detriment of the outlying tissues."

The author might have added, further, that the disturbed functioning of disease makes its appearance in congestion, and that this congestion is naturally removed by such means as hot or cold applications, irritation of the skin by mustard, pepper, etc., osteopathy, massage, mechanical vibration, electricity and other similar measures.

The author regards highly electric lights, both arc and incandescent, as great aids in restoring cell vibration. These, he correctly states, are much safer than dry heat or steam baths, thus making them the only ones that should be used if the heart is weak.

As to medicine, the author says "it has served its purpose, has outlived its usefulness, and in fact among a large part of the thinking people of the community, is in disrepute."

Notwithstanding this, the author goes on to enlarge upon the advantages of the "tissue salts" above referred to. It is strange that a man of Dr. Woodruff's evident ability should still hang to this remnant of medical superstition. The editor will be surprised if the doctor does not, before many years, break away from this last outpost of drugging, and come out into the sunshine of rational hygiene.

The author is a great admirer of Hahnemann. Listen to this:

"Was Hahnemann inspired? Yes! Yes! Yes! Directly from the Infinite! In him the all-pervading intelligence found a mind so great, so broad, so deep, so logical, and of such close, acute perception that it was enabled to grasp the thought waves direct from the Infinite, and to formulate them."

Well, the editor is ready to admit that Hahnemann was a benefactor of the human race, in so far that he weaned many away from wholesale drugging, and administered such infinitesimal doses that it practically amounted to nothing but suggestion. If people will insist upon believing that they must "take something" when they are sick, the editor would strongly recommend them to patronize homeopathy, which is quite as effective as "Christian Science"—if you only believe in its efficacy, which is the main thing.

Dr. Woodruff announces that he will follow this book with two others entitled "The Therapeutics of Light Vibration" and "Physical Therapeutics," which will include massage, Swedish movements and "so-called osteopathic manipulation." Why "so-called," doctor?

Electricity is life. Yes. But what is electricity? That's something science can't tell us.

This is an interesting little book, containing much food for thought. The author is evidently a thinker along original lines. It contains two tables showing the electrical properties of various minerals. Published by the J. F. Elwell Publishing Company, 247 South Broadway, Los Angeles. Price $1.50 net.

STUDY OF FISH HISTORY.

OCEAN FISHERIES INEXHAUSTIBLE BY MAN, SAY EUROPEAN INVESTIGATORS.

[Washington Post:] For five years ten steamers belonging to eight different nations whose coasts are washed by the Atlantic, the North Sea, and the Baltic have been engaged in international oceanic research. The purpose has been to make a study of the life history of fishes, with the expectation that it would yield both practical and scientific results of importance.

To learn the life story of fishes the observers found it necessary to study the element in which fishes live, and the influences, such as water temperatures, ocean currents, minute organisms that are the food supply of many fishes, and other things which affect fish life. These scientific workers have now completed a general survey of the most noteworthy features relating to fish life in the seas of North Europe, from the Baltic to the North Sea, thence to Iceland in the west and to Spitzbergen in the north.

Hundreds of thousands of fish and millions of fish eggs have also been collected while studying the wanderings of fish and the mode of their occurrence. It is the purpose here to mention a few of the significant results of the investigation thus far.

It is found that the eggs of most food fishes float in the sea, the herring being an exception. The little eggs, about one-twenty-fourth of an inch in size, develop in a few days or weeks into larvae, only slightly larger; these remain floating, and, after a few weeks, acquire a little of the structure and appearance of the future fish.

For a month or so they remain suspended in the waste of waters, some near the surface and some at considerable depth, and then, if possible, they seek the bottom, where by degrees they attain maturity. A great step forward in the study of fish was the discovery of means to determine their age.

It was found that the otoliths or calcareous secretions in the ear openings of plaice showed age rings similar to those found on the stems of trees and the horns of cattle. So it became possible to tell the age of each individual plaice, and later it was proved that also many of the bones and also the scales show age rings, a fact which now enables the observers to tell with certainty the age of cod, haddock, stithe, herring or sprat, as well as of many other species of fish.

The age of fish up to fourteen or fifteen years is easily ascertained by the scales, but after that time the additional growth is so small as to be of little service. Some of the largest specimens of cod carried proof that they were from sixteen to seventeen years old. It is inferred that many of these cod have spawned from eleven to twelve times in their lives.

Another interesting question is the rate of growth of fish. It is found that the rate at which young cod grow varies according to their surroundings.

In the southern part of the North Sea they grow very rapidly, attaining a length of nearly eight inches in the first year, but in many places along the Norway coast the average size of a year-old cod is only about three inches. Some of the largest cod caught were over forty-six inches in length and more than sixteen years old. The growth of haddock is about four inches the first year, but the rate decreases as they approach the higher ages.

A very important part of the work was the investigation of the haunts and wanderings of fish. The study was carried on chiefly by marking thousands of fish by means of small wires. There are buttons at each end of the wires, and the time and place of turning each fish loose is marked on the buttons.

It was found that the larvae of the eel are met only in the deep portion of the Atlantic, and far-reaching conclusions were reached from this fact as to the wanderings of the full-grown eel and its young. The general law was deduced from the astonishing wanderings of many fish species that they can never be seriously affected by merely local conditions.

The observers believe they have proved that the growth and productiveness of fish is subject to such mighty natural influences, such as climatic changes in the various regions which they frequent, that they may be regarded as independent of the interference or the fisheries of man. It is certain that man has considerably reduced the number of plaice, haddock, and cod, in some waters, but not to such an extent as to have more than a temporary effect upon fishing interests. Man cannot exterminate them.

The work will probably be continued for years to come, and the international committee which is directing it has no doubt that other splendid discoveries of both practical and theoretical interest will be the outcome.

LILACS.

When first the green o' the year is shown
  On the mantling trees and the meadows lush,
When the wild winds lose their wavering moan
  And over the prairie there falls a hush,
In the buoyant days of the budding spring,
When the robins nest and the pee-wees sing,
    By garden ways
    The lilac sways
On its slender stem, a gracious queen
In the midst of a world of tremulous green.

The pale pink blossoms in tufted whorls
  Bend low in the light airs floating by—
The brilliant banner that May unfurls
  To the delicate blue of the gracious sky;
The dull earth brightens, the glistening dews
Diamond the lawn's light emerald hues,
    There's a softer spell
    Where the toilers dwell,
When the lilacs herald the colors that gleam
Through the gay mirage of the summer's dream.
